SAMĀDHĪ. The state when the soul (ātmā) and the mind become one. When the soul and the mind mingle with each other as salt and water, it is Samādhī (contemplation). (For more details see under Yoga.)

SAMĀDHICETTI. A Vaiśya who became learned and abstemious by the grace of Devī. The story of this Vaiśya, who ran away from the cruel and wicked treatment that he had suffered from his wife and children, and took to spiritual knowledge by the force of circumstances was told to Janamejaya by Vyāsa. After telling several stories about the kind regard of Devī towards those who worship her with devotion, Vyāsa continued as follows:—

During the time of Svārociṣa Manu, there lived a King named Suratha. Because of his liberality and truthfulness he had very few enemies. While he was ruling over the kingdom known as Kolāpura, once the low caste people of the mountains fought a battle with the King. Though the army of the low castes was small it was the King who sustained defeat. He returned to the palace thoughtful. He had no peace of mind. So he went to the forest to get peace. After travelling for a long time on horse-back, he reached the hermitage of the sage Sumedhas. Forgetting himself in the peaceful stillness of the hermitage, the King got down from the horse and sat under a tree. The hermit Sumedhas came there and talked with the King. The King told his story to the hermit, who invited the King to live with him. Thus the King lived in the hermitage eating fruits, roots etc.

The King found it difficult to reconcile himself with the purity and simplicity of the hermit's surroundings. He always thought of his wife and children. He was troubled in mind by thinking that the money kept in the treasury would be wasted by others. Thus thinking about many things, with a troubled mind, the King was sitting under a tree near the hermitage once when he saw another man coming towards him, with a troubled mind like himself. They talked with each other. The new-comer said to the King “I am a Vaiśya. My name is Samādhisceṭṭi. My wife and children love wealth. They want to take possession of my wealth and to waste it. But I was against it. I did not favour unnecessary expenditure. They resolved to remove the obstacle from their path, and began to make preparation for it secretly. I understood it and fearing death I ran away from the house.”

As soon as the king heard this story he said his own story to the Vaiśya. The Vaiśya continued. “Oh! Still, my mind is troubled. I am worried about my wife and children. They will be put to much difficulty if I am not there to look after them. Who is there to support them without me? All the children are lean. My wife also is likewise, lean. They are all always ill. What will they do without me? While I think of all these things I have no peace of mind at all.”

Suratha: “What a fool are you! You yourself have said that all your children are wicked and cruel. Moreover they and their mother joining together had been trying to murder you. Why do you feel so miserable about such a wife and children?”

When the King had finished saying thus much, Sumedhas came there. To remove the darkness of illusion from their minds, the hermit taught them the Nine-lettered Mantra (spell) with prayer and meditation. Thus giving them the mantra, the teacher hermit advised them to go to the bank of the river and select a suitable place and worship Devī with devotion and concentration of mind. Accordingly they went to the bank of the river and selected a pure and solitary place, and concentrating their minds on Devī, began to meditate and worship her taking only very little food. Thus engaged in deep meditation they spent two years. One day in a dream Devī appeared to them. She was clad in red clothes, and wore beautiful ornaments. They were full of joy on seeing the goddess. The third year of the penance was over. But Devī did not appear directly before them. In the third year they took only water. They finished the fourth year without seeing the goddess. They decided to do severe penance. Their intention was to offer their bodies to Devī. So they made a triangular cavity, with three parts each having an extension of 1½ ft. and made the walls of the cavity firm and kindled a large fire in it. The King and the Vaiśya began to cut pieces of flesh from their bodies and offered to Devī in the fire, and with the blood coming from the body they performed sacrifice to Devī. Instantly Devī appeared before them and asked them what boon they wanted. The King wanted to get his kingdom back. Devī said. “You return home. Your enemies shall leave the kingdom. Your ministers will fall at your feet and beg your pardon. You can rule over your country for ten thousand years. After that you will take rebirth as Sāvarṇi Manu, the son of the Sun.”

What Samāḍhi Cetti wished was a life of self-renunciation. Devī gave him the wisdom and knowledge to renounce everything he had and to live a life of complete abstinence. Then Devī disappeared. The King returned to his kingdom and resumed his rule. Cetti renounced everything and wandered about immersed in meditation on Devī. (Devī Bhāgavata, Skandha 5).

SĀMAGA (S). A particular line of disciples of Vyāsa. (See under Guruparamarāśi).

SAMĀNGA I. A cowherd who had been looking after the cattle of Duryodhana. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 289, Verse 2).

SAMĀNGA II. An ancient hermit. Once this hermit talked to Nārada, about his comfortable life. (M.B. Sānti Parva, Chapter 283, Verse 5).

SAMĀNGA III. A river. Because Aṣṭāvakra bathed in this river, his bents were straightened. (See under Aṣṭāvakra).

SAMĀNGA IV. A country in South India. Mention is made about this country in Mahābhārata, Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 9, Verse 60.

SAMANTARA. A country in India. Mention is made about this country in Mahābhārata, Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 9, Verse 50.

SAMANTAPAṆÇAKA. A holy tirthā (bath) founded by Parā urāma.

1) General information. See under Paraśurāma, Para 7.
2) Other details.
(i) Paraśurāma made here five rivers through which blood flowed. There, with hands dipped in blood, he offered oblations to the manes. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 2, Verse 4).
(ii) By the blessings of the ancestors of Paraśurāma this place became a holy bath. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 2, Verse 8).
(iii) At the ending and the beginning periods of the two yugas Dvāpara and Kali, the Kauravas and the Pāṇḍavas fought the great battle at this place. Because of that this place got the name Samantapāñcaka. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 2, Verse 13).
(iv) It was according to the advice of Balabhadrārāma that this place was selected as the battlefield. (Sālā Parva, Chapter 55, Verse 5).
(v) Duryodhana was killed at Samantapāñcaka. (Sālā Parva, Chapter 89, Verse 40).

SAMARA

One of the hundred sons of Pṛthuseṇa, a King of the Bharata dynasty. (Bhāgavata, Skandha 9).

SAMARATHA. A brother of King Viśā. He was a prominent helper of the Pāṇḍavas in the Bhārata battle. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 158, Verse 42).

SAMASURABHA. A Brahmin who was well-versed in the Vedas and the Vaiḍāṅgas. Mention is made in Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 53, Stanza 9, that he was a guest at the snake-sacrifice of Janamejaya.

SAMATHA. A learned brahmin. He once gave Yudhiṣṭhira a description of the yajña performed by King Gaya, son of Amārtaraya. (Vana Parva, Chapter 95, Verse 17).

SĀMAVEDA. See under Veda.

SAMAVEGAVĀSA. A country of South India. (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 9, Verse 16).

SAMAYAPĀLANAPARVA. A sub-section of Viśā Parva, consisting of Chapter 13 of Viśā Parva.

SĀMA I. The son born to Śrī Kṛṣṇa by his wife Jāmbavati.

1) Birth. A story about the birth of Sāmba, occurs in Devī Bhāgavata, Skandha 4, as follows:

Children were born to Rukmiṇī and the other wives of Śrī Kṛṣṇa. But Jāmbavati alone did not give birth to children. Jāmbavati was filled with sadness when she saw the children of her co-wives. One day she went to the presence of Kṛṣṇa and requested him to give her a son like Pradyumna. Hearing this, Śrī Kṛṣṇa went to the mountain where the hermit Upāmanu did penance and making the hermit his teacher, according to his advice, did penance before Paramāṣiva. He did penance for the period of a month holding a skull and a hermit’s rod. He did penance in the second month, standing only on one leg and drinking water alone. In the third month Kṛṣṇa did penance standing on the toes using only air as food. When the penance was continued for six months in this state, Paramāṣiva appeared as Sāmba (Ardhanārīśvara) and asked what boon he wanted. Śrī Kṛṣṇa expressed his wish. Siva said that Jāmbavati would get a son. Soon Jāmbavati gave birth to a son. The child was named Sāmba.

2) Marriage. Sāmba married Lakṣāṇa the beautiful daughter of Duryodhana. Hearing about the Svayamvara marriage of Lakṣāṇa, Sāmba went to Hastināpura and took her by force from among the various Kings who were present there. Duryodhana and the others captured him. This news reached Dvārakā through Nārada. Śrī Kṛṣṇa and Balabhadrārāma went to Hastināpura and rescued Sāmba and took the bride and the bridegroom to Dvārakā. Ten sons beginning with Sumitra were born to Sāmba by his wife Lakṣāṇa. (Bhāgavata, Skandha 10).

3) Prabhāvatī abducted. Prabhāvatī was the daughter of Vrajānābha, the King of Supuranagaṛi. Sāmba, with his brother Pradyumna entered the city Supura in the guise of drama-actors with a view to kidnap the beautiful daughter of Vrajānābha. They produced four performances such as ‘Rambhābhīśara’ and three other dramas and earned the praise of everybody in Supura. In this way they got access to the palace of the King, and when the time suited, they took away Prabhāvatī to Dvārakā. (Harivānśa, 2:93).

4) The delivery of an iron rod. Once some Yādavas with Sāmba at their head abused Kaśyapa and some other hermits who came to Dvārakā. They cursed the Yādavas, in consequence of which Sāmba gave birth to an iron pestle, which caused the extermination of the Yādavas. (See under Kṛṣṇa, Para 39, Sub Para 2).

5) The curse of Śrī Kṛṣṇa. Sāmba was extremely handsome, and even the wives of Śrī Kṛṣṇa fell in love with him. Under the circumstances Sāmba tended to become wicked. Śrī Kṛṣṇa came to know of the unnatural attachment between his wife and Sāmba, from Nārada and cursed Sāmba that he would become a leper, and cursed his own wives, that they would be carried away by thieves and plunderers. Accordingly Sāmba became a leper and the wives of Śrī Kṛṣṇa were carried away by the Abhiras, after the submerging of Dvārakā.

After a few years, according to the advice of Nārada, Sāmba began to worship the Sun, at a place called Sāmbapa in the basin of the river Candrabhāgā, to get recovery from leprosy. A brahmin also was brought from Suka (Kuṣa) island to perform the fast and vow correctly. (Sāmba 3; Bhaviṣya Purāṇa, Brāhma Parva, 66:72; 73:126; Skanda Purāṇa 4. 2. 48; 6. 213).

6) Other details.

(i) Sāmba was present at the Svayamvara marriage of Draupadi. (M.B. Chapter 185, Verse 17).

(ii) Among the Yādavas, who brought the dowry, when Arjuna married Subhadra there was Sāmba also. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 220, Verse 31).

(iii) Sāmba learned archery from Arjuna. After this he was a member of the court of Yudhiṣṭhira. (M.B. Sābha Parva, Chapter 4, Verse 34).

(iv) Sāmba was one of the seven great chariot-fighters of Dvārakā. (M.B. Sābha Parva, Chapter 14, Verse 57).

(v) Sāmba was present at the Rājasūya (royal consecration-sacrifice) of Yudhiṣṭhira. (M.B. Sābha Parva, Chapter 34, Verse 16).

(vi) Sāmba was defeated in the battle he fought with Kṣemavṛddhi the minister of Śīla. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 16, Verse 80).

(vii) Sāmba killed the asura Vegavān in a battle. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 16, Verse 17).

(viii) Sāmba participated in the marriage of Abhimanyu conducted at the city Upāplavya. (M.B. Virāṭa Parva, Chapter 72, Verse 22).

(ix) Sāmba came with Śrī Kṛṣṇa to Hastināpura and took part in the Rājasūya of Yudhiṣṭhira. (M.B. Aśvamedhika Parva, Chapter 66, Verse 3).
(x) When the Yādavas died by hitting one another with the iron pestle, Sāṃbara also was killed. (M.B. Mausala Parva, Chapter 3, Verse 44).
(xi) After his death, Sāṃbara entered the group of Viśvadevas. (M.B. Svargārohana Parva, Chapter 5, Verse 16).

SĀMBA I. A Brahmin scholar. When Dhṛtarāṣṭra started for the forest towards the close of his life, the people bade him farewell. This Brahmin stood among the people and spoke words of consolation. (M.B. Āramavāśīka Parva, Chapter 10, Verse 13).

SĀMBA II. An asura.
1) General. Various Purāṇas refer to this leader of the asuras as having played a prominent part in the devāsura war. After many such wars he was killed by Śiva.
2) Šāmbara's magic power. He possessed marvellous magic powers. Once while fighting with him, the Devas were non-plussed by his magical powers, and they hid themselves in a forest. Sāṃbara was pleased and he roamed about freely without any fear and burnt the palaces of the protectors of the world. The Devas left their homes and disappeared in disguise. The Devas began killing those whom Šāmbara had appointed as army-chief-tains. To counter this attack by the Devas, he created three powerful asuras by his powers of magic. The three asuras called Dana, Vyāla and Gaṭa began killing the warriors of the Devas, and the Devas told Brahmarā at Satyaloka about the depredations of the asura. Brahmarā encouraged them for further fighting, and the three asuras were killed and Šāmbara ran away and hid himself. (Jānava śiśtha Sthiti prakaraṇaṃ).
3) Šāmbara in Rgveda. There are various references to Šāmbara in the Rgveda. He was King of the Dasyus. He had mastery over hundred cities. The forts and trenches in those cities were very strong. The forts are referred to as Aśvamayī, Āyaśi, Satabhujī etc. in the Rgveda. The chief enemies of the Aryans were the race of people called Paṇīs in the city. There is a hint about the killing of Šāmbara in Sūkta 17, Anuvāka 8, Māndala 1 of the Rgveda.
4) Other information.
(i) Šāmbara was Kaśyapaprāja-pratī's son by his wife Danu.
(ii) Daśaratha had, at the request of the Devas defeated Šāmbara in a war fought in Devaloka. (See under Daśaratha, Para 5).
(iii) Indra, on another occasion, defeated Šāmbara. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 137, Verse 43).

SĀMBA II. An asura.
He was the son of Hiranyākṣa and brother of Sakuni, Dvimūrdhā, Saṅku and Ārya. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 17). Šāmbara, who was a great adept in magic, was killed in the company of his wife Māya-vāi, by Pradyumna, the son of Śri Kṛṣṇa. (See under Pradyumna).

SAMBHALA (ŚAMBHALA, ŚAMBHALA). A village famed in the Purāṇas. According to Mahābhārata Mahāviśvēṣu will incarnate as Kalki in this village. (For details see under Kalki).

SAMBHAVA. A King of the Pūru dynasty, son of Īrjā and father of Jārāsandha. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 278).

SAMBHAPARVA. A Sub-Parva of Ādi Parva (Chapters 63-139).

SĀMBHU I. Dhrūva's wife. The couple had two sons called Śiśi and Bhayeva. (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Part 1, Chapter 13).

SĀMBHU II. Grandson of Vraṭa, son of Kaśyapa by Surabhi. Vraṭa had a son called Viśvārūpā who begot fourteen sons of whom Hara, Bahlurūpa, Tryambaka, Aparājita, Vṛṣaṅkapi, Sāmbhu, Kapardi, Raivata, Mrgavyāda, Sarpa and Kapāli these eleven sons of Viśvārūpā form the Ekādaśa-ardras. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 18).

SĀMBHU III. One of the three sons of Ambariṣa, the other two being Viṭūpa and Kṛtmān. (Bhāgavata, 9th Skandha). Sāmbhu never tasted meat in his life. (Aṇuśāsana Parva, Chapter 115, Verse 65).

SĀMBHU IV. A Rāksa, the son of Vidyujjihva by Śūrpanākhā. Sāmbhu, who was engaged in taps in Daṇḍaka forest when Śrī Rāma visited the forest was attracted by the beauty of Śītā and transformed himself into a tree to enjoy her beauty with his eyes. Lākṣmana, who was leaving down trees to build an āśrama felled this tree also, which disappeared immediately leaving behind the dead body of a Rāksa. It was the corpse of the Rāksa and Lāma comforted Śītā and Lākṣmana by revealing the fact to them. (Kamba Rāmāyaṇa, Aranyakāṇḍa).

Uttara Rāmāyaṇa contains a story of how Devasvati (or Vedavati) daughter of Kuṣadēvajā once cursed Sāmbhu. Devasvati was born from the mouth of Kuṣadēvajā (son of Bṛhaspati) while he was learning the Vedas. Sāmbhu wanted to marry the child when she was grown up, but Kuṣadēvajā did not consent to it, and Sāmbhu, in retaliation, killed Kuṣadēvajā in his sleep. Next morning Devasvati awoke from sleep to see the dead body of her father. She cursed Sāmbhu. Her curse was a contributory cause for the death of Sāmbhu by Lākṣmana.

SĀMBHU V. An āgni, which occupies a status equal to that of a brahmin well-versed in the Vedas. (Vana Parva, Chapter 221, Verse 5).

SĀMBHU VI. A son born to Śrī Kṛṣṇa by Rukmiṇidēvi. (Aṇuśāsana Parva, Chapter 14, Verse 33).

SĀMBHU VII. A King of the Bharata dynasty. He was one of the eighty sons of Ugrasena. (Bhāgavata, 9th Skandha).

SAMBHUTA. A King, son of Trasadasyu and father of Anaranya. (Vāyu Purāṇa, Chapter 88, Verses 74-75).

SAMBHUTI I. Wife of Marici, son of Brahmā. The couple had a son called Paurnāmaśa. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 20).

SAMBHUTI II. Wife of Jayadratha. The couple had a son called Vijaya. (Bhāgavata, Skandha 9).

SAMBUKA. A Śūdra muni. During the reign of Śrī Rāma a great number of children died in the country and many parents wept before the king about the loss of their offsprings. According to Vasiṣṭha's advice Rāma enquired whether anybody indulged in actions not proper to his station in life. Śrī Rāma surveyed the country from the air in a Vīmaṇa, and during the survey he found Šambuka, the śūdra muni hanging with his head down and inhaling smoke from a fire lit under him. Thus, having found out that the tapas by that śūdra was the reason for the children's death, Rāma killed Sambūka immediately. (Kamba Rāmāyaṇa, Uttarakāṇḍa).

SAMĒDI. An attendant of Subrahmanya. (M.B. Salya Parva, Chapter 46, Verse 13).

SAMGATA (SANGATA). A King of the Maurya dynasty. He was the son of King Suyaśas and the father of King Śālīśūraka. (Bhāgavata, Skandaḥa 12).

SAMGAVA (SANGAVA). The supervisor of the cattle-shed of Duryodhana. It is stated in Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 228 that this Sangava helped Duryodhana in the fight which ensued at the time of the great procession conducted by the Kauravas, to the Pāṇḍavas in the forest.

SAMGHAM (SANGHAM). An organisation formed in olden days for the cultivation of Śentamil (classical Tamil) literature, which took its origin in south Drāviḍa land in the 4th century B.C. The Pāṇḍyanas set up three Sanghams for the promotion of this literature, the first one in southern Madura. When the city was swept by erosion of the sea they set up the second Sangham at Kāpāṭapura. When Kāpāṭapura also was destroyed by the sea, the third Sangham was founded in Drāviḍa Madura. The first Sangham was called Mutarcān̄kam, the second Itaicecān̄kam and the third one Kataicecān̄kam. Reliable information about the first two Sanghams is not available. But, there are reasons to believe that a Sangham called Kataicecān̄kam flourished for about six hundred years from 2nd century B.C. to the close of the 4th century A.D. (History of Kerala Literature by Ullūr, Part 1, Page 47).

The Pāṇḍyan King had built at Madura a hall (maṇḍapa) for the poets and scholars of the third Sangham to assemble together to produce their works. Even to this day there exists a temple called Saṅghattārkoṇi at the south-western corner of the outer sector of the Sundareśvara temple. There the idols of Sarasvatī and of the forty nine poets of the Saṅgham are being worshipped even today. The growth and influence of the Buddhist and the Jain religions and also that of the Pallava royal dynasty, contributed to the downfall of the Saṅgham. The Saṅgham poets had written many excellent books. According to legends, Agastya is a text on grammar of the first Saṅgham and Tolkāpyam of the second Saṅgham. There were authoritative text books on music written by the last poets of the Saṅgham. But, none of these books has been unearthed yet. Again, references are found to dramas like Muraumal, Jayantam, etc. They too have not yet been found out. Five mahākāvyas (Epic poems) and five short ākāvyas also belong to Saṅgham works. Puranānūra, Akanānūra, Patituppatatu, Aini kurunūra, Kalittokai, Kuruntokai, Paripātai and Naṭṭinai are included in the Saṅgham work called Eṭṭuttokai. Most of them are collections of many compositions. The authorship of the four hundred songs in Puranānūra is distributed among nearly 160 poets. Aini Kurunūra contains five hundred songs by five poets. These five hundred songs were collected by the scholar, Kātaḷūr kizhār, on the orders of the Cera King, Ceralirumposhzhai. Patitijjappattu is a collection of songs composed by ten poets in praise of the Cera Kings. But, only eight of these from two to nine are available yet. Patitippuṭṭu comprised of the following works like Tirumurukkuttippaiṭṭu, etc. Tirukkural, Nālatiyar etc. are among the eighteen works under the name Patitinekkiṭṭkuṇākku, Čilappadikāram, Maṇimekhalai, Jivakācintāmaṇi, Kundalakeshī and Valaiyāṭṭi are the five great ākāvyas and Nilakeshī, Čudāmaṇi, Yāsodākāvyam, Nāgakumāra-Kāvyam and Udayakumārakāvyam (Udayanāṅkaiṭṭu) are the five short (laghu) ākāvyas. Amongst the above ākāvyas Maṇimekhalai and Kundalakeshī are Buddhist ākāvyas and Čintāmaṇi and the five short ākāvyas are Jain works. The last seven books might have been written after the Saṅgham period. Tiruttakatevar, author of Čintāmaṇi, lived in eighth century A.D. Some of the songs in Puranānūra are the oldest among the works of the Saṅgham period. References to Cera Kings are found in many of these works.

SAMGRAHA. One of the two attendants given to Subrahmanya by the sea, the other being Vikrama. (Salya Parva, Chapter 45; Verse 37).

SAMYU II. An ācārīya. He is believed to have a special method of performing yājñas. (Satapathabrahmaṇa).

SANAKĀDI (S). Sanaka, Sanandana, Sanātana and Sanatkumāra, the four Sages.

The Sanakādis are the mental sons of Brahmac. When they stood in the form of infants they were asked to create subjects. But they were the incarnation of Sattva, the attribute of purity, and so were not prepared to undertake creation. Even at the age of four or five the four of them learned the Vedas, and travelled together. They were celibates for ever. While the Sanakādis were travelling one day they reached Vaikuṇṭha, and cursed Jaya and Vijaya who showed disrespect towards them. (See under Jayavijaya).

It is mentioned in some places that the Sanakādis were the incarnations of portions of Mahāviśnu. Once Brahmac praised the incarnations of Viṣṇu. It is clear that the Kumāras (Sanakādis) had taken incarnation before the present Brahmac began the work of creation. (Devi Bhāgavata, Skandha 1; Skandha 7; Bhāgavata, Skanda 7, Bhaviṣya Purāṇa).

SANANDANA I. A hermit who was one of the Sanakādis.

SANANDANA II. A disciple of Śaṅkarācārya. (For further details see under Śaṅkarācārya, Para 6).

SANATANA I. A hermit. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Sabhā Parva, Chapter 4, Stanza 16, that this hermit shone in the court of Yudhishthira.

SANATANA II. One of the Sanakādis.

SANATKUMĀRA. One of the Sanakādis.

SANATSUJĀTA. A Sāṃskrit name of Sanatkumāra, who is one of the four Sanakādis. (See under Sanatkumāra).

SANATSUJĀTA PARVA. A sub-section of Udyoga Parva in Mahābhārata, Chapters 42 to 46.

SANĀCĀRAKA. A warrior of Subrahmathya. (Śalya Parva, Chapter 45, Verse 74).

SANDAMŚA. A hell. (See under Kāla).

SANDHAMARKA. The two āśvins called Śaṅgha and Marka, who were priests of the asuras and whose presence made them invincible. The Devas enticed the two priests to their side by offering them Soma and thus rendered the asuras powerless. When the Devas after some time, began a yājña, Śaṅgha and Marka approached them for the promised Soma, but the Devas did not keep their word, and the disillusioned Śaṅghamarkas were driven out of the yājña hall. (Taittiriyasamhitā, 6, 4, 10).

SANDHANAKARANI. (See under Mṛtasanjivani).

SANDHYĀ I. The previous birth of Arundhati, wife of Vasiṣṭha. (For more details see under Vasiṣṭha Parva I, Sub-Section 1).

SANDHYĀ II. Mother of the giantess Śālakaṭaṅka. It is stated in Uttarā Rāmāyaṇa that this Śālakaṭaṅka, the daughter of Sandhyā was married by the giant Vidyutkeśa.

SANDHYĀ III. Time of union or conjunction. There are three Sandhyās in a day. These are morning sandhyā (Prātahṣandhyā), noon sandhyā (Madhyāhna sandhyā) and evening sandhyā (Śaṃyam Sandhyā). The meeting time of night and day, is morning Sandhyā, the joining time of the first half and the second half of the day, is noon (Madhyāhna Sandhyā), and the joining time of day and night, is evening Sandhyā (Śaṃyam Sandhyā). Brahmins should keep the three Sandhyās properly. The morning sandhyā is of three kinds. Good, Medium and Bad. When the morning stars are seen and the sunrise is approaching it is good morning; when the stars are not seen and the sun is not risen it is medium sandhyā and the morning time after the sunrise is bad Sandhyā. In śaṃyānsandhyā also there is this difference of time, as good, medium and bad. The time till the sunset is good; the time after the sunset and before the rising of the stars is medium and the evening after the rising of the stars is bad. In the Vedas it is metaphorically mentioned that Brahmins are trees, and the three sandhyās are their roots, the Vedas, their branches and the rites and rituals ordained in the Vedas their leaves. From this it is clear that Brahmins should on no account leave unobserved, worships at these three sandhyās. The Brahmin who does not observe these three sandhyās carefully will, in his lifetime, become a fadora and after the death, will be born again as a dog. Moreover the Brahmin who does not do the three evening, morning and noon worships, will have no right to conduct any other Vedic rites. After the sun-rise and sun-set, within three nāzhikas (a nāzhika-24 minutes) the morning and evening worship should be finished. There is atonement ordered for morning and evening prayers conducted after the stipulated time. (Devi Bhāgavata, Skandha 11).

SANDHYĀ IV. A holy river who worships Varuṇa in his assembly. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 9, Verse 23).

SANDHYĀ V. The presiding Devatā of dusk. She is called Pratīcyādevī as well. (Udyoga Parva, Chapter 117, Verse 16).

SANDHYĀKARANANDI. A Sāṃskrit poet who lived in the 12th century A.D. A poetic work of this author is “Rāmapālacarita”. This book is about the king Rāmapāla, who ruled over Bengal at the end of 11th century A.D.

SANDHYĀRĀGA. The red colour seen in the sky in the evening is Sandhyārāga. Rāgini the daughter of Himavān did penance to obtain Parāmaśiva as husband. The Devas took her before Bṛahmā, who said that she was not able to bear the radiance of Śiva. Hearing this opinion Rāgini got angry and Bṛahmā cursed her and changed her into Sandhyārāga. (See under Pārvatī).

SANDHYĀVALI. Sandhyāvali was the wife of King Rukmāṅgada. (See under Dharmaśāstra).

SANDI LI I. A daughter of Dakṣa. She was married by Dharmadeva and a Vasu called Anala was born to the couple. (Adi Parva, Chapter 67, Verse 17).

SANDI LI II. A yogini famed in the Pūrāṇas. She once cursed Garuḍa as a result of which he lost his feathers. (For details see under Garuḍa).

SANDI LI III. A very chaste Devi living in Devaloka. She once taught Sumanā, the Kekaṇya princess the duties of a chaste woman. (Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 123, Verse 8).

SANDILYA I. A great mahārṣī. Some details about him are given hereunder:
1) King Satānīka and his wife Viśnumati, who had no issues approached the mahārṣī in great sorrow. As a result of eating rice given by the mahārṣī Viśnumati became the mother of a son, who became in later years famous as emperor Sahāraṇīka. (Kathāsaritsāgara, Kathāmukalambaka, Tārāṅga 1).
2) A member of Yudhiṣṭhīra’s court. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 4, Verse 17).
3) He had an ascetic daughter. (Śalya Parva, Chapter 54, Verse 5).
4) He once opined that the gift of a mere ox-cart was equal to the gift of water in a golden pot. (Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 65, Verse 19).
5) He visited Bṛihṣma on his bed of arrows. (Śanti Parva, Chapter 47, Verse 6).
6) King Sumanyu once gave the mahārṣī plenty of food materials. (Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 173, Verse 22).

SANDILYA II. A mahārṣī born in the dynasty of Kaśyapa, son of Marīci. As Agni was born in the family of the mahārṣī it came to be called ‘Sāndilya-gotriya’ (born in the family of Sāndilya). King Sumanyu once gave him food and other edible things. (Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 137, Verse 22).

SANDILYA III. A King, a great devotee of Śiva. As a youth he became a philanderer with the result that the honour of women was in jeopardy. The King being a devotee of Śiva even Yama could not punish him. At last, when Śiva came to know of the immorality of his devotee he cursed the King to be turned into a tortoise for thousand years.

SANDILYA IV. A mahārṣī, who desired to worship Viṣṇu not in the Vedic method for which purpose he even wrote a book to propagate non-vedic principles. For the above sinful action he had to live in hell and at last he was born as Jamadagni of the Bṛihrgu dynasty. (Vṛddhahāritisṛṃti, 180, 193).

SANDILYA V. A mahārṣī whose Bhaktisūtras (Aphorisms on devotion) are as famous as those of Nārada. He taught bhakti in a scientific way (by Sāndilya science).

SÅNDIPANI. Preceptor of Śrī Kṛṣṇa and Balabhadrā Rāma from whom they learned all the Vedas, art of drawing, astronomy, gāndhārva Veda, medicine, training elephants and horses and archery. (For details see under Kṛṣṇa, Para 12).

SÅNI (SÅNÅŚÇARA-SÅRÜNT). A) General. Śani is the son of Sūrya by Chāyā, the maid-servant of Śrīnāṭhā. Sūrya had three sons by Chāyā, Manu, Tapati and Śani. (See under Chāyā). B) Other information.
1) Śani worships Bṛahmā in Brahmāsabhā. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 11, Verse 29).
2) Śani is very effulgent and intense in his form and character. When Śani threatens the star Rohiṇī, great disasters occur on earth. (Udyoga Parva, Chapter 143, Verse 8).
3) Śani will incarnate as Manu in the coming Yuga. (Śanti Parva, Chapter 349, Verse 55).
4) Śani is one of the planets to be daily worshipped. (Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 163, Verse 17).
5) In the battle between Śiva and Tripūra, Śani mounted in a chariot clashed with Narākāsura. (Bhāgavata, 6th Ikāndha).

SÅNJÅYA I. A country in south India famous in the Pūrāṇas. Mention is made about this country in Mahābhārata, Bṛihṣma Parva, Chapter 9, Verse 63.

SÅNJÅYA I. Minister of Dṛṇārāṣṭra.
1) Birth. Śaṇjāya, who was equal to a hermit, was born as the son of Śūta from a portion of Gavālgaṇa. (Adi Parva, Chapter 68, Verse 93).
2) The boon of Śaṇjāya. Śaṇjāya who was born within the circle of the friends of the Kauravas, became the minister of Dṛṇārāṣṭra. The great work that Śaṇjāya did in Mahābhārata was, telling Dṛṇārāṣṭra every thing that was taking place in the battle-field without leaving even the smallest events in the order of their occurrence. Śaṇjāya was able to do this because of the boon granted by Vyāsa.

When the armies of the Kauravas and the Pāṇḍavas pitched their camps on either side of the battlefield, Vēdavāyāsa came to Hastināpura and saw Dṛṇārāṣṭra. Dṛṇārāṣṭra heard about the preparations on either side for the battle. He did not like to go to the battle-field and see for himself the events of the battle. He said so to Vyāsa. Then Vyāsa called Śaṇjāya to him and said “Śaṇjāya shall see all the events of the battle directly. He shall have such a divine inward eye.” Vyāsa continued. “O king! Śaṇjāya has inward eyes. He will tell you everything about the battle. He will be knowing all. Whenever he thinks of it he will see everything that takes place in the day and in the night in open, and in secret. No weapon will cut him and no weariness will affect him. He is the son of Gavālgaṇa and will come away unhurt from the battle.”

Because of this blessing Śaṇjāya used to inform Dṛṇārāṣṭra of all the events in the battle at the time of the occurrence. Śaṇjāya informed Dṛṇārāṣṭra of the news up to the death of Duryodhana. When Duryodhana was killed the cry of Aśvatthāmārā became louder. Śaṇjāya who heard this cry early in the morning, ran to the battlefield with a broken heart. With the death of Duryodhana the boon of inward eye given to Śaṇjāya by Vyāsa was lost. (M.B. Bhṛihṣma Parva, Chapter 2; Saupitka Parva, Chapter 9).
3) Other details.

(i) Sañjaya stood as the host in the Rājasūya sacrifice of Yudhishthira, and received the guests and showed them hospitality. (M.B. Sabhā Parva, Chapter 35, Verse 6).

(ii) When the Pāṇḍavas were defeated in the game of dice and were sent to the forest Sañjaya came to Dhṛtarāṣṭra and reviled him. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 81, Verse 5).

(iii) Vidura got angry because the Pāṇḍavas were sent to live in the forest, and leaving the Kauravas he also went to the forest. Knowing that Vidura was in the Kāmyaka forest, Dhṛtarāṣṭra sent Sañjaya and brought Vidura back. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 6, Verse 5).

(iv) Śrī Kṛṣṇa and the others vowed at the Kāmyaka-vana to kill Duryodhana. Sañjaya gave Dhṛtarāṣṭra a detailed description of that vow. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 51, Verse 15).

(v) Dhṛtarāṣṭra sent Sañjaya to learn about the welfare of the Pāṇḍavas who had returned after completing the forest life and Pseudonymity. (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 23, Verse 1).

(vi) Sañjaya went to the court of the Pāṇḍavas and gave the message of Dhṛtarāṣṭra to them. (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 25).

(vii) Sañjaya who had returned from the court of the Pāṇḍavas, informed Dhṛtarāṣṭra of the news and reproached him much. (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 32, Verse 11).

(viii) Sañjaya repeated the message of Arjuna in the court of the Kauravas. (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 48).

(ix) Sañjaya told Dhṛtarāṣṭra, who the prominent helpers of Yudhishthira, were. (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 50).

(x) Sañjaya advised Dhṛtarāṣṭra to put Duryodhana under control. (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 54).

(xi) Sañjaya gave Duryodhana a description of the horses and the chariots of the Pāṇḍavas. (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 56, Verse 7).

(xii) Sañjaya repeated the message of Arjuna to Dhṛtarāṣṭra. (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 66).

(xiii) Sañjaya described to Dhṛtarāṣṭra the greatness of Śrī Kṛṣṇa. (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapters 68-70).

(xiv) Sañjaya told Dhṛtarāṣṭra the fact that the Pāṇḍavas and the Kauravas had pitched their tents in the battlefield of Kurukṣetra. (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 159, Verse 8).

(xv) At this time Vyāsa came there and gave Sañjaya the boon that he would see directly every thing that took place in the battlefield and would inform Dhṛtarāṣṭra. (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 2, Verse 10).

(xvi) Sañjaya informed Dhṛtarāṣṭra of the good qualities of the earth, the island of Sudarśana, the death of Bhīṣma, and so on. (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva; Drona Parva).

(xvii) Sañjaya gave the names of every one who was killed on the side of the Kauravas. (M.B. Karṇa Parva, Chapter 5).

(xviii) Sañjaya reported to Dhṛtarāṣṭra about those who died on the side of the Pāṇḍavas also. (Karṇa Parva, Chapter 6).

(xix) Sañjaya told Dhṛtarāṣṭra about those who were alive on the side of the Kauravas. (Karṇa Parva, Chapter 7).

(xx) Saṭyaki took Sañjaya as a captive. (Sālya Parva, Chapter 25, Verse 57).

(xxi) Due to the blessings of Vyāsa Sañjaya escaped from the captivity of Saṭyaki. (Sālya Parva, Chapter 27, Verse 39).

(xxii) Sañjaya consoled Dhṛtarāṣṭra. (M.B. Sṛtri Parva, Chapter 1, Verse 23).

(xxiv) Towards the close of his life Sañjaya went with Dhṛtarāṣṭra and Gāndhāri to the forest. (Āśramavāsika Parva, Chapter 15, Verse 8).

(xxv) On the first day of this journey to the forest, they reached the basin of the river Ganges. On that day Sañjaya made the bed for Dhṛtarāṣṭra. (Āśramavāsika Parva, Chapter 18, Verse 19).

(xxvi) Sañjaya introduced the wives of the Pāṇḍavas to the hermits. (Āśramavāsika Parva, Chapter 25).

(xxvii) On reaching the forest Sañjaya observed complete fast for two days. (Āśramavāsika Parva, Chapter 37, Verse 13).

(xxviii) Sañjaya always walked close behind Dhṛtarāṣṭra and in places of ups and downs he led the King by the hand. (Āśramavāsika Parva, Chapter 37, Verse 16).

(4) The End. While Dhṛtarāṣṭra and the others were walking along the forest a jungle-fire was seen. Instantly it encircled them. Dhṛtarāṣṭra cried out to Sañjaya to run for his life. But Sañjaya did not like to forsake them in that danger. Dhṛtarāṣṭra said that since they had left home and country there was no wrong in dying by jungle fire. At last yielding to the compulsion of Dhṛtarāṣṭra, Sañjaya ran away from the jungle-fire. Dhṛtarāṣṭra, Gāndhāri and Kunti died in the wild-fire. Sañjaya reached the basin of the Ganges and informed the hermits of the death of Dhṛtarāṣṭra and the others, and then went to the Himālayas. (M.B. Āśramavāsika, Chapter 37, Verse 19).

Sañjaya II. A prince of the country called Sauvira. It is stated in Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 263, Verse 10, that it was this prince Sañjaya who carried the flag and walked in front of Jayadratha, on his journey to carry away Pāñcāli. In the fight which ensued Arjuna killed this Sañjaya. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 271, Verse 27).

Sañjaya III. Another prince of the country of Sauvira. Vidulā was the mother of this prince. This prince once ran away from the battle-field and by the instigation of his mother went to the battlefield again. This story occurs in Mahābhārata, Udyoga Parva, Chapter 1 6.

Sañjaya Antti. An ancient city of South India. Sahadeva, during his regional conquest of the south sent his messengers to this country and conquered it easily. Mention is made in Mahābhārata, Sabhā Parva, Chapter 31, Verse 70, that Sahadeva got tribute from this country.

Sanjayyana Parva. A sub-section of Udyoga Parva in Mahābhārata. This comprises Chapters 30 to 32 of Udyoga Parva.

Sanjiva. A character in the Pañcatantra. (See under Pañcatantra).
SAṆṆIVAṆAMAṆI. The jewel in the head of serpents.

There is a tradition among the poets that this jewel is the basis of the serpent's life. There is a story in Mahābhārata, Aśvamedha Parva, Chapter 30, Verse 42, stating how Babhruvahana brought Arjuna to life by Sañjīvanaman. (For details see under Babhruvahana).

SAṆṆALPĀ. One of the sons born to Dharmadeva by his wife Sañkalpā. (Bhāgavata, Skanda 6).

SAṆṆALPĀ. A daughter of Dākṣa. Dharmadeva married the following ten daughters of Dākṣa, i.e. Arundhati, Vasu, Yāni, Lāmbā, Bhānī, Marutvati, Sañkalpā, Muhūrtā, Śādhīyā and Viśvā.

SAṆṆARA. I. A synonym of Śiva.

SAṆṆARA II. A simpleton, who was killed by his wife. This brahmin had a very mean wife called Kalipriyā. After killing her husband she left the place with her paramour. But, wild animals killed him on their way in the forest. In all repentance Kalipriyā returned home and after worshipping the corpse of her husband she observed Kārttika vrata at the instance of certain women. Thereby she got absolute freedom and attained heaven. (Padma Purāṇa, Brahmakhaṇḍa, Chapter 10).

SAṆṆARAČĀRYA.

1) General. The spiritual and philosophical preceptor of India. Śrī Sañkāra was born in the village of Kaḷaṭi on the banks of the holy river Periyār, also called Cūṟaṇa and Pūṟṇā. According to certain scholars he was born in 509 B.C. while certain others contend that he saw the light of day in 84 A.D. Yet others place his date of birth in various periods between 509 B.C. and 84 A.D. Whatever that may be, the great ācārya is believed to have lived only for 32 years.

2) Birth. The name of Sañkāra’s father was Śivaguru and that of his mother Āryāmbā. This nambūdiri couple had no issues for a long time. So they went to Trisūvaperūr (Trichur) to worship Śiva in the famous Śiva temple there. The idol in that temple is known as Vṛṣācālēvara and Vaṭakkunāṭha also. Ere long Lord Śiva blessed them with a son. The belief is still held that, pleased with the prayer of Śivaguru and Āryāmbā Śiva himself was born as their son. The child began exhibiting extraordinary intellectual powers. At the age of five the boy Sañkāra was invested with the sacred thread. By the time he was eight years old he had earned deep erudition in the Vedas, Śāstras, Purāṇas, epics (ītiḥāsas) etc. His father was no more by then and on the mother devolved the duty of bringing the child up.

3) Crocodile-attack. The boy showed no taste for or interest in childish plays, but evinced a tendency towards a life of renunciation. This attitude of the son pained the mother much and she wanted her son to get married. But, the boy did not like the idea. As fate would have it, an incident which proved to be a turning point in the boy’s life occurred soon. One day the mother and her son were bathing in the Periyār, when a crocodile caught hold of the boy. He cried aloud, and the mother got greatly alarmed. There was a custom for one to take to sannyāsa, irrespective of circumstances, when danger or death threatened one, and that is called āpatsannyāsa. Sañkāra prayed to his mother for permission to take to sannyāsa at that moment when his end was near, and willynilly the mother granted permission. All at once the crocodile, which had so unexploitedly attacked him, disappeared equally unexpectedly. The boy came out of the river absolutely unhurt. The decision to take to sannyāsa was taken once for all. Sañkāra assured his mother, before he started on a tour of the country, that he would be present at her bedside during her last days and also that he would duly perform her obsequies.

4) In the presence of the preceptor. Sañkāra, who then was not even seven years old, started for the north in quest of a preceptor, and on the banks of the Narmadā he saw Govinda - bhagavatpāda, the disciple of Śrī Gauḍapāda. The Bhagavatpāda was sitting in a cave surrounded by many wise people. Sañkāra approached and requested him to admit him as a disciple and grant him sannyāsa. Sañkāra’s prayer was granted.

5) Controlled flood. A wonderful thing happened while Sañkāra was living at the āśrama. The Narmadā was in spate and the huts on its banks were about to be submerged in water. People got alarmed. Then Sañkāra put his kamaṇḍalu (vessel which sannyāsins keep with them for water) and chanted the Jalākāraṇa Mantra. (hymn to attract water). At once the water which had flooded the banks flowed back into the river. People and their huts were saved. Afterwards his Guru asked Sañkāra to go and live in Kāśī and write Bhāṣyas (commentaries) on the Prasthānatrayam, i.e. the Brahma-sūtras, the Upaṇisads and the Gītā.

6) Padmapāda. Accordingly Sañkāra went to Kāśī. It was there that he took as his first disciple Viṣṇuśarmā, a young man from the Cōla region of the country. Sañkāra called him Sanandana. Afterwards other disciples also came in. But, gradually jealousies cropped up in the ranks of the disciples. The other disciples of Sañkāra thought that the latter was partial towards Sanandana and showed special affection and regards to him. Sañkāra then decided to prove to the others that Sanandana was a disciple of exceptional talents and merits. One day Sañkāra was bathing with his other disciples in the Gaṅgā, and he called Sanandana who was on the other side of the river to go to him. Sanandana walked on the surface of the water to his Guru, and as he took each step a lotus flower appeared beneath and held him up from sinking into the water. From that day onwards he came to be called Padmapāda, and his colleagues also realised his greatness.

7) Hastāmalaka. Hastāmalaka was one of the best disciples of Sañkāra. There is a story about his becoming Sañkāra’s disciple. He was born dumb. His father, Divākara took Hastāmalaka to Sañkāra believing that due to the blessing of the great Guru his son would gain powers of speech. Sañkāra asked the dumb boy, ‘who are you?’ and the boy answered, ‘I am the soul, which has no relationship with the parts and attributes of body and mind and which is also entirely different from them’. There were certain verses, which the boy recited as answer to Sañkāra’s question and each verse ended with ‘nityopalabdhishvarāpyohamātmā’ (I am the ātmā and eternal knowledge, consciousness, is its characteristic). The boy’s answer pleased Sañkāra, who took him as a disciple of his. The boy was given sannyāsa under the name Hastāmalaka the meaning of which word is he who is in possession of knowledge like the gooseberry in one’s palm.
8) Toṭakācārya. Toṭakācārya was a disciple, who came soon after Hastāmalaka. The name Toṭakācārya has a story behind it. This disciple approached Saṅkara with his request for discipleship in verse praising the latter. The verses were composed in the difficult toṭaka metre. The verses attracted Saṅkara very much and he took the applicant as disciple. His real name was Kāliṅnātha, but the Guru named him Toṭakācārya in view of his verses in that metre.

9) The Candālaguru. There is a story about Śiva going to Saṅkara at Kāšī in the guise of a Candāla and Saṅkara receiving him. One morning Saṅkara, after bathing in the Gaṅgā, was returning to the Viśvanātha temple. A Candāla with his hunting dogs and a pot of liquor was advancing from the opposite direction of Saṅkara, who asked the former to move away from his path. Immediately the Candāla asked, which, the body or soul, is to remove itself from the path? The body of everybody is composed of blood, flesh, bones etc; the constitution of it also is the same. But, the Ātman is universal and omnipresent. Whom-whose of the two-are you asking to move away from your path? Saṅkara realised from the above answer that the Candāla was an extraordinary person. In fact, it was Śiva, who had disguised himself as a Candāla. Saṅkara prostrated before him. Saṅkara thought about God saying that he who had attained Brahman and the consciousness of oneness with all, was his Guru, whether he be a Brahmin or a Candāla.

10) Derivative of the grammarian. Saṅkara has composed a hymn named Mohamudgara, in which he ridicules a grammarian. One day walking along a street in Kāšī Saṅkara saw a grammarian learning by rote rules of grammar, and then he composed the very sweet and beautiful poem—Bhaja Govindam—to reveal the foolishness of the grammarian repeating the useless rules of grammar. By the very first verse of the poem Saṅkara revealed the following truth: “Oh! fool! I worship Govinda (Bhaja Govindam) meditate upon Him. You meditate upon Govinda realising the truth that when death approaches, the grammatical sūtra “Ḍukṛṇi Karane” will not come to your aid.”

11) Saw Vyāsa. Śiva, when he appeared in the guise of a Candāla to Saṅkara, had asked him to visit Badarikāśrama, and accordingly he went there and visited Vyāsa. It was there that Saṅkara met his supreme preceptor, Govindapāda. He returned to Kāśī with the blessings of Vyāsa and Govindapāda and engaged himself in the writing of books.

12) Saṅkara’s age. There is a legend about Saṅkara’s life. Brahmath had allotted to him only eight years’ life. Before Saṅkara left his house at Kālaṭi, a batch of sannyāsins including Agaṣṭya and Nārada came to the house. The sannyāsins, who were pleased with the reception accorded to them blessed Saṅkara to live for sixteen years instead of the eight Brahmath had permitted him.

While Saṅkara was writing books at Muktimandapa at Maṇikarnikā Ghat in Kāšī Vyāsa came there one day in the guise of an old man, and there ensued a lengthy discussion between the two. Padmapāda recognised Vyāsa in the old man and told him and Saṅkara thus: “How would there be peace and happiness in the world, if Saṅkara, the incarnation of Śiva and Vedavyāsa, the incarnation of Viṣṇu quarrelled with each other?” As soon as his identity was revealed thus, Vyāsa admitted that Saṅkara’s Bhāṣya on the Brahmasūtras was correct and blessed him to live for thirtytwo, instead of sixteen years.

13) Controversy between Saṅkara and Maṇḍanāmīśra. Pandits (scholars) view the controversy or discussion between Saṅkara and Maṇḍanāmīśra as the most important event in Saṅkara’s life. Three incidents, Saṅkara’s meeting Kumārilabhāṭṭa, his defeating Maṇḍanāmīśra and his entering the dead body of another person—may be found in connection with the above controversy.

A: Meeting with Kumārilabhāṭṭa. Saṅkara’s object was to expose the defects and draw-backs in Pūrvamīmāṃsā (the ritual part of the Vedas). Kumārilabhāṭṭa was the most competent person for a discussion on the subject. Saṅkara, for this purpose, went to Prayāga from Kāśī. But, Kumārilabhāṭṭa was not in a condition fit for discussion. He was slowly burning himself to death in a heap of paddy husk set on fire. He courted this punishment voluntarily to atone for a wrong he had committed. Years back he had put on Buddhistic attire and studied the secrets of Buddhistic religion from its preceptors with the object of refuting that religion. Kumārilabhāṭṭa had great faith in Karmakāṇḍa, and he therefore, decided that it was his duty to make atonement for the wrong he had purposely done according to injunctions laid down in Karmakāṇḍa. Saṅkara was very sorry to find Kumārilabhāṭṭa in this condition in which discussion could not be held with him on the defects of Pūrvamīmāṃsā. Kumārilabhāṭṭa directed Saṅkara to the great scholar, Maṇḍanāmīśra at Māhiṃmati for a discussion on Pūrvamīmāṃsā.

B. Maṇḍanāmīśra defeated. When Saṅkara reached Maṇḍanāmīśra’s house a ceremony connected with obsequies was being conducted there. The door for entry to the house was closed. Saṅkara, by his yogic power entered the home and revealed the object of his visit to Maṇḍanāmīśra, who agreed to the proposal of Saṅkara. Accordingly a debate began between the two. Bhāratidevi, wife of Maṇḍanāmīśra and an erudite scholar in her own title acted as the arbiter in the discussion. Before the debate started she put a garland of flowers on the neck of both the contenders and announced that he would be considered as defeated in the debate the garland on whose neck began fading first. The debate continued for a number of days and the garland on Maṇḍanāmīśra’s neck began showing signs of fading. According to the terms and conditions of the debate Maṇḍanāmīśra acknowledged defeat. He accepted Saṅkara’s discipleship.

C. Parakāyaprabhṛ (Entering the dead body of another person). But, Bhāratidevi argued that it was not enough that Saṅkara had defeated her husband in debate. She challenged him to defeat her as well, and Saṅkara accepted the challenge. Many topics dealt with in the various Śāstras were debated upon and Saṅkara won all those debates. Ultimately Bhāratidevi raised certain points connected with the science of sexual love in the course of her arguments. Saṅkara admitted that he did not possess sufficient mastery over the subject as he had taken himself to sannyāsa even from infancy. But, he told her that if he was allowed necessary time for it he would debate on that topic also.
Bhāratīdevi granted him time for it and the debate was adjourned.

Saṅkara prepared himself for the study of the science of sexual love. Just at that time a King called Amaruka died. After asking his disciples to take special care of his body Saṅkara entered by yogic power the dead body of Amaruka. The dead King came back to life and his people felt very happy about the mysterious happening. Saṅkara, who had thus entered the body of King Amaruka, lived in the palace enjoying all royal pleasures. He gained practical experience in the matter of sexual love from the queens in the palace. People found the resurrected King Amaruka to be better and more intelligent. The ministers suspected that the soul which dwelt in the body of the king was of some one else. Under the impression that it might be that of some yogin the ministers deputed agents to various parts of the country to find out if there was anywhere the dead body of a yogi, and they found out Saṅkara's body. It was about to be burnt on the pyre when the disciples of Saṅkara met King Amaruka at the palace and informed him about these developments. Immediately Saṅkara quitted his royal body and entered his own body now lying on the funeral pyre. He prayed to Śrīlakṣmīnarasimha and came out from the burning pyre.

Saṅkara returned immediately to Maṇḍanamiśra's house and the debate was started again. Bhāratīdevi realized that Saṅkara could not be defeated in topics related to the science of sex. Thus Saṅkara gained absolute victory in his debate with Maṇḍanamiśra, who then requested the former to grant him sannyāsa and accept him as a disciple. Saṅkara did so. Bhāratīdevi too followed her husband in accepting sannyāsa.

14) Mother's death. Saṅkara now knew that it was time for his mother's death. According to his promise to her that he would be by her side at the time of her death Saṅkara returned to Kālaṭi. His mother expired, and he made arrangements for cremation. But his relations did not cooperate with him and argued that it was against the injunctions in the Śāstras for a son, who had taken to sannyāsa, to perform the cremation etc. of his mother. At last, Saṅkara had to cremate his mother by himself without others' help. He made a pyre with plantain stems in the compound of his house, and cut his mother's corpse into pieces, carried the pieces to the funeral pyre and thus cremated the body.

15) Triumphal tour. After the cremation of his mother Saṅkara set out on his triumphal tour of the country. He is believed to have travelled throughout India three times. Wherever he went he gained friends and also made enemies. It was during these tours that he established the four maṭhas (centres) in the four regions of the country. Śrīgeri in the south, Jāganāthā in the east, Dvārakā in the west and Badarināthā in the north were the four chief maṭhas established by Saṅkara and they continue to function even to this day.

The Śiva, Viṣṇu and Devi temples and other Hindu religious institutions to be found in India today very eloquently proclaim the achievements and unique reputation of Saṅkara. It is traditionally believed that Saṅkara brought five liṅgas from Kailāsa and installed them in the five great temples. Muktiśaṅga in Kedāra, Parāśara in the Nilakanṭha temple in Nepal, Moka liṅga at Cidambaram, Bhogaliṅga in Śrīgeri and Yogalinga in Kānci are the five liṅgas installed by Saṅkara. The 'five-in-one' method of worship was also propounded by him. According to this system Śādiya, Ambikā, Viṣṇu, Gaṇanāthā and Mahēśvara are conjointly worshipped, special importance being given by the worshipper to his special deity. Saṅkara appointed one disciple of his each in each of the maṭhas as its head and these maṭhas play the most important role in the maintenance and propagation of the Advaita philosophy. The heads of these maṭhas during various periods have been reputed Vedāntists and noble souls. Jyotir-maṭha in Badarikāśrama, Govardhana piṭha in Jagan-nāthapuri, Sārādā piṭha in Śrīgeri and Kāṇakoṭipīṭha in Kānci are the most important of the Śrī Saṅkara piṭhas. Having thus completed his philosophic mission or object in life Saṅkara entered māhāsamādhi at the age of thirty-two. Some scholars believe that he disappeared in a cave at Kedāra while certain others hold the view that he ascended the Sarva-vānapīṭha (the omniscient state) at Kānci and spent his closing days there.

16) His works. The literary compositions of Saṅkara may be classified into four divisions, viz. Bhāṣyas (commentaries), original works, hymns to various deities, and mantras.

Saṅkarāsvāmi. Father of Upavarsa. (See under Upavarsa).

Saṅkari. Wife of Varatana, the brahmin. (See under Varatana for the reason why the couple had no children in their next life).

Saṅkaraśāṇa. Balabhadra Rāma. (To know about the derivation of the name see under Balabhadra Rāma).

Saṅkāśya. A King of ancient days, who lived in Yama's court. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 8, Verse 10).

Saṅkāśyapurā. A Kingdom in ancient India. The King of this country Śūdhavanā once attacked the kingdom of Mithilā. (Vālmiki Rāmāyaṇa, Bālakāṇṭha, Canto 75).

Saṅkha I. Considered to be a great, sublime treasure, found in Kubera's court. Brahmadatta, King of Pānchala attained heaven as he used to give Saṅkha to good brahmins. (Sānti Parva, Chapter 254 and Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 137). Saṅkha appeared on earth, according to one belief, from the bones of Saṅkhacūḍa. (For details see under Tulasi, Parva 2).

Saṅkha II. A nāga born to Kaṇḍaprapajāpati of Kadrā. The following information about it is from the Mahābhārata.

(i) Nārada once introduced Saṅkha to Mātali, charioteer of Indra (Udyoga Parva, Chapter 103, Verse 12).

(ii) Saṅkha was one of the chief nāgas which came to lead the soul of Balabhadra to Pātāla at the time of his death. (Mausala Parva, Chapter 4, Verse 7).

Saṅkha III. Son of the Viśā King.

(i) He was present at the wedding of Draupadi in the company of his brother Uttara and sister Uttarā. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 31, Verse 16).

(ii) He also came out to fight Duryodhana and others when they lifted the cows of the Viśā King. (Viśā Parva, Chapter 31, Verse 16).

(iii) On the first day of the great war he clashed with Bhūrīravas. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 49, Verse 26).

(iv) He was killed in fighting with Droṇa at Kurukṣetra. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 5, Verse 17).
(v) After death he got absorbed in the Viśvadevas.

SāṅKHĀ IV. A maharsi, who was the elder brother of Likhitamahārsi. Likhita once punished Sāṅkha for plucking fruits from his garden without his permission. (For details see under Likhita).

SĀNGKHĀ V. A Kekaya prince. He and his four brothers were mahārathas on the side of the Pāṇḍavas. (Udyoga Parva, Chapter 171, Verse 15).

SĀÑKHĀ VI. The asura called Hayagrīva. (See under Hayagrīva).

SĀNGKHĀCŪDA I. An Asura. Sudāmā became this asura as the result of a curse. (For details see under Tulasi, Para 5).

SĀNGKHĀCŪDA II. A slave of Kubera. While Kṛṣṇa and Balabhadra were enjoying pleasures with naked Gopasistris at Vṛndāvana Saṅkhaćūḍa, attracted by the Gopi women, went there. He abducted the women and in the fight that ensued was killed by Kṛṣṇa, who gave to Balabhadra the precious stone taken from his (Sāṅkhaćūḍa’s) head. (Bhāgavata, 10th Skandha).

SĀNGKHANAKHA. A nāga that lives in the court of Varuṇa worshipping the latter. (Sabhā Parva, Southern text, Chapter 9).

SĀNGKHAPADA. Son of Śvārociśa Manu, who once taught him Śvātavatadhama and Saṅkhapada imparted the dharma to his son Suvarṇābha. (Śanti Parva, Chapter 348, Verse 37).

SĀNGKHAPARVATA (MOUNTAIN). A mountain near Mount Meru. (See under Kurāṅga Parvata).

SĀNGKHAPINṆDA. A nāga born to Kaśyapaprajāpatis of Kadrū. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 35, Verse 23).

SĀNGKHĀSRAVAS. A female attendant of Subrahmanyā. (Śalya Parva, Chapter 46, Verse 26).

SĀNGKHATĪRTHA. A sacred place on the banks of the river Sarasvati. (Śalya Parva, Chapter 37).

SĀNGKHYĀYANA. An ācārya (preceptor) who was a prominent disciple of Sanatkumāra, Brhaspati being another equally prominent disciple. (Bhāgavata, Skandha 6).

SĀNGKHYĀYOGAŚAṢTRA. See under Kapila.

SĀNGKHIṬI I. A sacred spot at Kurukṣetra. A bath in the Devīśīrtha there will add to one's beauty. (Vana Parva, Chapter 83, Verse 51).

SĀNGKHIṬI II. Wife of Mahāśāṅkha, a crocodile. (For details see under Mahāśāṅkha).

SĀNGKOCA. One of the Rākṣasas, who, in ancient days ruled the earth and ultimately died. The story of Saṅkoca was told by Bhīma to Yudhiṣṭhira to prove the truth that even the greatest and most powerful has, one day or other, to quit life and die. Among such great ones are included Pṛthu, Aila, Maya, Bhumā, Naraka, Śambha, Hayagrīva, Pulomā, Svarbhānu, Prahlāda, Namuci, Dakṣa, Vipraciti, Virocana, Suhotra, Vṛṣa, Vṛṣabhā, Kapilāśva, Virūpa, Bāṇa, Kārtasvāra, and Viśvadāṃśa. Though all of them were once emperors they had to give room to the next generation. Bhīma, on his bed of arrows, was thus describing the transience of life. (Śanti Parva, Chapter 277).

SĀNGKRITI I. A King, who lives in the court of Yama worshipping him. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 8, Verse 10).

SĀNGKRITI II. A muni born in the Ātri dynasty. After giving his disciples lessons on impersonal (attributeless) God he went and lived in Devaloka. (Mahābhārata, Śanti Parva, Chapter 234, Verse 22).

SĀNKU I. A son of Hiranyakṣa. Sambaras, Śakuni, Dvimūrdhā, Saṅku and Ārya were the sons of Hiranyakṣa. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 19).

SĀNKU II. A Yādava King who was present at the wedding of Draupadī. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 185, Verse 19).

He was a member of the company of Yādavas, who carried Subhadra’s dowry at her wedding with Arjuna. He was a mahārathī also. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 14 and Ādi Parva, Chapter 220).

SĀNGKUKARṆA I. A muni, who lived at the sacred Kapardiśvara tirtha in Vārāṇasi. There lived a brahmin in the temple there performing tapas. One day a lean and bony ghost, hungry and panting came to the brahmin. To the brahmin’s question the ghost replied thus: “In my previous life I was a rich brahmin. I looked after my family well, but did not worship Devas, guests or cows. Nor did I do any pious deed. But, one day I happened to worship Lord Viśvanātha and touch his idol. Within a short period after that I died. You will please tell me the means, if any, for me to attain heaven.”

Saṅkukarṇa answered the ghost as follows:—“There lives no man on earth, who is more fortunate than your good self, who could touch and prostrate before Lord Viśvanātha. That good fortune has led you to me. You bathe in this holy tirtha and you will lose your ghosthood. The ghost, accordingly dived in the water and immediately rose up to heaven. (Padma Purāṇa, Ādi Khanda, Chapter 34).

SĀNGKUKARṆA II. A nāga born in the Dhṛtarāṣṭra dynasty. It was burnt to death at the serpent yajña conducted by Janamejaya. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 57, Verse 15).

SĀNGKUKARṆA III. An attendant of Śiva. He lives in the court of Kubera. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 10, Verse 34).

SĀNGKUKARṆA IV. One of the two attendants presented by Pārvatī to Subrahmanyā, the other being Puspadanta. (Śalya Parva, Chapter 45, Verse 51).

SĀNGKUKARṆESVARA. A mūrti (aspect) of Śiva whose worship is ten times more productive of good than the aśvamedha Yajña. (Vana Parva, Chapter 82, Verse 70).

SĀNGKUKROMĀ. A nāga with thousand heads, one of the sons of Kaśyapa by Kadrū. (Matsya Purāṇa Chapter 6, Verse 4).

SĀNGNATEYU. A son born to Raurdrāśva, the third son of emperor Puru, by Mīśrak ‘i, the aśpāra woman. He, a great archer, had nine sons called Keeyu, Vaneuy, Jaleyu, Pakseyu, Krpaneyu, Sthandileyu, Tejeyu, Satyeuy and Dharmeyu. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 94, Verse 8).
SANNATI I. The wife of Kratu, the grandson of Hermit Pulaha. To Pulaha the sons Kardama, Sahiṣṭu and others were born. The extremely bright Bālakilayas were born to Kratu by his wife Sannati. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 20).

SANNATI II. The wife of King Brahmadatta. She was a hermitess. Both the husband and the wife did penance at Mānasasaras. (Padma Purāṇa, Srṣṭi Khanda, Chapter 10).

SANNIHAṬTĪRTHA. An ancient holy place. The devas such as Brahmā and others visit this place monthly. Those who bathe in this place, at the time of the solar eclipse will obtain the fruits of conducting six horse-sacrifices. It is believed that giving offerings to the manes at this place is of great importance. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 83, Verse 190).

SANNIHIṬTA. An Agni (fire). This agni creates the power of activity inside the living things. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 221, Stanza 19, that this fire was the third son of Manu.

SANNIVEŚA. One of the sons born to Tvaṣṭā by his wife Racanā. (Bhāgavata, Skandha 6).

SANTA. Son of Satya who was born of the family of King Vitahavya. He had a son called Śravas. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 30, Verse 62).

SĀNTI I. Son of Āpa, one of the eight Vasus. He had four sons called Vaitāṅda, Śrama, Śanta and Divhān. In Verse 18, Chapter 66 of Ādi Parva, it is stated that this Śanta was the son of Ahar, the Aśtvāvasu, and that he had three brothers called Śama, Jyotis and Muni.

SĀNTI II. A King, the son of Priyavrata. (Bhāgavata, 5th Skandha).

SĀNTA. Daughter of Daśaratha. She was brought up by King Lomapāda of Aiśa and was married by muni Raśāṇī. (For details see Para 9, under Daśaratha).

SĀNTANAGOPĀLA. The story of how Arjuna tried to save a Brahmin's son who was dead. (For the detailed story see under Arjuna Para 17, sub-section).

SĀNTAMAYA. A King of ancient India. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 1, Verse 236).

SĀNTANAVA. A grammarian, anterior to Pāṇini. He has written a book called 'Phīṣṭūtra' about the svaras (Accents) in the Vedas. This book of 87 sūtras is divided into four Chapters called antodāttam, āduyodāttam, dvityyodāttam and Paryāyodāttam.

SĀNTANIKĀ. A female attendant of Subrahmanya. (M.B. Śalya Parva, Chapter 46, Verse 9).

SĀNTANU (SĀNTANU). King Śantanu, on a par with the Devas, was a great physician (Mahābhīṣak).

SĀNTANU (SĀNTANU). Son of King Pratīpa of the lunar dynasty.

(i) For previous life and birth as Śantanu see under Bhīṣma, Para II.

(ii) Married life. (See under Bhīṣma, Paras 2, 3).

3) Other information.

(i) He was the second son of Pratīpa. His elder brother was called Devāpi, younger one Bālhiṅka and his mother Sunandā. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 94, Verse 61; Chapter 95, Verse 43).

(ii) He was called Śantanu as things touched by both his hands used to become youthful.

(iii) Śantanu became King as his elder brother Devāpi had, as an infant, renounced the throne and left for the forest. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 94, Verse 62; Chapter 95, Verse 45).

(iv) It was he, who brought to the palace and brought up Kraṇa and Kraṇī, who were found in the forest as orphans. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 95, Verse 46).

(v) Śantanu worships Yama in his court. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 8, Verse 25).

(vi) He attained heaven by doing tapas on Mount Aṛcika. (Vana Parva, Chapter 125, Verse 19).

(vii) He is one of the Kings to be remembered both at dawn and dusk. (Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 165, Verse 58).

(viii) He was absolutely wedded to truth and he possessed great prowess. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 96, Verse 1).

(x) Synonyms used of him in the Mahābhārata:— Bharata, Bhāratagopāta, Bharatasattama, Kauravya, Kurusattama, Pratiṣṭha etc.

SĀNTARAJAS. A King of Kaśi. He was the son of King Trikakalapa and father of King Rājī. (Bhāgavata, 9th Skandha).

SĀNTARDANA. The son of Drṣṭaketu who was the King of Kekaya. He was present at the Rājaṣṭya sacrifice of Yudhiṣṭhira. (Bhāgavata, Skandha 9).

SĀNTARJANA. A warrior of Subrahmanya. (Śalya Parva, Chapter 45, Verse 58).

SĀNTI I. Daughter of Dakṣa by his wife Prasūti. Prasūti delivered including Śanti twenty-four children. (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Part 1, Chapter 7).

SĀNTI II. A King born in the dynasty of Bharata, son of Dusyanta. He was the son of Nila, grandson of Ajamidha and father of Susānti. (Bhāgavata, 9th Skandha).

SĀNTI III. Name of the Indra of the fourth Manvantara (Ādi Parva, Chapter 196, Verse 79).

SĀNTI IV. A mahārṣi. Son of Aṅgiras, he was called Atreyu also. He had participated in the Yaśāṇa conducted by Uparicavasava. (Śanti Parva, Chapter 336, Verse 8; Ādi Parva, Chapter 196, Verse 20; Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 85, Verse 130).

SĀNTI V. A mahārṣi who was a disciple of the Rṣi called Bhūti, who did once go to participate in a yaśāṇa conducted by his brother Suvarcas, leaving matters connected with his āśrama with Śanti, who discharged his duties quite well in the absence of his master. One day when agni became very scarce in the āśrama he praised Agnideva, and noticing that the Deva was pleased Śanti requested him to bestow a son on the mahārṣi. Accordingly a son was born to Bhūti, who later on became famous as 'Bhautyamunu.' Bhūti, who was pleased with the devout life of his disciple (Śanti) taught him Sāngaveda. (Mārkandeya Purāṇa).

SĀNTIDEVĀ (SĀNTIDEVĪ). Daughter of King Devaka. She was married by Vasudeva. (Vāyu Purāṇa, Chapter 96, Verse 130).

SĀNTIKALPA. One of the five saṃhitā sections of the Atharvaveda composed by muni Muṣṭikēśa, the other four sections being nākastrakalpa, vedakalpa, saṃhitākalpa and āṅgirasakalpa. Nakṣatrakalpa contains rules for the worship of the stars; Vedakalpa contains the rites regarding Brahman, the Ṛtik; saṃhitākalpa contains the rules about mantras, and the Āṅgirasakalpa deals with black magic and śāntikalpa.
contains rules about propitiating deities by offerings of horse, elephant etc.

SÁNTIPARVA. An important Parva of the Mahábhárata (See under Mahábhárata).

SANIUKRISHNA. A king of the Púru dynasty. He was the son of Matinára. (Agni Puráṇa, Chapter 278).

SAŅU. A country of ancient India. (Mahábhárata, Bhíṣma Parva Chapter 9, Verse 43).

SANYÁSA (SANNYÁSA) One of the four stages of Brahminical life. The four stages are Brahmacarya (Religious student), Gárhadhya (householder), Vánaprastha (Forest-dweller) and Sannyása (hermit or sage). (For further details see under Áśrama).

Duties of a hermit. Manu has ordained that one should perform sannyása (renunciation) at the fourth stage of life renouncing every tie with the world. After becoming a hermit he should travel daily alone. He should enter villages only for food. He should have renounced wealth. He should not acquire any wealth. He should be a sage filled with knowledge. He should have a skull as the pot for taking alms. He should sleep under trees. He should wear poor cloth and should be solitary. He should consider everybody as equal. Having become a hermit he should not delight in death or life.

A hermit should put every step looking straight down to the earth. He should drink water filtered by cloth. Words and deeds should be pure and true. The shells of water-gourd (pumpkin), wooden pots and earthen pots are the Vaisāvagya sign of hermits. A hermit should beg for food daily from houses where no smoke comes out, where peste is placed and where there is no charcoal and after all have taken food and the pot for preparing food is placed upside down.

It is said that the food got by hermits by begging is of five types. They are Mádhukara (collected alms), asankhipa (unlimited), Prákpranita (prepared much earlier), Ayácitam (got by not begging) and tátkalika (for the time being). In whichever stage of life he may be, he should be staunch in that stage and should perform the duties with honesty.

If by ignorance a hermit engaged himself in killing animals by day or night, to remove the impurity and get purity, he should bathe and perform six púrañyāmas (restraints of the breath) daily. The hermit should discard his body made of five elements.

The signs of duty are, resolution, forbearance, self-restraint, not robbing, cleansing, control of sense-organs, modesty, knowledge, truth, not resorting to anger, and so on. Hermits are of four grades, such as Kúṭikaka, Bahúdaka, Hanisva and Paramahisva, the last-mentioned being the noblest grade. The hermit who wears one or three dañğas (rod) will be freed from ties of birth and death.

The five Yamas or restraints are not killing (Ahímsá), truth, not stealing, celibacy and not receiving. The five Niyamas or religious duties are cleansing, joy or contentedness, penance, self-study and meditation on God. The sitting postures suitable for hermits are Padmásana etc. (Agni Puráṇa, Chapter 161).

SANYASTÁPÁDA. A famous Púrānic region in India. The king of this kingdom, fearing Jarásandha, ran away to the south with his son. (Sabhá Parva, Chapter 14, Verse 28).

SAPTACARU. A holy place. The reason for giving this place the name Saptacaru is given in Mahábhárata, Vana Parva, Chapter 82 as follows:
The word 'Caru' means sacrifice. Once devas (gods) and men together put the fat parts of sacrificial animals, as burnt offerings in the sacrificial fire, each singing seven verses from the Rgveda. By this sacrifice they obtained more prosperity than the fruits of giving one lakh of cows as alms or performing hundred Rájasúya sacrifices or thousand horse-sacrifices.

"The wise said that it was an endless gift to the manes. The gods, the manes, the Gandharvas, the celestial maids, the gánas, the yaksas, Kinnaras, the siddhas, the Vidyádharas, the people of the earth, the Rákṣasas, the daitiyas, the Rudras, Brahmá, all these joined together with vow and fast taken for a thousand years and performed a sacrifice each exalting Viśnu by singing seven verses from Rgveda. Keśava was much pleased at the caru and gave them Aśtaágavaryāsiddhí (the eight miraculous attainments) and everything they wished. Thus giving them all kinds of prosperities, the god Mukunda disappeared in this place as lightning in the clouds. Therefore this place became famous everywhere by the name Saptacaru."

SAPTADVÍPAS (S). The seven Brahmins who killed and ate on the way the cow brought for the teacher. These seven Brahmins were the disciples of a teacher in Kúṇḍinapura. Once owing to a severe famine people were in a very difficult situation. The teacher sent these seven disciples to beg for a cow from his son-in-law who had a very large number of cows. They did accordingly. The son-in-law gave them a cow for his father-in-law. The disciples began the return journey with the cow. When they reached half-way they became so weary and tired of hunger and walking that they could not proceed a step further. When they reached the stage of death, those celibates killed the cow according to the Vedic rites, and ate the flesh. Carrying the remaining flesh they reached the house of the teacher and told him all the truth. As they had tried to be righteous as far as possible, the teacher only felt proud of his disciples. (Káthásaritáságará, Madanamah-cukálambaka, Taranga 1).

SAPTADVÍPAS (SEVEN ISLANDS).

1) General information. The seven islands are Jambúdvípa, Plékṣadvípa, Sálmalídvpí, Kuśadvípa, Kúrañçadvípa, Sákadadvípa and Puṣkāradvípa. Each of these islands is surrounded by sea. The sea that surrounds Jambúdvípa is the Lavana sea (salt sea), the Plékṣadvípa is surrounded by the sea of Sugarcane-juice, Sálmalídvpí by the sea of liquor, Kuśadvípa by the sea of ghee, Krañçadvípa by the sea of curd Sákadadvípa by the sea of milk and the Puṣkāradvípa by the sea of pure water. In the centre of all, lies the Jambúdvípa and in the centre of this island, stands the golden mountain meru. (Viśnu Puráṇa, Aśiśa 2, Chapter 2).

2) Origin. There is a story about the origin of these seven islands and the surrounding seas, in Devi Bhágavata Skandha 8.

Two famous sons named Priyavrata and Uttánapáda were born to Śvayambhúva Manu. Priyavrata and his children ruled the country for a period of eleven arbus, that is a hundred million years. Though he was aged so much the power of his mind and body did not show any sign of weakness. At this time he saw once the sun travelling on the first side of the earth, and began to think, “When the sun is walking on one side of the earth, the other side must naturally be dark.
Will it happen so in our time? In all places at all times it should be bright and there should be no darkness.” Thinking thus he got into a chariot as bright as the sun and travelled round the earth seven times.
During these travels the wheels of the chariot made seven furrows on the earth. These furrows became the seven seas and the beds between the furrows became seven islands.

3) Sovereign powers. Priyavrata made his seven sons sovereigns of the seven islands. These seven sovereign rulers were Agnīdra, Idhmajhva, Yajñabahu, Hiranyaretas, Gṛḍhaprṣṭha, Medhātihi and Vīthotra.

SAPTAGAṆA. An ancient holy place. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 25, Verse 16, if that one goes to this place and gives offerings to gods and the manes and worships them, one would attain heaven and become a deva (god).

SAPTAGODĀVARA. A holy place near the temple of Śūrpāraka. Those who bathe in this would attain heaven. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 85, Verse 44).

SAPTAJANĂŚRAMA. A holy place where seven hermits called the Saptajananas, went to heaven by standing head downwards in water. This was the place through which Śrī Rāma and Sugrīva went to Kiśkindhā. Sugrīva told Śrī Rāma about the hermitage of Saptajanaus as follows:

“Oh! Rāghava! This vast area is the hermitage where rest could be taken, as sweet fruits and pure water could be obtained and the forest looks like a garden.
Here the seven hermits called Saptajananas, who did penance and took vow and fast by standing in water always, with heads downwards, did live in days of

his wife Danu. (Matsya Purāṇa 6:19).

SAPTAKRT. An eternal god concerned in Śrāddha (offerings to the manes). (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 91, Stanza 36).

SAPTAMĀṬR (S. (SEVEN MOTHERS).

1) General information. Saptamāṭrś are the seven goddesses named Brahmiṇī, Vaśiṇī, Māheśvarī, Kaumārī, Vārāhī, Indrāṇī and Cāmuṇḍī.

2) Origin. Some are of opinion that the Saptamāṭrś are connected with Śiva. Their names reveal that they were born from the bodies of Brahmiṇi, Viṣṇu and such other gods. There is another story that when Śiva and Viṣṇu joined together and tried to kill the asura named Anhandhaka and failed, they created the seven mothers to kill the asura. From each drop of blood of Anhandhakasura that fell on the ground an asura arose. These seven maṭrś joined with Yogēśvari, the creation of Śiva, drank the blood of the asura without allowing it to fall on the ground and so it became easy for Śiva to kill the asura.

There is a story in Vāmana Purāṇa, Chapter 56, about the birth of the Saptamāṭrś, as follows: In olden days a fierce war broke out between the devas and the asuras. When the fierce asuras Caṇḍa and Muṇḍa were killed the famous asura named Raktabijā entered the battlefield with an aksauḥśini of army (21870 chariots, so many elephants, 65610 horses and 109350 infantry). Seeing this immense army of the asuras drawing near, Kauśikī, Maheśvarī and Kāli made a loud roaring sound. Then from the mouth of Maheśvarī, Brahmaṇī came out seated on a swan and wearing rosary and water pot. From her eyes Maheśvarī with three eyes came out seated on a bull and wearing great snakes as bangles and ear-rings and holding a trident. From the loins came out Kauṃāri, seated on a peacock and holding a lance. The beautiful Vaśiṇī came out from her hand, seated on Guruḍa, holding a conch, discus, club, sword, the bow, zārīga and arrow. From her posterior came out the horrible Vārāhī (Boar) with a great peste, seated on the Nāga (serpent) Seṣa, and furrowing the ground with her fierce tusk. From her heart came out the awful Nārasīnhi (woman-lion) with fierce claws, who at the shaking of her mane displaced the planets and the stars, and from her foot Cāmuṇḍā came out.
(See under Palāla).

SAPTANĀGA (S. (Seven serpents). The Saptanāgas are Ananta, Takṣaka, Karka, Padma, Mahāpāda, Saṅkhaka and Guliṅka. All of them should be consecrated in temples as wearing Brahma-string and having the face with the expanded hood of a serpent. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 51).

SAPTARĀVĀ (SAPTAṬVĀRA). One of the famous groups of children of Garuḍa. (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 101, Verse 11).

SAPTARŚIS. (The seven hermits). A group of hermits.
There are seven hermits in this group. The Saptarśis in each Manvantara (age of Manu) are different.
As there are fourteen Manvantaras before a great deluge, by that time ninety-eight Saptarśis will be born and dead. The father of the Saptarśis in each Manu's age will be different. The Saptarśis of the present Manu's age, Marici, Angiras, Atri, Pulastya, Vaśiṇī, Pulaba and Kratu are the mental sons of Brahma. (For further details see under the word Manvantara).

SAPTAŚIKUKUṆḍA. A holy bath (tīrtha) situated within Kurukṣetra. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 73 that those who bathe in this tīrtha will obtain the merit of good actions.

SAPTAŚĀLĀ (S. The cursed forms of the King Maṇiḥbhadra's seven sons who were sorcerers. Due to the curse of Agastya they became seven palm trees (sālas). They obtained liberation from the curse during the incarnation of Viṣṇu as Śrī Rāma. (For detailed story see under Maṇiḥbhadra II).

SAPTAŚAMUDRAS. (The seven seas). See under Saptadvīpa (s).

SAPTAŚĀRASVĀTVA.

1) General information. A holy place situated within Kurukṣetra. This is a holy bath dedicated to Sarasvatī.
Mention is made in Mahābhārata, Śalya Parva, Chapter 37, Verse 61, that during his pilgrimage Balabhadra-rāma visited this holy bath.

2) Origin. A story occurs in Mahābhārata, Śalya Parva, Chapter 38 about the origin of this tīrtha. It is given below:

Once Brahma performed a sacrifice on the island of Puṣkara. All the devas (gods and goddesses) attended the sacrifice. Among the rivers, Sarasvatī alone did not come at first. Then Brahmā remembered Sarvasvati and she appeared under the name Suprabhā. Thus she appeared before the hermits who were doing penance in that place assuming seven different figures. From that day onwards the place became famous under the name Saptasārasvati. (See under Sarvasvati).

SAPTASVAS. The seven horses of the Sun. The chariot of the Sun is nine thousand yojanas long and its shaft is eighteen-thousand yojanas long. The length of the axle is fifteen million seven lakhs yojanas. The wheel is secured to this axle. The entire wheel of 'Time' (Kāla-akra) stuck fast in the undiminishing figure of 'year' with three naves of the wheel, five spokes and sixty rings. The chariot is drawn by seven horses. They are the seven Vedic metres with their theory. They are Gāyatrī, Brharti, Uṣṇik, Jagati, Trīṣṭhup, Anuṣṭup and Pañkiti. (Viśnu Purāṇa, Aśveśa 2, Chapter 8).

SAPTAKAPĀYAS. (The seven expedients). See under Caturupayas.

SARABHA I. A nāga born in the Takṣaka dynasty. It was burnt to death at Janamejaya's serpent yajña. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 57, Verse 8).

SARABHA II. A nāga born in the Airāvata dynasty. It was burnt to death at Janamejaya's serpent yajña. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 57, Verse 11).

SARABHA III. A notorious Dānava, son of Kaśyapa-prajāpati by his wife Danu. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 65, Verse 26).

SARABHA IV. A mahārṣi, who worships Yama in his court. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 8, Verse 14).

SARABHA V. Brother of Dhrṣṭaketu, King of Cedi. He was a friend and supporter of the Pāñḍavas. During the dāvamedha he helped Arjuna to lead the yajñic horse. (Āsvamedhika Parva, Chapter 83, Verse 3).

SARABHA VI. A brother of Sakuni. He was killed in the great war by Bhīma. (Drona Parva, Chapter 157, Verse 24).

SARABHA VII. Virabhadra incarnated himself as Sarabha to defeat Narasiṁhamūrtī. (Siva Purāṇa, Satarudrasanhitā).

SARABHĀNGA. A Mahārṣi, who lived in the Daṇḍaka forest during the 'forest-life' of Śrī Rāma. (Vālmiki Rāmāyaṇa, Aranyakāṇḍa, Canto IV). When Śrī Rāma visited Sarabhaṅga's aśrama, Indra too came there, but went away saying that he would meet the mahārṣi after the great mission of Rāma was over. The mahārṣi told Rāma that he was waiting to see him and did not accompany Indra to Devaloka as he wanted to go there only after seeing Rāma. Rāma answered the Mahārṣi that he would take upon himself all the spiritual assets and good results of the actions of the Mahārṣi, and wanted him to point out a place for them (Rāma and others) to live. Sarabhaṅga directed them to the aśrama of Sūtikṣaṇa, and after that ended his life by leaping into the fire and attained Brahmaloka.

SARABHĀNGAŚRĀMA. A holy place. Those who visit the place purify their families. (Vana Parva, Chapter 83, Verse 42).

SARADANĀYANI. A Kekeya King. His wife, Śrutascena was the younger sister of Kuntī. As the couple did not get a child even very long after their marriage, the King got performed, with Śrutascena's permission, the 'Pūnasa-vana' yajña with the result that three sons (Durjaya and others) were born to them. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 111).

SARADVĀN. A muni, the son of Gautama. From his very infancy he preferred learning the dhanurveda (science of archery) to the other Vedas. While a brahmācārin (Religious student) he performed tapas and secured divine arrows. Afterwards, having been overcome by the charms and appeals of an apsārā woman named Jānapati, Saradvān had seminal emission from which were born Kṛpa and Krpī. (For details see under Kṛpa).

SĀRADVATI. An apsārā woman. She attended the birthday celebrations of Arjuna.

SARAGULMA. A monkey in Rāma's army. (Vālmiki Rāmāyaṇa, Kiskindhā Kapāla, 41, 3).

SARAKATĪRTHA. A famous sacred place in Kuruksetra. He who takes his bath here on Caturdasī day of the dark half and worships Siva will have all his desires fulfilled and will attain heaven. (Vana Parva, Chapter 83). Within this tirtha there are a crore of other tirthas called Rudrakoṭi, Kūpakunḍa etc. The sacred place to the east of it is said to belong to Nārada.

SARALOMĀ. A mahārṣi, the father of Dāśūra. Vasistha once told Śrī Rāma the story of Dāśūra to prove that the world is all an illusion.

Dāśūra was the only son of Saralomā, a muni, who performed tapas in the plains of the mountain in Magadhā. Dāśūra too did tapas in another part of the mountain. While the father and the son were living happily the father entered sāmādhī and the son wept over the loss of his father. Then a forest-nymph comforted him with celestial advice.

Dāśūra performed his father's obsequies. He began thinking that the earth was impure and that the top of trees was pure and decided to do tapas in such a manner that he got power to sit on the branches and leaves of trees. Accordingly he made a big pit of fire and began making offerings of flesh cut from his body into the fire. Agniḥagavān (Fire-deity) appeared and asked him to choose the boons he wanted. Dāśūra told Agni as follows: "Oh Lord; I do not find any pure spot on this earth, which is full of created living beings. You should therefore, grant me the power to live on the tops of trees." Agni granted him the boon.

Dāśūra then climbed a big tree in the forest and occupied, without the least fear, a tender leaf at the top of the topmost branch of the tree. He there assumed the Padmāsa (the lotus seat for meditation). His mind was functioning actively as it had not been turned inwards into true knowledge. With his mind in such a state he performed yajña. He continued performing yajñas like gomedha, a vamedha etc. mentally for ten years. Then self-illuminating knowledge arose in his mind. and he saw a beautiful forest-nymph seated beautifully attired at the end of the tender leaf on which he was sitting. She was looking very sad, her head bent down. Dāśūra asked her, who she was so much beautiful and attractive as to evoke love even in Rāma (the God of love). She answered him in a sweet voice as follows: "Very rare desires in life may be got if great men are requested for. I am the forest-nymph of this forest beautified by the tree you sit on and by trees and creepers equally beautiful. An assembly of the forest-nymphs has been held to celebrate a festival for the worship of Kāmadeva on trayodāsi in the śuklapāsa of the month of Caitra. I too went there, and I, who am childless, felt sorry in mind to see the others petting their children on their laps. But, why should I be sad when you, who can give supplicants anything they wish for, are here? You should, therefore, bless me with a child or else I will end my life in fire."

Dāśūra blessed her to have a son within a month. He told her also that it would be difficult for the son to acquire knowledge as he was got on the insistence that she would die in fire unless she got him. He did not grant her request for permission to live with him; he went into the forests leaving her behind him.

The son of the forest-nymph became twelve years old. Then, one day, she took the child to the muni; left it with him and went away. One day the father began telling the son a story, on the top of the tree, and Vasīṭha, who was going by the sky in invisible form to bathe in Kailāsagāgā, heard the story. Vasīṭha hid himself on the tree and listened to the story.

It was the story of king Svottha that the muni was telling his son as follows:—"He was famous for his noble qualities and unique prowess. He possessed three bodies, which possessed capacity to rule the country. One of the three bodies was the best, the other midway between good and bad and the third bad. The very origin of the King was in the wide and extensive sky; like birds he lived in the sky. He built a city in the sky with fourteen streets and three divisions or sectors. There were also forests, woods and mountains for games in the city; seven big tanks, wavy-white with creepers of pearl and two lamps, spreading heat and coolness, burning always. The King, who went about all his time in this vast city, built in it many movable inner dwellings, and they were divided between the upper and lower parts of the city. They were thatched with a kind of black grass. Each inner house had nine doors, some of them windows, which admitted air always. In each house five lamps burned, the lamps resting on three pillars and a white piece of wood. Each house was glitteringly plastered and had courtyards. A particular sect of bhūtas, who ever feared fire, guarded the houses. When the houses created thus by magic moved from one place to another, King Svottha enjoyed, like birds in nests, playing various games therein. The king, who possessed three bodies, used to go out after playing for some time with the guards, and run about like one possessed of a desire to occupy houses, newly built, and then reach the city, which was like a Gandharva city. Frail and unsettled in mind, the king, off and on, developed a will to die, and accordingly he died. Just as waves come up in the sea, the king used to be born again from the sky and to attend to worldly affairs. At times he used to repent and weep over his actions asking himself what he, the fool, was doing and why he should be sad like that. At other times he used to feel elated and enthusiastic. Briefly put, he used to be, by turns drinking, walking, jumping, expanding, contracting, feeling, drowsy and then exuberant. The great and handsome king was actually, like the sea, rendered restless by wind, possessed by various moods.

The father was describing a philosophy of life figuratively to his son, but the boy understood nothing. Then, as requested by the son, the father explained to him the meaning of the story as follows: Svottha was concretised conception born out of the ultimate sky. Conceptions originate and die automatically. The whole visible world is imaginary. The world is there only when there is conception and in its absence no world exists. Brahmā, Viṣṇu, Śiva and Indra are only parts of that conception. It is conception itself, which creates the world of three cities in nothingness or vacuum. On account of the blessing (will) of that fundamental Caitanya (awareness, life) the formless conception attains Brahmānhood (the universal self) and engages itself in the process of creation. The glittering city said to have been created in the sky is the fourteen worlds, the gardens in it are forests and woods, the play hills therein are mountains like the Himalayas, Meru etc. The two eternal lamps of heat and cold of the story refer to the Sun and Moon. The creepers or garlands of pearl refer to rivers. Special gems have been described as tendrils of lotus and fire in the ocean and the seven seas are described respectively as lotus and the seven tanks. The statement that in this three-tiered city the king of conception built play-houses referred to the creation of individual bodies. The houses were connected as those in the upper, middle and lower parts to denote living beings in the three worlds, Devaloka, Manusyaloka and Pātāla. Movement is the journey of bodies due to the flow of Pṛāṇa (breath). Pieces of wood refer to bones and the plastering is skin. Black grass said to have been used for thatching is hair on the head. The nine doors are the nine openings in the body. Windows refer to the ear, nose etc. The hand arms etc. are roads and the sense organs, lamps. The guards, who shut and quit light, are the egos which run away from knowledge and discretion. The king of conception or imagination born from non-materials finds enjoyment in the house of the body, but the enjoyment is only ephemeral. Imagination develops a moment and is extinguished, like the lamp, the next moment. The place or status of conceptions in the body may be compared to that of waves in the ocean. When desire takes place for things conceived it returns to the 'body-house', which is to be born, and it ends or perishes on achievement. Rebirth due to desire (will-power) is never for happiness, but is for unending sorrow and pain. The wide world causes sorrow because it is felt to be real. Absence of this feeling ends the sorrow as night swallows clouds. Lamentation is the appeal or expression of the mind remembering forbidden practices in life and ananda happiness, is the proud state of mind remembering noble practices. The three bodies of the king according to the three states—the best or highest, the middle one and the lowest denote the three attributes (Sattva rajas-tama guṇas) Causative of the existence of the world. The lowest of the attributes (tamoguṇa) or conceptions according to them, getting more and more pain-giving on account of uncultured action lead one to lower forms of life like the worm, tree, grass etc. Conception of real knowledge and truth is realisation of duty, righteousness and wisdom. It is next to the state of salvation called Devesvara state. Rājasa (the middle attribute) guṇa functions as material activities in the form of attachment to wife, son, wealth etc. When one has rejected the forms of guṇas (conceptions) and the very conception is thus annihilated, one attains the supreme state. Therefore, Oh! son! you reject all external perceptions, control the mind by itself and completely annihilate all internal and external concepts. Whether you live in heaven, on earth or in pātāla and do intense tapas for thousands of years, unless conception is eliminated you will not attain salvation.

After hearing the above explanation about the illusions in life, from his hiding place Vasiṣṭha went away.

(Jātāyuvișṭha, Canto 17).

Saramā I.

1) General. Bitch of the Devas. Śyāma and Śabala, sons of Saramā, were two prominent messengers of Yama and they possessed four eyes each. The offsprings of these dogs are called Sārameyas. The Rgveda and Mahābhārata contain a story about Saramā curing Janamejaya. (For details see under Sūtrasravas III).

2) Other information.

(i) Saramā worships Brahmā in his court. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 11, Verse 40).

(ii) Saramā is a graha (Evil spirit) of Subrahmāṇya which enters the womb of pregnant women and steals the babies. (Vana Parva, Chapter 230, Verse 34).

(iii) Saramā after having once drunk milk from dasyus lied about it to Indra, and he punished her. (Varāha Purāṇa).

(iv) Indra once deputed Saramā to find out the place where the Paṇīs had hidden the cows on condition that he would feed her children. Saramā found out the place and informed Indra about it thus earning for her children their livelihood. (Rgveda, Manḍala 1, Chapter 5).

Saramā II. Wife of Viśvāsaṇa and daughter of the Gandharva called Sailūśa. Saramā consoled Sitā weeping under the Aśoka tree in Lākā. (Vālmiki Rāmāyana, Yuddhakāṇḍa, Canto 33, Verse 1).

Saramā III. Daughter of Dakṣaprajāpati by his wife Asiknī. She was married by Kaśyapa maharṣi and from her were born the ferocious animals on earth. (Bhāgavata, Skandha 6).

Sārameya I. A King of the dynasty of Bharata. It is stated in Bhāgavata, Skandha 9, that Sārameya was the son of Svavaika. (Śvaphalka).

Sārameya II. The son of the dog Saramā. (See under Saramā II).

Sārameyaśāna. A hell. (See the section Narakā under Kāla).

Sarana. A serpent born in Vāsuki’s dynasty. It was burnt to death at Janamejaya’s serpent yajña. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 57, Verse 6).

Sarana I.

1) General information. A Kaśtriya of the Yadu clan. It is stated in Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 218, Verse 17, that he was the son of Vasudeva by Devaki and the brother of Śrī Kṛṣṇa and Subhadrā.

2) Other details.

(i) This Śarana was one of those who took the dowry to Hastināpura at the marriage of Arjuna and Subhadrā. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 220, Verse 32).

(ii) Sarana shone in the court of Yudhīṣṭhira. (M.B. Sabhā Parva, Chapter 4, Verse 30).

(iii) Sarana participated in the Rājaśīya sacrifice of Yudhīṣṭhira. (M.B. Sabhā Parva, Chapter 31, Verse 15).

(iv) When Śrī Kṛṣṇa went to Hastināpura from Dvārkā to take part in the horse-sacrifice of Yudhīṣṭhira, Sarana also accompanied him. (M.B. Aśvamedha Parva, Chapter 66, Verse 4).

(v) Sarana was the foremost of those who disguised Samba the son of Jāmbavati as a woman, and abused the hermits. (M.B. Mausala Parva, Chapter 1, Verse 15).

Sarayā. A wife of Śurya. (Ṛgveda, 10, 17, 2).

Sarkāri. A monkey, who accompanied Hanūmān to the southern regions in search of Sitā. (Valmiki Rāmāyana, Kiśkindhā Kānda, Canto 44).

Sarasā II. A son of Yadu. He founded the city Krauṇcapura on the banks of the river Venā in South India. (Harivānśa, 2, 30, 27).

Sārāśāna. See under Citraśarāśana.

Sarastamba. A sacred place in ancient times. He who bathes here will attain the state where he is served by apsaras. (Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 25, Verse 28).

Sārasvata I. See under Apāntaratamas.

Sārasvata II. An ancient hermit. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Śalya Parva, Chapter 51, Verse 7, that Sārasvata was the son of Dādhi. Dādhi once happened to see the celestial maid Aṁbaśā and became excited, and seminal discharge occurred to him. The semen fell in the river Sarasvati. The river became pregnant and delivered a child. This child grew up and became the famous hermit named Sārasvata.

After the death of the hermit Dādhi, due to scarcity of rain a great famine occurred which lasted for twelve years. When the famine became unbearable all the hermits on the basin and banks of the river Sarasvati began to migrate to other places leaving all their possessions behind, to save their lives. But Sārasvata alone remained on the banks of Sarasvati, living on fish obtained from the river, engaged in meditation and study of Vedas.

After twelve years the famine ended and the country became prosperous as before. The hermits who had gone to other places began to come back to their hermitages. The desire to study Vedas grew up in their minds. But there was not a single person, well-versed in the Vedas, except Sārasvata. So all the hermits accepted him as their teacher. Thus Sārasvata taught the Vedas to Sixty thousand hermits, who had returned to their hermitages. (M.B. Śalya Parva, Chapter 50).

In course of time the place where the hermitage of Sārasvata stood, became famous under the name Sārasvata tīrtha. Tuṅgaṅgārya is another name of this place. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 83, Verses 43-50).

In ancient days there were two schemes of study known as ‘Kūḍāṇukramapāṭha’ and ‘Sārasvatapāṭha’ for the Taittirīya-collection (Saṁhitā). But today the Kūḍāṇukramapāṭha has become quite extinct. The following is a description, given in Saṁskāratanmālā stating how the ‘Sārasvatapāṭha’ attained so vigorous a vogue.

Once owing to the curse of the hermit Duvvāsas, the river Sarasvati took birth as a woman in the house of a Brahmin, who belonged to the Gotra of Ātreya. Later from that same Brahmin she conceived and gave birth to a son named Sārasvata. The river Sarasvati herself, taught her son the Vedas completely, and then sent him to Kurukṣetra to do penance. As a result of the penance Sarasvata got an original Kramapātha (serial lessons) of the Taitтриya samihātī. He taught those serial lessons to his disciples. In course of time these serial lessons got the name Sarasvatapātha, which earned metaphysical and philosophical importance.

SARASVATA III. A hermit who lived in the western regions. It is stated in Mahābhārata, Śānti Parva, Chapter 201, Verse 30, that this Sarasvata was the son of the hermit Atri.

SARASVATA IV. Mention is made in Padma Purāṇa, Svargakhaṇḍa, about another hermit Sarasvata, who taught the Vedas to several disciples in Tūrākāraṇya.

SARASVATA V. The people who lived in a particular region of Western Bhārata. (Bhāgavata, Skanda 9).

SARASVATI I. Goddess of learning.

1) Birth. Sarasvati is the daughter of Brahmā. Kāmadēva was born from Brahmā’s heart; Krodha (anger) was born from his eyebrows; Lobha, from his lower lip, Sarasvati, from his face; the Sindhus from his genitals, and Nirṛti, from his anus.

The following story about the birth of Sarasvati is from Brahmāṇḍa Purāṇa, Chapter 43:—

Brahmā got ready for creation, and while in meditation sattvaguna (sublime quality) began swelling up in his mind wherefrom a girl was born. Brahmā asked her who she was. She answered: “I am born from you. You fix me a seat and duties.” Then Brahmā told her that her name was Sarasvati and ordained that she should stay on the tip of everybody’s tongue. You dance especially on the tongues of learned people. You should also exist on earth in the form of a river, and assuming a third form you should live in me too.” Sarasvati agreed to this.

2) Curse of Sarasvati. See under Gaṅgā.

3) Misled Kumbhakarna. When Kumbhakarna requested Brahmā for a boon, Sarasvati, at the instance of the latter, lodged herself in the tongue of Kumbhakarna and made him ask for Nidrāvatva (Sleep), something different from what he really desired to get Viz. Nirdevata (absence of Devas).

4) Received Badāvāgni. (all-consuming fire). Badāvāgni was born at the quartal between the Bhārgavas and Hehayas. Badāvāgni is flames of Ārva, the Bhārgava. (See under Ārva). It was Sarasvati who took the Agni to the ocean. As a result of this, Sarasvati, became a river in India. The story is told in the Sṛṣṭi-khaṇḍa of Padma Purāṇa as follows:—

The world was about to be burnt in Badāvāgni, which originated from Ārva, when Indra requested Sarasvati thus: “Oh! Devī! I you should deposit this agni in the western ocean; or else the world will be consumed in its flames.” To this Sarasvati told Viṣṇu as follows: “I am not a free person. I will do nothing without the permission of my father. Therefore, please think of some other means.”

The Devas, who understood Sarasvati’s nature, went to Brahmā with their case. Immediately he called Sarasvati to him and asked her to deposit Badāvāgni in the western ocean for the safety of himself and the Devas. Unable to disobey her father, Sarasvati, with tears in her eyes, agreed to do so. Then Gaṅgā followed her and she told the former that she (Gaṅgā) would see her flowing northwards when she reached the eastern region surrounded by Devas. Sarasvāti sent back her companions like Gaṅgā, Yamunā, Manoramā, Gāyatrī and Śāvitrī who followed her. Then she appeared at the Āśrama of Utaīlka under the Plakṣa tree in the presence of the Devas. Just as Sīva carried Gaṅgā, the Plakṣa tree bore Sarasvāti and immediately did Sīva give to her Badāvāgni in a pot. Because of his blessing the agni did not burn her hands. She went towards the north with the pot and came to Puṣkaraṇī, and she stopped there to redeem the sins of people. It is believed to this very day that those who drink water from the Puṣkara will attain Brahma-loka.

From Puṣkara Sarasvāti flowed towards the west and reaching a date-garden not far off from Puṣkara it rose up again where Sarasvāti is known as Nandā as well. There is also another reason for the name Nandā. Once upon a time there was a King called Prabhāṇjana. While hunting in the forest he saw a deer inside a cluster of shrubs and he shot an arrow at it. Then the deer told the King: “What a crime is this! You have wounded me, who am feeding my child. I have heard that the King shall not kill a deer while it is engaged in drinking, sleeping or mating. May you, who have done this cruel act, be transformed into a tiger and roam about this thorny forest.” Saying again and again that he did not notice that the deer was feeding its child, the King begged for absolution from the curse. Taking pity on the weeping king the deer told him that he would be redeemed from the curse when he had talked with the cow called Nandā, which would go there after a hundred years.

According to the above curse the king got transformed into a tiger and spent hundred years eating wild animals. After hundred years were over a herd of cows came there grazing under the leadership of a cow called Nandā. Beautiful Nandā used to walk ahead of the other cows and graze alone at a secret place in the forest. There was a mountain called Rohita there, on the banks of the river. The northern side of the mountain was a dense forest infested by cruel animals. There lived there a very cruel and terrible tiger as big as a mountain. A generous person called Nanda was feeding the cows with grass etc. Nandā, the cow, got separated from the herd and came to the river when the tiger ran after it asking it to stop. Crying aloud the cow said: Oh tiger; I have a child, which has not begun even tasting grass and it is awaiting the return of its mother to the cow-shed at dusk. I shall go and take leave of the child and return so that you may eat me.”

Taking pity on the cow the tiger granted its prayer. It returned duly to the tiger at dusk. The tiger, taken by surprise, by the honesty of the cow enquired of its name, and the cow answered that it was named Nandā by its master, Nandā. As soon as the name was uttered Prabhāṇjana was released from his old curse and he became the former king. Dharmadeva then appeared there and asked her to choose the boon she liked and she replied as follows:— ‘I, with my child, must attain the ultimate place and position, and let this place become a sacred place for munis. Also, let this river Sarasvāti, come to be known as Nandā, by my name.’

Nandā immediately ascended to heaven and Prabhāṇjana returned to his palace. River Sarasvāti came to be called Nandā from that day: After flowing through the above-mentioned date-arden towards the south for some distance Sarasvatī (Nandā) flowed again towards the north. She reached the ocean and deposited therein the pot of Baḍavāgni. (Padma Purāṇa, Sṛṣṭīkhaṇḍa).

5) Sarasvatī as Brahmā’s wife. The Purāṇas mention three wives of Brahmā, Sarasvatī, Sāvitrī and Gāyatrī. But, the three are, according to Matsya Purāṇa, one and the same person. The Matsya Purāṇa mentions:—Brahmā created, from his own effulgence, a woman, who became famous under the names Satarūpā, Sāvitrī, Gāyatrī and Brahmāni. Brahmā fell in love with his daughter and noticing the fact she turned away to the right side of her father. Then did a face appear on his right side. To avoid the amorous looks of the father, she slid off to both his sides, and faces appeared on those sides of Brahmā. Then Sarasvatī jumped up to the sky and a fifth face appeared on his head, turned upwards. Finding escape impossible she yielded to the desire of Brahmā and they enjoyed honey-moon for a hundred years. To them was born a son called Śvāyambhuva or Virāt. At one place in Skanda Purāṇa, Sāvitrī and Gāyatrī are referred to as different individuals. (See under Sāvitrī).

6) Idol of Sarasvatī. Sarasvatī, clad in white clothes, sits on a white lotus. She holds in her hands a string of beads, book and Viṇā. She is depicted in sitting, standing and dancing postures. She is conceived as Śakti related to Viṣṇu as also to Śiva. In certain old works in Bengal, Sarasvatī, instead of Bhūmidevi, is to be seen along with Viṣṇu. Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 50, enjoins that idols of Sarasvatī in temple should hold in its hands book, string of beads and Viṇa.

7) Other information.

(i) It was on the banks of Sarasvatī that Vyāsa performed tapas and Śuka was born. (Devi Bhāgavata, Skandha 1).

(ii) There are various references to Sarasvatī in the Rgveda.

(iii) Sarasvatī shines forth in Indra’s court. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 7, Verse 19).

(iv) Once Sarasvatī advised the muni called Tārksya (Vana Parva, Chapter 185).

(v) During Tripuradahana (burning of the city of the Tripuras) Sarasvatī served as a passage for the chariot of Śiva to advance. (Karna Parva, Chapter 34, Verse 34).

(vi) Muni Yājñavalkya once thought of Sarasvatī and she appeared before him wearing ornaments of vowels and consonants and sounding ‘Om’. (Sānti Parva, Chapter 318, Verse 14).

SARASVATĪ II. River Sarasvatī, flowing through north India is, according to Purāṇic conception, Sarasvatī devī who has assumed the form of a river. (See under Sarasvatī 1). The following information about river Sarasvatī famed in the Purāṇas is from the Mahābhārata.

(i) King Matināra once performed a yajña on the banks of river Sarasvatī. At the close of the yajña Sarasvatīdevī appeared and chose the King as her husband, and a son called Tamsu was born to the couple. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 95, Verse 26).

(ii) River Sarasvatī is one of the seven tributaries of river Gaṅgā and its source is under the Plakṣa tree. One who drinks its water will become free from sin. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 16, Verse 19).

(iii) Sarasvatī worships Varuṇa in his court. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 9, Verse 19).

(iv) The Pāṇḍavas, while travelling in the forest, crossed the river. (Vana Parva, Chapter 5, Verse 2).

(v) Śrī Kraṣṇa conducted a yajña in the plains of river Sarasvatī. (Vana Parva, Chapter 12, Verse 14).

(vi) Kāmyaka forest is on the banks of Sarasvatī. (Vana Parva, Chapter 36, Verse 41).

(vii) It is a holy river. If one bathes in it and worships one’s ancestors one will attain Sarasvatīloka. (Vana Parva, Chapter 84, Verse 66).

(viii) Dadhica had his āśrama on the banks of the river. (Vana Parva, Chapter 100, Verse 13).

(x) The river disappears in Vīṇāsaṇatīrtha and reappears at Camasodbheda. (Vana Parva, Chapter 130, Verse 3).

(xi) It is the source of Agni. (Vana Parva, Chapter 222, Verse 22).

(xii) There are many holy places on the plains of the river. They are described in Chapters 35-54 of Salya Parva.

(xiii) River Sarasvatī once carried Vasiṣṭha in its flow. (See under Vasiṣṭha).

(xiv) Viśvāmitra cursed Sarasvatī. (See under Vasiṣṭha).

(xv) Sarasvatī returned to Dadhica maharṣi the son born to her by him and he blessed her. (Śalya Parva, Chapter 51).

(xvi) Balabhadraṇāma once extolled the greatness of Sarasvatī. (Śalya Parva, Chapter 54, Verse 33).

(xvii) Arjuna appointed the son of Sātyaki as the master of a particular region on the banks of the river. (Mausala Parva, Chapter 8, Verse 71).

SARASVATĪ III. Wife of Manu. (Udyoga Parva, Chapter 117, Verse 14).

SARASVATĪ IV. Wife of Dadhica maharṣi. The couple had a son called Sārasvatī. (Brahmāṇḍa Purāṇa, 101, Verse 9).

SARASVATĪSĀRASAṆAGAMA. The point where Sarasvatī joins the ocean. It is considered to be a holy place. Candra regained his brilliance once dimmed by the curse of Dakṣa by bathing at this holy place. (For details see under Candra IV, Para 6).

SARASVATĪŚAṆAGAMA. A sacred place. Brahmā and the maharṣis once worshipped Viṣṇu here. He who bathes here will attain Brahma-loka. (Vana Parva, Chapter 83, Verse 151).

SARAVANĀ. The place where Subrahmanya was born. (See under Subrahmanya).

SARAVINDU (ŚĀŚABINDU). A famous king born in the dynasty of Bharata, son of Dusyanta. His father’s name was Citarathī. He was a great ascetic and a powerful emperor. (Bhāgavata, 9th Skandha). He had no less than ten thousand wives and laks of children by each wife.

SARAYU I. A river very famous in the Purânas. The most important things associated with the river are given below:

(i) Seven tributaries of Gaṅgâ originate from the golden peaks of the Himalayas and Sarayû is one of them. Those who bathe in the river will be absolved from sins. (Adi Parva, Chapter 169, Verse 20).

(ii) The river exists in Varuṇa's court worshipping him. (Adi Parva, Chapter 8).

(iii) Śri Kṛṣṇa, Arjuna and Bhima, on their way to Girivrajà from Indraprastha crossed this river. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 20, Verse 28).

(iv) It was at Gotāra (or Gopratara) in this river that Śri Rāma drowned himself to death and attained Viṣṇupāda. (Vana Parva, Chapter 84, Verse 70).

(v) This river is the source of Agni (fire). (Vana Parva, Chapter 222, Verse 22).

(vi) Vāstūṣṭha once blocked the course of Gaṅgâ on its way to Kailāsa at Mānasasarovara. But, Gaṅgâ broke the obstruction and flowed on, and Sarayû is the stream that started from there. (Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 155, Verse 23).

(vii) It is one of the rivers to be recrowned both at dawn and dusk. (Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 165, Verse 21).

(viii) The city of Ayodhyā is situated on the banks of Sarayû. (Vālmiki Rāmāyaṇa, Bālakāṇḍa, Canto 5, Verse 5).

SARAYU II. Wife of the Agni Vīra. The couple had a son called Siddhi. (Vana Parva, Chapter 219, Verse 11).

SĀRDÛLĀ. A spy of Rāvaṇa. It was he, who informed Rāvaṇa about the arrival of Rāma. (Vālmiki Rāmāyaṇa, Yuddhakāṇḍa, Canto 30).

SĀRDULĪ. Daughter of Kaśyapaprajāpati by his wife Krodhavaṭī, who had ten daughters including Sārdūlī. Tiger, leopard etc. were born from Sārdūlī. (Vālmiki Rāmāyaṇa, Aranyakāṇḍa, Canto 14).

SARGA (CREATION). Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 20 refers to various sargas as follows.

The first creation is that of greatness (Mahatva) i.e. Brahmā. The second creation is that of tānnātras called bhūtasarga. The third is Vaikārikasarga also called Āndriyikasarga. These three kinds of creation are called prākṛta srṣṭi (natural creation) and that is conscious and intelligent creation. The fourth is mukhyasarga. Mukhyas is mean immovables. The fifth is tīrṣyagoniṃsṛṣṭi. Since it functions side-long it is called tīryakṣrotsas. The sixth is the creation of Uṛdhvāyatsarvas, called devasaarga. The seventh is the creation of arvākṣrotsas, called manuṣaṇasarga. The eighth, anugrahasarga, is both sāttvic and tāmasic. Thus, vaikārtasargas are five in number and prākṛtaśargasya three. The ninth sarga is the Kaumāra sarga, which is both vaikṛta and Prākṛta. The fundamental or root cause of the universe is the above nine creations of Brahmā. Prākṛtaśargasya is of three types, nitya (eternal), naimittika (casual) and dainandina (daily). Nityasarga is the creation after interim deluges.

SARIDDIVIPA. One of the prominent sons of Garuḍa. (Udyoga Parva, Chapter 101).

SĀRIKA. A hermit who was a prominent member of the council of Yudhīśthira. Mention is made about him in Mahābhārata, Sabhā Parva, Chapter 13.

SĀRIMEJAYA. A King in ancient India. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 185, Verse 19, that this King was present at the Śvayamvāra (marriage) of Draupadi.

SĀRĪRA. (BODY). Body is constituted of the five elements, earth, water, fire, air and sky (ether). What is solid or hard in the body is earth; liquid, is water; hot or burning, fire; what gives motion to the body is air and what are pores in the body is sky.

Body is that which exists and functions with the five organs of knowledge eye, ear, nose, tongue and skin, and the five organs of action like Upastha (sex organ), Pāṇi (hand), Pāda (leg) and Vāṇi (speech). The body depends on the six tastes, sweet, sour, saltish, bitter, hot and astringent. (Katu, amla, madhura, lavaṇa, tiktā and kasāyā). The body is composed of seven internal elements (dāhūtas) of seven colours, white, red, dark (black), black and white, yellow, brassy and faint-white (Paṇḍura). Vātāpittakaphās (wind, bile and phlegm) are intertwined in the body. Since the body is formed of vital fluids from the sex organs of the father and the mother it is divyoni (males with male and females with female organs of reproduction). The body exists by four kinds of foods, bhojya, bhakṣya, khaḍyā and lehya. After coitus, within one night, the male and female semen and blood combine into one body in the womb (Kalala). Within seven days it becomes foamy (budbuda). After a fortnight it becomes solid (pīṇḍa) and after one month hard (kṣithā). During the second month the head of the child is formed; in the third month its feet: in the fourth its ankles, stomach and waist are formed. In the fifth month is formed the back (Pṛṣṭha) and face, nose, eyes and ears are formed in the sixth month. During the seventh month life enters the child's body. By the eighth month all the signs of the human being are completed in the child. If the vitality and effulgence of the mother are more than those of the father the off-spring will be female and vice versa; if both are in exactly equal proportions the child will be a eunuch, neither male nor female. If the parents were sad and worried during the time of the mother's conception, the child born would be either blind, lame or a pigmy. If the semen is cleft into two by wind (in the womb) the mother would give birth to twins. In the ninth month the child will be gifted with knowledge and it will remember to what caste it belonged and what all good and evil actions it did in its previous life.

SĀRISRKKA. Son of the bird Mandapa. (See under Khaṇḍavaddāha, Para 8).

SĀRNJAYA. A Śrījaya King. Mention is made about this King who had been the support of the Bharad-vijās, in Rgyveda, Manḍala 6, Anuvāka 47, Śūka 25.

SĀRKA. A son of King Kuśāmba. Śarka had a brother called Gāni. (Brahmāṇḍa Purāṇa, Chapter 57).

SĀRMĀKA. A famous rural region in the northeast of India. Bhīmasena conquered the region during his triumphal tour. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 30, Verse 13).

SĀRMIṢṬHĀ. Daughter of Vṛṣaparvan, King of the asuras. (For details see under Devayāni).
The following facts about the bow are gathered from the Mahābhārata.

(i) When Kṛṣṇa exhibited his Viśvāruṇa (cosmic form) in the assembly of the Kauravas he had held in one hand this bow. (Udyoga Parva, Chapter 131, Verse 10).

(ii) Kṛṣṇa's Sārīga is on a par with Indra's bow called Vījaya. (Udyoga Parva, Chapter 158, Verse 4).

(iii) Sārīga is one of the three divine bows. (Udyoga Parva, Chapter 158, Verse 5).

(iv) Sārīga was made by Brahmā and presented to Kṛṣṇa. (M.B. Southern text, Anuśāsa Parva, Chapter 141).

SārngaKopākyāna. The story of the Sārṅga bird. (See under Khaṇḍadāhāna).

Sārṅgarāva. A mahaṛṣi. He was one of the officiating priests at the Sarpastrā of Janamejaya. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 25, Verse 6).

Sarpa. A son of Tvāstī. According to Agni Purāṇa the sons of Tvāstī were called Ekādaśaṇu; but according to Mahābhārata, Sarpas is one of the Ekādaśaṇu. Sarpas is the son of Sthānū and the great-grandson of Brahmā. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 66, Verse 2).

Sarpabali. An offering made by Hindus in South India to propitate serpents. Serpents are pleased by songs by Pulluvan and Pulluvattī (Male and female members of a Hindu sub-caste). To draw Kalam (drawings on floor conveying certain esoteric meanings), to make offerings and for the Pulluvās to sing—these form important elements of Sarpabali. The baity has a connection with the story of Khaṇḍadāhāna. The legend behind the baity is that a Pulluvā woman saved Taksaka, who escaped to the ocean after the Khaṇḍa forest was burnt down. Songs by Pulluvan and Pulluvattī are unavoidable items in Sarpabali.

Drawing the Kalam is a very important item in Sarpabali. It is drawn on a platform made of puṭṭumanaṇu (small heaps of earth thrown up by earthworms and termites), the platform being demarcated by four pieces of arecanut wood. The platform is covered with silk and tender coconut leaves are hung all around it. The Kalam is drawn with rice powder, and other coloured powders. The husk of paddy burnt into charcoal is powdered and with it serpents are sketched first on the maṇḍapa (platform). The nāga drawings are tinted with colours. The (colour) powders are collected in coconut shells and sprinkled on the drawings through holes in shells. Pulluvas exhibit wonderful artistic talents in making the drawings.

When the kalam is drawn worship of nāga is begun compulsorily by a male member of the house, and he is technically called 'Kalattil Kaimal'. He has been observing 'vrata' during two days previous to the pūjā (worship). Having taken his bath and wearing an additional cloth across his shoulders (Uttariṇya) he comes with water in a jar. Four lamps should be burning on four sides of the kalam. Also, paddy, rice, tender coconut, milk, fruit etc. should be placed on its four sides. As directed by the Pulluvan the 'Kaimal' conducts the worship by offering flower, water etc. The Kaimal is to sit on each of the four sides of the kalam and do the pūjā. Then wicks (made of cloth) should be lighted, water sprinkled on it and with that the Kaimal should go round the kalam thrice. With the wicks placed on a leaf with paddy underneath it and also with burning camphor he should go round the kalam. Then the Pulluvan playing on the Vina in front and a male member of the house with a vessel containing milk, a female member holding a lamp, two girls holding brass plates and the Kaimal and all of them following the Pulluvan go round the Kalam thrice and proceed to the serpents' temple in the compound, pray and return. After all these persons are seated, the Kaimal washes the feet of and puts flowers on the heads of the two girls, who had held the brass plates; seats them on two pieces of round wood in the kalam. The girls will have mirror etc. in their hands. They should concentrate their eyes on the heads of the serpents. Now begins the Pulluvan pāṭṭu (song by Pulluvan). At the time of the worship they will be beating tunes on a brass pot, music being made on the Vīṇā.

'Pulluvan pāṭṭu' is the most important item in the whole programme. The songs relate to the burning of the khaṇḍa forest, Kāliyamardana (suppression of the nāga king) etc. One Pulluvan sings songs and a second one repeats them. A minimum of two Pulluvans and two females are required for the purpose. As the songs acquire momentum the girls begin to shake their heads and to wipe off the kalam. Then the girls are asked questions and they answer. Within a short time the girls will swoon and fall on the ground. They are brought back to consciousness by water being sprinkled on them and by fanning. This is in general the nature of a Sarpabali.

Sarpadevi. Sarpadevi, also called nāgaṭīrtha, is a sacred place in Kurukṣetra. A bath here is as beneficial as the performance of an agniṣṭoma yajña. (Vana Parva, Chapter 83).

Sarpamāli. A mahaṛṣi gifted with divine powers. He had a talk with Śri Kṛṣṇa on the latter's way to Hastina-pura. (Udyoga Parva, Chapter 83).

SARVĀYATIANA. A sacred forest. Arjuna, in the course of his 'dream-trip' to Kālīśa in the company of Śri Kṛṣṇa crossed this forest also. (Drona Parva, Chapter 80, Verse 82).

SĀŠĀN. See under Saravindu.

SĀṢĀDA I. Son of Vikuṣi, the King of Ayodhyā. Puranājaya was Sāṣāda's son. (Brahmaṇḍa Purāṇa. Chapter 1).

SĀṢĀDA II. A son of Iksvāku. His real name was Viṣvāsva. (For the detailed story as to how 'Viṣvāsva' became 'Sāṣāda' see under Viṣvāsva).

SĀṢĀKA. A caste. Kārṣṇa, during his triumphal tour, defeated the King of the Sāṣākas. (Vana Parva, Chapter 254, Verse 21).

SĀṢALOMA. A King very much reputed in the Purāṇas. He did tapas at Kurukṣetra and attained heaven. (Āṣrama-vāsika Parva, Chapter 20, Verse 14).

SĀṢĀYANA. A sacred place. In the waters of river Sarasvati at this place the full moon reflects in the form of a śāsa (hare). A bath here will make a man as bright and lustrous as the moon. (Vana Parva, Chapter 82, Verse 114).

SĀṢIKĀ. A rural area in ancient India. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 9, Verse 46).

SĀṢIKĀLĀ. Daughter of Subhā, King of Kāśī. She was married by a prince Sudarśana who had been driven out of his kingdom by Yudhājīt. As she became a young woman Sāṣikālā heard about Sudarśana, who lived in the forest with his mother and fell in love with him. One night Devī appeared in dream to her and told her that marriage with Sudarśana would take place, and at those words of Devī she awoke from sleep and began laughing. Though her mother asked Sāṣikālā about the reason for her laughing thus, she answered not, but continued laughing. One day while she was picnicking in the Cempaka forest, an old brahmin came there and described to her about the great personality and beauty of Sudarśana, who then was staying with his mother at Bheradvājārama. Sāṣikālā's heart yearned to be with Sudarśana.

Sudarśana, after the death of his father Dhrūvasandhi, lived with his mother Manorāma and her father. But, Yudhājīt killed Manorāma's mother also. It was after this that Sudarśana and his mother took refuge in the āśrama of Bheradvājārama. One of those days, Niṣāda, King of Śrīgverapura and a friend of Sudarśana's father (Dhrūvasandhi) came to Bheradvājārama and presented a chariot, which possessed mysterious powers, to Sudarśana. The munis were pleased at this and imparted to Sudarśana the Kāmarājamantra, which gave one who practised it all that one desired, and after the above incident Sudarśana began slowly to come out of the āśrama. He went about the forests in the chariot presented by Niṣāda, and he was astonished to find many an armed soldier surround him wherever he went. This happened because of the mysterious powers of the chariot.

It was at this time that King Subhā decided to conduct the Svayamvara of his daughter Sāṣikālā. Kings from all lands came. Sāṣikālā told her mother in secret about her desire to marry Sudarśana, and the mother in turn told about this to the father. But, he was not for it. Then Sāṣikālā sent a messenger secretly to Sudarśana to request him to be present at the Svayamvara, and Sudarśana and his mother started for the palace of the King of Kāśī and when they reached it, kings like Yudhājīt had already come there. A rumour was spread that Subhā, insultingly ignoring all the crowned heads, was going to marry his daughter.
to Sudarśana, a mere beggar. The assembled Kings, therefore, got themselves ready to pick a row with Subāhu, but, he pacified them with the assurance that the Swayamvara of Saśikālā would formally be conducted and her husband could then be selected by herself. That night Saśikālā’s parents tried their best to divert her heart away from Sudarsana, to no purpose and the same night she was duly married to him. By the next morning news about the marriage became public and all the Kings, who had come for the Swayamvara decided in conference to kill Sudarśana on his way back home with his wife, and abduct Saśikālā. Accordingly on the fourth day after the wedding when Sudarśana and Saśikālā were returning to Ayodhya escorted by the army allotted to them by Subāhu, King Yudhājīt and his followers attacked them from their hiding place. In the battle that ensued Devī appeared and helped Sudarśana, who defeated the enemies. People of Ayodhya received with enthusiasm the victorious Sudarśana and he was crowned their King. In later years he became famous as emperor Sudarśana.

ŚASTA. The presiding deity (idol installed) in the Sabarimala temple.

1) Birth. Sīva fell in love with Mahāvisuṣu in his assumed form as Mohini and Sāstā was the result of their union. (Kambārāmyaṇa, Bālakanda). This story occurs in the 8th Skanda of Bhāgavata and the Asura kāṇḍa of Skanda Purāṇa, but only the Skanda Purāṇa refers to the child by name Sāstā.

2) Other information.

(i) In the battle between Indra and the asura called Śūrapadma the former deputed Sāstā for the protection of Śaṭidevi. (Skanda Purāṇa, Asura Kāṇḍa).

(ii) Sāstā is supposed to have two wives called Purāṇā and Puṣkālā and a son called Sātyaka. (Aṣṭottarasātakam about Sāstā; also see under Sabarimala).

ŚAṢṬHIDEVI.

1) General. A Devī bornout of 1/6 part of original nature (Mūlapārakṛtī). Since she was born out of 1/6 part, she is called Saṣṭhīdevī. Also called Devasenā, Saṣṭhīdevi is the patron-devi of children. She grants them life. She protects them as the real mother and always remains by their side. She has earned Siddhis by the practice of yoga, is the best among the aṣṭamātrṛs (eight mothers) and is the wife of Subrahmanyāṇa.

2) Blessings of the Devī. She is foremost among the devīs, who bless children. There is a story in the ninth canto of Devī Bhāgavata revealing the importance of Saṣṭhīdevi.

Though Priyavrata, son of Svāyambhuva Manu was at first averse to marriage he, at last, married, on the insistence of Brahma, a woman called Mālini. For long he had no issues and sad at heart he got a putrakāmeṇṭi yajña performed by Kaśyapaprajapati as a result of which Mālini got pregnant, and delivered in the twelfth year. But, the child was still-born and Priyavrata set out with the corpse for the burning ghat. But, he could not make up his mind to give it up and so decided himself also to court death. Then he saw a divine plane stop there with a woman in it, who spoke to him as follows: “I am Devasenādevī, the mental daughter of Brahma and wife of Skandadeva. It is I, who grant son to the sonless, wife to the wifeless, husband to the husbandless, wealth to the poor and the results of their actions to all.” So saying the Devī took from Priyavrata the corpse of his child and brought it back to life.

ŚAṢṬHIHRADĀ. A sacred place. Bathing here is more beneficial than giving away food. (Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 25, Verse 36).

SAṢOLUKAMUKHI. A female attendant of Subrahmanyāṇa. (Salya Parva, Chapter 46, Verse 22).

SĀVYA. An ancient King in Bhārata. It is said in Mahābhārata, Sabhā Parva, Chapter I, Verse 17, that thin King remains in the palace of Yama and glorifies him.

SĀTA. A great yakṣa friend of Vaiṣravaṇa. (See under Dipakarni for the story about how Sāta became a cursed Yakṣa).

SĀTABALĀ. A peepal tree on the peak of mount Kumuda. From the branches of the tree milk, butter-milk, ghee, juice of Sugar-cane etc. descend carrying with them divine rice, clothes, ornaments etc. to the Kumuda mountain and flow in rivers towards the north. The people in those places get their rice, clothes ornaments etc. from the river. Māṅkṣidevi praised by Devas has her abode here. Those who drink milk etc. flowing in the river will not be affected by hunger, thirst and signs of old age. Nor will any danger overtake them. They will live long. (Devī Bhāgavata, 8th Skanda).

SĀTABALI. A great monkey under the leadership of Sugrīva. He was the leader of the monkeys deputed to the northern regions to look for Sīṭā. (Vālmiki Rāmāyaṇa, Kiṃkhandā Kāṇḍa Canto 43).

SĀTABHISAK. A star. He who gives gifts of fragrant materials like sandalwood on the day of this star will, after death, live with the apsaras and enjoy fragrant smell. (Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 64, Verse 30).

SĀTACANDRA. A brother of Śaṅkūti. In the battle of Kuruṣetra he fought on the side of the Kauravas and got defeated by Bhīma. (Drona Parva, Chapter 157, Verse 23).

SĀTADHANUS (ŚATADHANVĀ). A Yadava king. (For details see under Kṛtavarmā Para 2).

SĀTADRŪ. The Purāṇic name of the Indian river now called Sutlej. Grief-stricken over the death of his son, Vaiṣiṣṭha once jumped into this river, which, realising that the maharshi was as powerful as fire, divided itself into many branches and flowed in various directions, and hence the river came to be known as Śatadrū. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 176, Verse 8). Once in talking about sublime rivers to Sīva, Pārvatī mentioned this river also. (Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 146, Verse 18).

Śatadrū is also one of the ten rivers referred to in the Rgveda.

SĀTADYUMNA. A King in ancient India, son of Cakṣuṣa Manu by his wife Nadvāla. (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Part I, Chapter 13). Nadvāla had ten brilliant sons including Śatadhyumna. Śatadhyumna once gifted away a house of gold to the brahmin called Mudgala and thereby attained heaven. (Śānti Parva, Chapter 234, Verse 32).

SĀTAKANṬA. A female attendant of Subrahmanyāṇa. (Salya Parva, Chapter 46, Verse 11).

SĀTARHADĀ. Mother of the Rakṣasa called Virādhā. His father’s name was Jaya. (Vālmiki Rāmāyaṇa, Aranyakāṇḍa).
SATAJIT I. A King of the Yādava dynasty. Satajit, son of Sahasrājit, had three sons called Mahāhaya, Venuhaya and Hehaya. (Bhāgavata, 9th Skandha).

SATAJIT II. Son of Śrī Kṛṣṇa by Jambavatī. Satajit met with his death in the quarrels among the Yādavas at Prabhāsatirtha. (Bhāgavata, 9th Skandha).

SATAYOTI. Son of King Subhṛat. The King had one lākha sons. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 1, Verse 44).

SATARUDRA. See under Mandakariṣṭi.

SATARUDRA II. Son of King Pūrnottāsāga. He ruled the country for fifty-six years. (Matsya Purāṇa).

SATARIṢI. Another form of Devī. (For details see under Durgama).

SATAKUMBA. A sacred river, considered to be the source of agni. (Vana Parva, Chapter 222, Verse 22).

SATACALANA. A warrior of Subrahmaṇya. (Salya Parva, Chapter 45, Verse 60).

SATAMUKHA I. (SATAMUKHA RĀVANA). Father of Indumukhi, the wife of Sahasramukha Rāvana. Satamukha had defeated Pātāla Rāvana in battle. He gave the eternal weapon called Kaṭhorakūṭhāra as dowry for his daughter's wedding. (See under Sahasramukha Rāvana).

SATAMUKHA II. An asura, a great devotee of Śiva. He did very intense tapas for hundred years making offerings of his flesh in the fire. Śiva, who was pleased with his tapas, granted him many boons. (Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 45, Verse 58).

SATĀNANDA I. Priest of King Janaka. He was the son of Gautama by Ahalyā. (Bhāgavata, 9th Skandha and Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 278). Satānanda felt elated that Śrī Rāma restored to Ahalyā her old sanctity and also that his father Gautama received back his mother and lived with her. It was Satānanda, who acted as high-priest at the wedding of Sitā with Rāma.

SATĀNANDA II. A māhārṣi, who possessed divine gifts. He once paid a visit to Bhīṣma. (Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 26, Verse 8).

SATĀNANDĀ. A female attendant of Subrahmaṇya. (Salya Parva, Chapter 46, Verse 11).

SATĀNIKA I. A King born in the dynasty of Yayāti. He was the son of Bhṛḍrātra and father of Durdama. (Bhāgavata, 9th Skandha).

SATĀNIKA II. Son of Nakula. The Mahābhārata contains the following information about this Satānika.
(i) To Nakula was born of Draupadī a son called Satānika. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 63, Verse 123).
(ii) This Satānika was born from an aspect of Viśvadeva. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 67, Verse 127).
(iii) Once upon a time there was in the Kaurava dynasty a Rājārṣi called Satānika and it was to perpetuate that name that Nakula named his son 'Satānika'. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 220, Verse 84).
(iv) This Satānika defeated in the great war Jayatsena, Dūṣkarna and Citrasena. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 79, Verse 42; Chapter 79, Verse 46 and Drona Parva, Chapter 168, Verse 12).
(v) Satānika fought with Vṛṣasena, Śrutakarmā, the son of Dṛṭārāṣṭra and Aśvatthāmā. (Drona Parva, Chapter 167, Verse 7; Karna Parva, Chapter 25, Verse 13 and Chapter 85, Verse 14).
(vi) He killed Bhūtakarman and the prince of Kalinga in the great war. (Drona Parva, Chapter 25, Verse 23; Karna Parva, Chapter 85, Verse 21).

(vii) He died in the great war hit by the arrow of Aśvattāmā. (Saupānīka Parva, Chapter 8, Verse 57).
(viii) He is referred to by the following names also in the Mahābhārata, viz. Nakulaputra, Nakuladāyāda, Nakul.

SATĀNIKA III. A prince born as the son of Jamne-jaya (Pariṣiṣṭi's son) of his wife called Vapuṣṭāmā. He married the princess of Videha and to the couple was born a son called Aśvameghadatta. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 96, Verse 88). He had also another son named Sahasrānīka. (Kathāsaritarāṣṭra). (See under Udayana).

SATĀNIKA IV. A well-known Rājārṣi born in the Kuru dynasty. It was to perpetuate his name that Nakula called his son Satānika. (Vana Parva, Chapter 220, Verse 84).

SATĀNIKA V. A brother of Virāṭa, the King of Mātśya. He was called Śrīyadatta too. Further he was the commander-in-chief of the army of Virāṭa. When Virāṭa's cows were lifted by the Kauravas, Satānika went to war against them along with the Trigartas, who wore golden helmets on their heads. (Virāṭa Parva, Chapter 31). He was an ally of the Pāṇḍavas in the great war. He was wounded in the war by Bhīṣma and killed by Śalya. (Drona Parva, Chapter 167, Verse 30; Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 118, Verse 27).

SATĀNIKA VI. Younger brother of the Virāṭa king. He was killed by Drona. (Drona Parva, Chapter 21, Verse 18).

SATAPATRĀVANA. A forest on the western side of Dvārakā. The mountain called Sukakṣa is at the centre of the forest. (Sabha Parva, Southern text, Chapter 33)

SATAPARVĀ. Wife of Sukrācārya. (Udyoga Parva, Chapter 117, Verse 13).

SATĀRATHA. A King in ancient India. He lives in the court of Yāma and worships him. (Sabha Parva, Chapter 8, Verse 26).

SATARUDRA. The story of Satarudra was imparted to Śrī Rāma by Vyāsa to show that all life is mere illusion or different complexes of the mind. Satarudrāpyāna is the story of a contemplative sannyāsin. Whatever subject or object he conceived in his mind used to assume its form as water changes into waves, and it was a boon or great asset, which his heart had acquired as a result of its purity. He confined himself to his āśrama and thought about things after the other.

To start with, Satarudra thought to himself that he was a 'dream person' called Jīvāṭa. While picnicking in the streets of a 'dream-built city' the 'dream person' overcame by the effect of liquor remained in an unconscious state for some time. He also felt immediately to be a brahmin learned in the Vedas. 'Jīvāṭa', who transformed himself thus into a brahmin slept during day-time overcame by exhaustion on account of work. At once he dreamt himself to have been transformed into a feudal lord or tributary king, who, after taking his meals went to sleep when he dreamt that he was changed into a great king. The king, who ruled the country peacefully changed himself one day in dream into a celestial woman. The next dream was that the woman, while in deep sleep after a hilarious sexual act, was turned into a she-deer. The she-deer, in dream turned into a creeper, and it duly bore leaves, flowers and fruits. The creeper felt that it entwined and climbed some trees. Then he (Jiva) went into deep sleep, absolutely unaware of himself, for some time. Then he dreamt himself to have changed into a beetle. The beetle felt attracted towards a lotus flower and got captured therein. An elephant from the forest nearby entered the 'lotus pond', plucked and tore into pieces the lotus flower. As the beetle had got fixed in its mind and imagination the picture of the elephant it became a tuskier elephant after its death. While roaming about in the forest the elephant fell into a deep pit and the King's men captured and listed it in the army. A number of beetles gathered round the elephant to suck its ichor (madajala). Because it thought about the beetles the elephant, after its death in battle, again became a beetle, which imagined about the swan in the lotus-pond. The beetle one day got captured in the lotus-flower and became a swan on being killed by the elephant. Thus the beetle, after taking many births and forms, became ultimately Brahmā's vehicle, the swan. While the swan once moved about the surrounding places of mount Kailāsa it saw Rudra and imagining itself to be Rudra (Rudroham—I am Rudra) attained Rudrahood. While living happily with all the paraphernalia of Rudra he remembered his past lives, and wondering about the many continuous dreams of his, in solitude he thought like this:—“The power of Māyā (illusion) which rules over everything in the world is really wonderful. How curious and peculiar is the cunningness or trickeries of Māyā in creating, like mirage, the illusion that things, which did not really exist, existed. Mistaking Māyā or mirage, as the truth and the fact, I roamed about in many a material desert. In one form of life I was born as Jiva in another, King: in yet another, swan etc. and now I have attained Rudra-hood. Hundred Caturyugas and thousand years have passed in this “show” Now, I will return and personally see all past episodes and I shall identify them all with myself after bestowing knowledge on them.

Having made up his mind like this, Rudra descended to the state of the old Sanyāsin. He infused life and vitality into the dead body of the sannyāsin that was there. The Sanyāsin remembered his old illusions and hallucinations. He had attained Rudrahood after crossing various stages from being Jiva. Then both of them together came to the Jiva stage,awoke the ‘dream-person’ by giving him mind and vitality. Afterwards the three of them, who assumed single form by the composition of different personalities, attained various stages like brahmin etc., awoke them too and added them to themselves (the three). Thus there came about to be hundred persons formed from aspects or fractions of Rudra, and at the instance of the real Rudra they returned to their homes and lived there happily with their sons, relations etc. Those hundred persons are the Satarudas. (Jiñānavāśiṣṭha, Satarudropākhyāna). In Verse 13, Chapter 150 of Anuśāsana Parva, Mahābhārata also is found references to the Satarudas.

Satarūpā, Wife of Svāyambhūva Manu, who took his sister Satarūpā herself as his wife. The couple had two sons called Priyavrata and Uttanapāda and two daughters Prasūti and Ākūti. Prasūti was married to Dakṣaprajāpati and Ākūti to Ruciprajāpati. (Viśṇu Purāṇa, Part I, Chapter 7).

Sātasahasrā. A well-known sacred place in Kurukṣetra. Bathing here is productive of the same result as giving away thousand cows. This place is thousand times more beneficial than other places. (Vana Parva, Chapter 83).

Sātasahasrakā. A holy place at Rāmatīrtha on the river Gomāti. He who bathes here and takes food as per śāstraic injunctions will get results equal to those of giving in gift a thousand cows. (Vana Parva, Chapter 84, Verse 74).

Sātāṣirṣ. Wife of Vāsuki, King of the nāgas (Udyoga Parva, Chapter 117, Verse 17).

Sātrānga I. A muni, who lived on Mount Sātṛṅga. It was this muni, who cursed Pāndu that he would die on his coming into physical contact with his wife. (For details see under Pāndu and Mahābhārata).

Sātrāṅga II. A Rākṣasa, who had three sons called Sānyāsa, Vīyama and Suyama. (Śānti Parva, Southern text, Chapter 98).

Sātrāṅga III. A mountain where Pāndu once practised austerities. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 118, Verse 50). The Pāṇḍavas were born here and they were named in the presence of Munis who lived there. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 122). Also, here it was that Pāṇḍu died. Once in the course of a dream-trip of Arjuna in the company of Kṛṣṇa to Kailāsa they saw Sātāṅga also. (Droṇa Parva, Chapter 80, Verse 32).

Sātātapa. Author of a Smṛti in prose and poetry in six chapters.

Sātāvāhana. A King. Guṇāḍhya, author of Bṛhatkathā was a minister of this King. (See under Guṇāḍhya).

Sātavani. A Rājārṣi. His son was known as Sātavaneya. (Ṛgveda, Maṇḍala I, Anuvāka 11, Sūkta 59).

Sātāyupa. A Kekaya Rājārṣi. He abdicated the throne in favour of his son and went to perform tapas in Kurukṣetra forest where he saw Dīṅtarāṣṭra and others and spoke about the rules to be observed in "forest life". (Āṣravāsikā Parva, Chapter 19, Verse 8). His grand-father's name was Sahasracitya (Āṣravāsikā Parva, Chapter 20, Verse 60).

Sātāyus I. One of the six sons of Purūravas by Urvaśī. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 75, Verse 24).

Sātāyus II. A warrior, who fought on the Kaurava side against the Pāṇḍavas. He fought from the 'waist' position of the Vyuha made by Bhīma and courted death. (Bīśma Parva, Chapter 75, Verse 22; Śalā Parva, Chapter 2, Verse 19).

Sātīha. An asura, son of Kaśyaprajāpati by his wife Danu. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 65, Verse 29).

Sātī. A birth of Devi Pārvatī. (For more details see under Pārvatī).

Sakrī. A king of the solar dynasty. It is stated in Bhāgavata Skandha 9, that he was the son of Jayatsena.

Sāndarī. A female attendant of Subrahmanya. (Śalā Parva, Chapter 46, Verse 10).

Satrājīt. A King of the Yadavas. It is mentioned in Bhāgavata Skandha 9, that he was the son of Nimi and the brother of Prasena. (To know the previous birth of Satrājīt see under Satyabhāma). Sri Kṛṣṇa married Satyabhāmā the daughter of Satrājīt. In connection with the jewel Syamantaka, Kṛṭavarmā caused Satrājīt to be murdered. (More details about Satrājīt occur under the entries Prasena, Kṛta-varma, (Para 2) and Satyabhaṃa).

ŚATRUGHNA. A brother of Śrī Rāma. He and Laksmaṇa were the sons of Sūṃtra, and Śrutakirti was his wife. As ordered by Rāma he killed Lavaṇāsura, who lived in Madhu forest, and established there the city called Madhurāpuri. After the death of Śatrughna two sons of his lived in Madhurāpuri, and after the disappearance of the solar dynasty the city went to the Yadus. (For details see under Śrī Rāma and Hanūmān, Para 10).

ŚATRJUJT. A prince, the son of Dhrusvanadhi by his second wife Lalāvatī. (See under Dhrusvanadhi).

ŚATRUMARDANA. The third son of King Rādhya by his wife Madālāsa. (Mārkanḍeya Purāṇa, Chapter 23, Verse 26).

ŚATR∪NAYA I. A Sauvīra prince, who followed Jayadratha with a flag. Arjuna killed him in a battle consequent to the Svayamvara of Draupadi. (Vana Parva, Chapter 271, Verse 27).

ŚATR∪NAYA II. A son of Dhrtrāṣṭra. The following facts about him are gathered from the Mahābhārata, (i) Duryodhana deputed him for the protection of Bhīṣma in the great war. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 51, Verse 8).

(ii) He attacked the five Kekaya kings. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 79, Verse 56).

(iii) Bhīma killed him. (Drona Parva, Chapter 227, Verse 29).

ŚATR∪NAYA III. A warrior and a brother of Karna who fought on the Kaurava side and got killed by Arjuna. (Drona Parva, Chapter 31 Verse 62).

ŚATR∪NAYA IV. Another warrior, who fought on the Kaurava side whom Abhimanyu killed. (Drona Parva, Chapter 56, Verse 181).

ŚATR∪NAYA V. A son of Drupada. In the great battle Aśvatthāmā killed him. (M.B. Drona Parva, Chapter 56 Verse 151).

ŚATR∪NAYA VI. A King of Sauvīra. Kaśika, the son of Bharadvāja, taught him political science and all other cunning ways. (Mahābhārata, Śānti Parva, Chapter 140).

ŚATRUNTAPA. A king, who fought in Duryodhana's army. Arjuna killed him on the occasion when the Kauravas lifted Viśāla's cows. (Virāṭa Parva, Chapter 54, Verse 11).

ŚATR∪SAHA. A son of Dhrtrāṣṭra. Bhīma killed him in the great war. (Drona Parva, Chapter 127, Verse 9).

ŚATR∪TAPANA. An asura, the son of Kaśyapaprajāpati by his wife Danu. (Adi Parva, Chapter 63, Verse 29).

SATVADANTA. A Yādava prince. This Satvadanta was a son born to Vasudeva by his wife Bhadrā. (Vāyu Purāṇa, 96: 71).

ŚATVATA I. A king of the Yadu dynasty and son of Devakastra, Satvata had seven sons called Bhaja, Bhaji, Divya, Vṛṣṇi, Devapṛṣṭha, Antaka and Mahābhoja. Satvata was one of the Satvatas and the men born in his dynasty are called Satvatas. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 2, Verse 30).

ŚATVATA II. Another name of Śrī Krṣṇa.

ŚATVĪKA. A brahmin, who was turned into a Rākṣasa due to a curse after he had entered heaven. His story has been told by sage Saunaka to Bharata, brother of Śrī Rāma. It was Bharata, who led the yājñic horse towards the north in connection with the Aśvamedha yājña performed by Śrī Rāma after he was crowned King. The horse, which started on its journey from Ayodhyā reached, after six months, Hemakūṭā on the limits of India. As soon as it got into a beautiful garden it was rendered stationary as though paralysed. All attempts to make the horse move failed. Saunaka and some soldiers tried to lift the horse by its legs, to no purpose. Hanūmān bound its legs with his tail and pulled, again to no purpose, and surprised at this failure of his he spoke to Śatrughna and others thus. "It was only just now that I pulled out with my tail the Drona mountain so very easily; but this small horse does not stir at all. May be, it is all fate." Following Hanūmān's speech, Śatrughna asked Saunaka the explanation for this state of the matter, but the latter could not find one for it. Then it was decided to find out a mahaśri and ask him for the explanation. The soldiers accompanied by Bharata went in search of a mahaśri, reached Saunaka's aśrama and submitted the case to him.

The mahaśri remained in meditation for some time and the condition of the horse became vivid in his mind. Then he spoke as follows:—"There was once a brahmin named Śātvika in Gauda(?) land on the banks of river Kāveri. Once he began performing tapas. He spent three days. drinking only water the first day, consuming air the next day and fasting completely the third day. He continued his tapas repeating the above course until one day he entered samādhi (expired). He got into a decorated plane sent from Devaloka, went to the peak of mount Meru and thence came to river Jambū, which flowed from the great Jambū tree on the mountain. There in Jambū were many mahārṣis, who had acquired merit by bathing in the golden water of the river, enjoying all comforts in the company of apsarā women. Śātvika, one day, haughty with the thought that he was the master of the mahārṣis, did something which quite displeased the latter, and they cursed him. When he prayed for absolution from the curse they told him thus: "When you parade the feet of Śrī Rāma's horse, you will happen to hear Rāma's story and then you will be redeemed from curse."

On Saunaka informing them thus that it was the brahmin transformed into a Rākṣasa, who had paralysed the legs of the horse, Bharata returned to the horse and recited the story of Rāma and immediately an effulgent person came there in a plane and said, "Oh, intelligent King! I have now heard the story of Rāma and so have become pure; so, please let me go to heaven." After saying this he returned. Bharata and others were pleased to know that the visitor was Śātvika brahmin. The horse became free from its paralysed condition. The party resumed its journey. (Padma Purāṇa, Pātālakhaṇḍa, Chapters 47 and 48).

ŚATYA I. A hermit. Mention is made about this hermit who shone in the court of Yudhishthira, in Mahābhārata, Sabhā Parva, Chapter 4, Verse 10.

ŚATYA II. An Agni (fire). This Agni Śatya was the son of the Agni Niścyavana. He was a worker of Kāla-dharma (The god of Death). He reduces the pain of living beings who are suffering. So this Agni Śatya got the name Niṣkṛti also. This Agni brightens the houses and gardens where people stay. It is stated in Mahâbhârata, Vana Parva, Chapter 219, Verse 13, that this Agni had a son named Svâna.

SATYA III. A warrior who served in the army of the King of Kaliyuga. This warrior fought against the Pândavas in the battle of Bhârata. This warrior who stood as the wheel-guard of Srutâyus the King of Kaliyuga, was killed by Bhîmasena in the Bhârata-battle. (M.B. Bhîşma Parva, Chapter 54, Verse 77).

SATYA IV. A hermit in the country of Vedariba. This hermit who was a brahmin was a believer in ahiṃsâ also. Once he performed a sacrifice without any killing. His wife Puṣkaradhârîni helped him in the sacrifice. Dharmadeva came there in the form of an antelope to test the non-killing principle of Satya. The antelope came near Satya and said: “I am a deva (god) belonging to the Sûkra-clan. I dwell in this forest as an antelope, due to the curse of Dharmadeva. Kill me and complete this sacrifice.” Though Satya heard this, he did not wish to kill the animal. At last the antelope decided to go and walked eight steps and then returned. Due to the delusive arts of the antelope Satya saw there celestial maids and the aeroplanes of Gandharvas. The antelope said that if he was killed he would attain heaven. A desire arose in Satya for killing and forthwith he lost all the attainments he got by penance. (M.B. Sânti Parva, Chapter 272).

SATYA V. Another name of Śrî Kṛṣṇa. (M.B. Sânti Parva, Chapter 342, Verse 75).

SATYA VI. The son of Vitataya, born in the dynasty of the King Vatihavya. It is mentioned in Mahâbhârata, Anuśâsana Parva, Chapter 30, Verse 62, that this Satya had a son called Santa.

SATYA I. A wife of Śrî Kṛṣṇa. Mention is made about this wife in Mahâbhârata, Dâksinâtyapâtha, Sabhâ Parva, Chapter 38.

SATYA II. The wife of the Agni called Śâmyu. So beautiful a woman as Satyâ is said to have not existed in any of the three worlds. Bharadvâja was the son born to Śâmyu by Satyâ. Bharadvâja had three sisters. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 219, Verse 4).

SATYA (S). A group of Devas (gods). This group of devas lived in the third Manvantara. The name of the then Manu was Uttama and the King of the devas was the Indra Suśânti. There were then five Devaganas (groups of Gods) each consisting of twelve devas. Those gaṇas were Sudhâmâs, Satyas, Japas, Pratardanas and Vaśavartis. (Viṣṇu Purâṇa, Anâśa 3, Chapter 1).

SATYABHÂMĀ. The wife of Śrî Kṛṣṇa.

1) Introduction. Once Śrî Kṛṣṇa himself said about the previous birth of Satyabhâmā. There was an occasion for saying that. Once Nârada came from the world of the gods to Dwârâkâ. He had brought with him some flowers of the Kalpaka tree. Nârada gave all those flowers to Śrî Kṛṣṇa. Śrî Kṛṣṇa divided them among his wives, but he had forgotten Satyabhâmā. Being unable to subdue her sorrow and anger, she got into her bedroom and went and sighed and lay there. Śrî Kṛṣṇa came to know of this. He took Satyabhâmā with him on the back of Garuda and went to the world of Gods. They reached there and asked Indra for some Kâhlâra flowers. Indra refused to give. Garuda got ready to uproot the tree. Then Indra wielded his thunderbolt. To honour the weapon thunderbolt, Garuda left a feather of his there and returned to Dwârâkâ. Because of the hitting of the thunderbolt, the peacock, mongoose and jungle crow were born from Garuda. Śrî Kṛṣṇa who won the war, returned with Satyabhâmā mounted on Garuda, to Dwârâkâ. The Kalpaka tree brought from the world of gods, was planted in the garden in front of the palace of Satyabhâmâ. When Śrî Kṛṣṇa and the Kalpaka tree became her own, Satyabhâmâ became proud. At that time Nârada came there. She asked Nârada what she should do so as to have Śrî Kṛṣṇa and the Kalpaka tree with her in all births. Nârada said that, for that, she had only to do Tûlûpuruṣâdâna. She instantly placed Śrî Kṛṣṇa and the Kalpaka tree in the balance and all the things placed in equal weight were given to Nârada himself. Nârada received them and went to the world of Gods. Satyabhâmâ became overjoyed. She asked Śrî Kṛṣṇa, what good deeds she had done to earn so much happiness. Śrî Kṛṣṇa described the previous birth of Satyabhâmâ. (Padma Purâna, Uttarâ Khaṇḍa, Chapter 90).

2) Previous birth of Satyabhâmâ. Towards the close of the Kṛtayuga, there was a Brahmin named Devasârma who was born of the clan of Agni in Mâyâpurâ. This Brahmin was well-versed in the Vedas and the Vedângas. In the old age a daughter named Guṇavati was born to him. He gave his daughter to his disciple Candraârma. Once Devasârma and Candraârma went to the forest to bring Darbha (poa) and Samit (butea). While they were walking here and there in the Mango grove in the Himâlayas a giant closed with them. Because of terror their bodies were stiffened and so they could not run. The fierce giant killed both of them. The escorts sent by Viṣṇu came and took both of them to Vaikûṇṭha. Guṇavati cried aloud when she heard that her father and husband were killed by a giant. She lamented for a long while and then fainted and fell down. When she came to herself she began to cry again. At last she sold the furniture and conducted the funeral rites of her father and husband. After that she lived by manual labour. She observed fast and the vow of Kṛtikâ and Ekâdaśi.

Guṇavati, who was weak and lean because of old age and fever once walked slowly to the river Ganges to bathe. When she got into the river she shivered because of cold. Then an aerial chariot came down from the sky. The messengers of Viṣṇu took her in the chariot, to Vaikûṇṭha. The celestial maids fanned her with the whisk of yak. After this Mahâvîṣṇu incarnated as Śrî Kṛṣṇa to destroy the wicked. Those who were the dependants of Viṣṇu in Vaikûṇṭha took birth in Dwârâkâ. Devasârma the father of Guṇavati took birth as Satrâjit. Candraârma became Akûra. Guṇavati became Satyabhâmâ. Because of the goodness earned by the fast of Kṛtikâ, she had become the beloved one of Viṣṇu. Because she made a grove of holy basil (tulasî) at the gate of Viṣṇu in the previous birth the Kalpaka tree came to her garden in this birth. Because she lighted lamps in Kârttika, month Mahâlaksmi lives permanently in her house. Because she did fast and vow in Kârttika imagining Viṣṇu as her husband, she became the wife of Śrî Kṛṣṇa in this birth. (Padma Purâna, Uttarâ Khaṇḍa, Chapter 91).
3) Family life. See under Kṛṣṇa, Para 16 and Naraka Para 4).
4) Other details.
   (i) The sons Bhima and others were born to Śrī Kṛṣṇa by Satyabhāmā. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 276).
   (ii) Narakāsura stole the ear-rings of Aditi, the mother of the devas. Śrī Kṛṣṇa and Satyabhāmā went to fight with Narakāsura. They killed him and recovered the ear-rings and gave them back to Aditi. At that time Aditi blessed Satyabhāmā thus: “Till Śrī Kṛṣṇa forgives his body you will not be affected by old age. Moreover you will always have a divine fragrance and good qualities.” (M.B. Sañhā Parva, Chapter 38).
   (iii) Satyabhāmā had a beautiful white palace in Dvārakā. The steps of the palace were paved with jewels. To those who pass over its steps, hot season will appear to be cold. (M.B. Dākṣiṇāyaṇa Pāṇḍa, Sañhā Parva, Chapter 38).
   (iv) When the Pāṇḍavas were living in the Kāmīyaka forest at the time of their forest life, Śrī Kṛṣṇa and Satyabhāmā paid them a visit. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 183, Verse 11).
   (v) At this time Satyabhāmā asked Pāñcālī about the means and ways to bring the husband over to her side. (M.B. Mañasala Parva, Chapter 5, Verse 13).
   (vi) When Arjuna came to Dvārakā, after Śrī Kṛṣṇa had forsaken his body, Satyabhāmā lamented with the other queens for a long time. (M.B. Mañasala Parva, Chapter 7, Verse 74).
   (vii) After this Satyabhāmā went to the forest for penance. (M.B. Mañasala Parva, Chapter 7, Verse 74).

SATYADEVA. A prominent warrior of the army of Kaliṅga. He took part in the Bhārata-battle and served as the guard of the wheel of King Śrutāyus of Kaliṅga and was killed by Bhūmasena. (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 54, Verse 74).

SATYADEVI. The daughter of King Devaka. This Satyadevi was one of the seven wives of Vasudeva. (Matsya Purāṇa, 44, 75).

SATYADHARMA I. A king of the lunar dynasty. He was a helper of Yudhiṣṭhira. (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 141, Verse 25).

SATYADHARMA II. A brother of Śuṣṭiṁa, the King of Trigarta. Arjuna killed him in the Bhārata-battle. (M.B. Śanti Parva, Chapter 26, Verse 36).

SATYADHṛTI I. A son of Satānanda. It is mentioned in Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 278, that this Satyadhṛti had two children called Kṛṣṇa and Kṛṣṇa.

SATYADHṛTI II. A warrior who fought in chariot on the side of the Pāṇḍavas in the Battle of Bhārata. The following information is given about him in Mahābhārata.
   (i) Bhīṣma considered Satyadhṛti as one of the prominent fighters in chariots. (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 17, Verse 18).
   (ii) This Satyadhṛti had been present at the Svayamvara marriage of Draupadi. (M.B. Ádi Parva, Chapter 185, Verse 10).
   (iii) This Satyadhṛti who was the son of Sucitra continued helping Ghaṭotkaca the son of Hitimbi, during the battle of Bhārata. (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 93, Verse 13).
   (iv) Satyadhṛti was an expert in the wielding of all weapons, especially in archery. He was a scholar in the Vedas and Vedāṅgas. (M.B. Drūṇa Parva, Chapter 23).

(v) In the Bhārata-battle he was killed by Dronācārya. (M.B. Karna Parva, Chapter 6, Verse 34).

SATYADHṛTI III. The son of the King Śatya. In the Bhārata-battle he fought on the side of the Pāṇḍavas against the Kauravas. (M.B. Drūṇa Parva, Chapter 23, Verse 56).

SATYAHITA. A king of the Pūru dynasty. He was son of Śrīnavana and the father of Sudhanva. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 278).

SATYAJIT I. A king belonging to the dynasty of Yayāti. He was the son of Sunita and the father of Kṛṣṇa. (Bhāgavata, Skanda 9).

SATYAJIT II. A brother of Drupada, the King of Pāṇcāla. He appears in the story of Mahābhārata for the first time at the battle between Drupada and Arjuna. When the education of the Kauravas and the Pāṇḍavas was over, Drūṇa asked his pupils to bring Drupada tied as teacher’s gift. An attempt was made to bring Drupada before Drūṇa, in which attempt Drupada and Arjuna confronted each other. In this fight it was Satyajit who stood as the right hand of his brother Drupada. (M.B. Ádi Parva, Chapter 137, Verse 42).

Arjuna defeated this Satyajit. Immediately Satyajit ran away from the battle-field.

After the marriage of Pāñcālī, Pāṇḍavas and Drupada became relatives. With this Satyajit also came to be on good relation with the Pāṇḍavas. In the battle of Bhārata this Satyajit was the bodyguard of Yudhiṣṭhira. (M.B. Drūṇa Parva, Chapter 17). In the battle which followed Drūṇa killed Satyajit. (M.B. Karna Parva, Chapter 6, Verse 4).

SATYAKA. A king of the Yādava clan. He was the father of Satyaki. Satyaka also took part in the festivals conducted on the Raivata-mountain by Śrī Kṛṣṇa and the others. It is stated in the aśvamedha Parva, Chapter 62, Verse 6, that Satyaka conducted offerings to the manes in respect of Abhimanyu.

SATYAKĀMA (SATYAKĀMA JĀBĀL). A noble hermit. There is a story as given below, in the Chāndogya-paniṣad about the greatness of this hermit.

As his father died in his boyhood, Satyakāma was brought up by his mother Jābālī. When it was time to begin education, the boy told his mother, “Mother, I would like to be educated under a teacher, in the Vedas. But I don’t know what clan I belong to. What answer shall I give, when the teacher asks me about my clan?” His mother Jābālī replied, “I also do not know much about the clan of your father who married me when I was a girl. From that day onwards I was engaged in house-keeping. I did not ask your father about the clan. In my younger days I gave birth to you. Shortly after that your father died. Tell your teacher that you are Satyakāma the son of Jābālī.”

Having heard this Satyakāma went in search of a teacher. At last he reached the hermitage of the sage Gautama and told him every thing. The hermit was attracted by his truthfulness and behaviour. Believing that Satyakāma was a Brahmin boy, Gautama accepted him as a disciple. The hermit entrusted the boy with four hundred lean cows to look after. The boy accepted the work, and said to the hermit, “When this becomes a group of thousand fat cows, I will bring them back.” He lived in the forest looking after the cows. The Devas sympathised with him. Vāyu (wind), the Sun, Agni (fire) and Prāṇa together gave him divine knowledge and wisdom. After this Satyakarma returned to the hermit Gautama with thousand fat cows. Seeing the boy whose face shone with the light of God, the hermit was amazed. "Who gave you divine knowledge?" asked the hermit. Satyakarma told the hermit all that took place. Fully satisfied with the boy, Gautama imparted to him knowledge about the universal Soul (Paramātmā) and Satyakarma became a noble hermit.

Satyakarma got several disciples of whom Upakosala was prominent. For twelve years he served his teacher and kept up the fire in the firepit for burnt offering, without being distinguished throughout the twelve years, and worshipped the fire god. Yet the teacher did not impart knowledge to him. The teacher's wife recommended to her husband that Upakosala should be given learning. But the teacher was silent. Upakosala took a vow and fast before the burnt-offering fire pit. Agni Deva felt pity for him and informed him that God is all-pervading and that his teacher would show him the way to God. When he came to the teacher, his face was seen shining. Satyakarma asked Upakosala for the reason. Upakosala told the teacher what the fire god had told him. Immediately Satyakarma taught his disciple the path of yoga (union) by knowledge of the Sāṅkhya.

SATYAKARMA I. A king of the family of Bharata. He was the son of Dhrṣṭavrata and the father of Anuratha. (Bhāgavata, Skanda 9).

SATYAKARMA II. The brother of Suśarmā the king of Trigarta. Though he took a vow in the Bhārata battle that he would kill Arjuna, what happened was that he was killed by Arjuna. (M.B. Drona Parva, Chapter 17, Verse 17; Sālya Parva, Chapter 27, Verse 39).

SATYAKETU I. A king of the Solar dynasty. He was the son of Dhrṣṭaketu and the father of Dhrṣṭaketu. (Bhāgavata, Skanda 9).

SATYAKETU II. A king of Pāncāla. Mention is made in Brahmāṇḍa Purāṇa, Śloka 73, of a Pāncāla King Satyaketu who fought with Parasūrāma.

SATYAKETU III. A king belonging to the Puru dynasty. This Satyaketu was the son of King Sukumāra. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 278).

SATYAKI (YUYUDHĀNA). A Yādava, who was a warrior of the Vṛṣni dynasty and a friend of Śrī Kṛṣṇa.

1) Genealogy. Descended from Viṣṇu thus: Brahmā - Atri - Candra - Budha - Purūravas - Ayus - Nāhuṣa - Yayāti - Yadu - Sahasrajit - Saṭajit - Heṇaya - Dharma - Kuni - Bhadracan - Dhanaka - Kṛta-viśva - Kārttaviṇyā - yārjuna - Madhu - Vṛṣni - Yuddhājit - Śini - Satyakā - Śatyaśi. Śīni was the youngest son of Yuddhājit. Śatyaśi alias Yuyudhāna, a companion of Śrī Kṛṣṇa and a great friend of the Pāṇḍavas, was Śīni's grandson.

2) His relation to other prominent Yādavas. The dynasty of Ananitra, first son of Yuddhājit, became famous through Prasena, Saṭajit, Śvaphalaka and Akrūra. Of the four sons of Andhaka, predecessor of Kṛṣṇa, Kukura and Bhajamāna deserve special mention. Ahoka, in the dynasty of Kukura had two sons named Devaka and Ugrasena. Devaki, daughter of Devaka, became wife of Vasudeva and mother of Kṛṣṇa. Karīśa was the son of Ugrasena. Śūra, seventh in the line of Bhajamāna, son of Andhaka had twelve children. His first son Vasudeva was Kṛṣṇa's father. Śrutakirti, Śrutadeva, Śrutadevi and Rājādhidevi the four daughters of Śūra were married respectively by Dhrṣṭaketu, king of Kekeya, Damaghośa, king of Cedi, Vṛṇḍhā-anman, king of Karuṣa and Jayasena, king of Avanti. Dhrṣṭaketu was a great ally of the Pāṇḍavas. Śūrupāla was the son of Damaghośa, and Dantavakra the son of Vṛṇḍhā-anman. Śūrupāla and Dantavakra, the third human incarnation of Jaya and Vijaya were war-crazy and haughty persons. Vinda and Anuvinda, sons of Jayasena, were great friends of the Pāṇḍavas. As Kuntī, daughter of Śūra became the adopted daughter of Ugrasena, she became also the niece of Vasudeva and Kṛṣṇa's father's sister. Kuntī married Pāṇdu and she delivered four sons, Karna, Yudhiṣṭhira, Bhīmasena and Arjuna.

3) Other information I. The following facts about Śatyaśi are extracted from the Mahābhārata.

SATYASRASVAS II. A teacher-priest of the line of the Rgyveda-disciples of Vāśya. He was the son of the hermit Mārkandeya. (Vāyu Purāṇa, 96: 171).

SATYATAPAS (UTATHYA) I. A brahmin boy who was changed into a cobra by the curse of a saint called Godīla. The original name of this youth was Utathya. Later he came to be known as Satyatapas. The story of this Satyatapas is given in Devī Bhāgavata, Skanda 3, as follows:-

In days of old, there was a Brahmin named Devadatta in Kosala. His wife was called Rohinī. Though much time elapsed no child was born to them. At last Devadatta performed the sacrifice called Putrakāmeśti, on the banks of the river Tāmāsa. Several saintly persons took part in the sacrifice. Suhotra was detailed as Brahmā, Yājñavalkya as officiating priest, Brhaspati as sacrificer, Paila to recite Vedas and Godīla to sing Sāman hymns. The singing of Godīla, an expert singer, caused horripilation to everybody in the sacrificial hall. But in the middle of singing he had to take breath, and there occurred a solecism in his voice. Devadatta did not like it. He warned Godīla, who instantly became angry and said to Devadatta. "Since you called me Cobra, the son born to you will become a cobra."

Devadatta became miserable and begged Godīla by holding his feet to pardon him. He gave liberation from the curse that his son would be a cobra and said that he would become a sage.

The wife of Devadatta became pregnant and gave birth to a son. He was named Utathya. In the eighth year, the ceremony of investiture with the Brāhmaṇ string was performed and the boy commenced education. The teacher began to teach the Vedas. From that day onwards the boy became self-conceited. All the attempts made by the teacher to change his behaviour were futile. His father tried the four expedients in vain. Thus twelve years elapsed. The boy did not even learn the evening prayer. Everybody thought that he was a cobra. All scoffed at him. His own people disliked him; with this, self-renunciation took root in his boyish mind and he left his home and went away. He reached the banks of the Ganges and made a hut there and lived there observing rigorous celibacy, and vow of truth. Thus the boy-hermit began severe penance.

He had learned no rites or rituals according to the Vedas. He would rise early in the morning, and after cleaning the teeth he would take a dip in the Ganges waters, without any spells or actions and return to the hut. He would eat anything that came by. He would cause no harm to anybody, though he had no power to do good to anybody. Everybody in the neighbourhood began to realize that he was a boy who would on no account utter falsehood. So all began to call him Satyatapas. Satyatapas had no peace of mind. Life seemed to be a burden to him. He became thoughtful day and night. Thus he spent fourteen years there. People firmly believed in his truthfulness. So they named him Satyavrata. Once a forester came near his hut. He sent an arrow at a hog, which ran into the hermitage with the arrow sticking on its body. Blood was oozing from its wound. The jungle-dweller also came into the hut following the hog. Seeing Satyavrata the man asked "Where is the hog that I had shot?" Satyavrata who knew that killing animals was a sin, kept silence to save the beast. Devi was pleased at the moral courage and truthfulness of Satyavrata. It is said that the moment the hog got into the hermitage, the Sārasvata syllable 'Ā' arose from the tongue of Satyavrata. The moment he had pronounced the rootsound of Sarasvati, 'Ā', by the grace of Devi, he became a poet like Vālmiki. Looking at the forester Satyavrata said:

"Yāh paśyati na sa brūte
Yo brūte sa na paśyati /
Aho! vyādhā, svakāyārthin
Kam prāchasi punaḥ punaḥ //

"He who sees does not speak. He who speaks, does not see. Selfish hunter, whom do you ask again and again?"

When the forester heard these words of Satyavrata, the bow and arrow fell from his hands. With self-renunciation he went away from the hermitage. The fame of the great poet Satyavrata spread everywhere. His father also heard about this from others. He came to the bank of the Ganges and took his son home. Even today Brahmīns sing about the fame of that hermit on the New moon days.

SATYATAPAS II. A hermit. Once he cursed a celestial maid who had tried to hinder his penance, to become a phoenix tree. Later this hermit liberated her from the curse. (Padma Purāṇa, Uttarakhaṇḍa, Chapter 178).

SATYAVĀN I. Husband of Śāvitri who was famous for matrimonial fidelity. (For detailed story see under Śāvitri II).

SATYAVĀN II. See under Rāmbhara.

SATYAVĀN III. One of the commanders of the army of the Kauravas. Mention is made about this commander in Mahābhārata, Udyoga Parva, Chapter 167, Verse 30.

SATYAVĀK I. A son of Cāṅsa Manu. Ten sons including Satyavāk, were born to Cāṅsa Manu by his wife Nādayā (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 18).

SATYAVĀK II. A Deva Gandharva. This Gandharva was the son born to Prajāpati Kaśyapa by his wife Muni. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 65, Verse 43).

SATYAVĀKMĀ. A brother of Śūrāma the King of Trigarta. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 17, Verse 17).

SATYAVĀTI I. The mother of Vyāsa.
1) A short history. Satyavāti was the daughter of the celestial maid Adirākā. Because of a curse she lived as a fish in the river Ganges. Once the semen of King Uparicaravaṇu happened to fall in the Ganges and this fish swallowed it in consequence of which it became pregnant. A fisherman caught this fish and cut it. He got two human babies, male and female from the stomach of the fish. The fisherman gave the two infants to the King who took the male child. This child later became the Matsya King. The female child had the smell of fish. The King called her Mātya-Gandhi (She who has the smell of fish) and gave her back to the fisherman, who took the child to his hut and brought her up as his daughter. As the child was dark in complexion the fisherman called her Kālī. Thus the girl was known by two names Kālī and Mātya-gandhi. Later she got the name Satyavāti also.

The fisherman was engaged in the work of ferrying people across the river. Mātya-gandhi helped her father in this work. She became a full-bloomed young woman. One day the hermit Parāśara came by that way and when he saw Mātya-gandhi, he fell in love with her. She ferried the hermit across the river. In the middle of the river Parāśara created an artificial fog inside which Parāśara took Mātya-gandhi as his wife. From that moment Mātya-gandhi became Kāsturi-gandhi (She who has the smell of Kāstūrī (musk)). Kālī became pregnant and delivered instantly. Parāśara left the place after having blessed her that she would not lose her virginity.

The son born to Kālī, immediately grew up to be a youth. After promising his mother that he would come to her when she thought of him, the youth went to the forest for penance. The name of the son was Kṛṣṇa. This Kṛṣṇa later became famous by the name Vyāsa. Satyavāti again engaged herself in helping her father.

One day Śāntanu, a King of the lunar dynasty came to the forest for hunting. The fragrance of musk emanating from the body of Kāsturi-gandhi spread throughout the whole forest. The King walked on through the forest tracing the origin of the smell of musk and reached the fisherman’s hut. The King fell in love with Satyavāti. The King had a son named Bhīṣma by his first wife Gāṅgā. Bhīṣma made it easy for the King to marry Satyavātī. Two sons Citrāṅgada and Vicitravirya were born to Śāntanu by his wife Satyavātī. Citrāṅgada was killed in his boyhood. Vicitravirya became a youth and married Ambikā and Ambalikā the daughters of the King of Kāśi. Vicitravirya met with untimely death before a child was born to him. When Satyavātī saw that the family was about to become extinct, she thought of her son Vyāsa, who instantly arrived at the palace. From Vyāsa, Ambikā got the son Pāṇḍu and Ambalikā, the son Dhṛtarāṣṭra. Both the sons Dhṛtarāṣṭra and Pāṇḍu got married. Pāṇḍu died. The death of her son struck heavily at the heart of Satyavātī. She did not wish to live much longer after this. She mentioned about the fearful things yet to happen. Then taking her daughters-in-law Ambikā and Ambalikā with her, Satyavātī went to the forest to do penance and finally attained heaven. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 127). (For further details see under Adikā, Vyāsa and Śāntanu).

2) Names Dācyu, Gandhakāli, Gandhavātī, Kālī Satyā, Vāsavī, Yojanagandha and such other words are used in the Mahābhārata as the synonyms of Satyavātī.

SATYAVĀTI II. The sister of Viśvāmitra. (See under Jāmadagni; Para 2).

SATYAVĀTI III. A princess of the country of Kekeya. She was the wife of Triśāṅku and the mother of Harīścandra. (Mahābhārata, Dākṣipātya-tathā, Sabhā Parva, Chapter 12).

SATYAVĀTI IV. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Udyoga Parva, Chapter 117, Verse 15, that one Satyavātī was the wife of Nārada.

SATYAVRATA I. Another name of Triśāṅku. (See under Triśāṅku).

SATYAVRATA II. The Brahmin boy Satyatapas. (See under Satyatapas).

SATYAVRATA III. A son of Dhṛtarāṣṭra. It is seen that he was known by other names also such as Satyasena, Satyasandha, Sandha etc. (See under Satyasandha).

SATYAVRATA IV. Brother of Śūrāma, the King of Trigarta. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Droṇa Parva, Chapter 17, that this cursed warrior took in vain a vow in the battle of Bhārata that he would kill Arjuna.

SATYAYUGA. Another name of Kṛṣṭayuga. (See under Kṛṣṭayuga).

SATYAYUŚ. One of the six sons born to Purūrvas by Urvāśi. The six sons were Ayus, Shrutayus, Satyayus, Raya, Vijaya and Jaya. ( Bhāgavata, Skandha 9).

SATYEŞU I. Brother of Śūrāma the King of Trigarta. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Droṇa Parva, Chapter 17, and Śalya Parva, Chapter 27, that this Satyevus was killed by Arjuna in the Bhārata-battle.

SATYEŞU II. A Rākṣas (giant). Mention is made about this giant who had ruled over the world in ancient days and had to go, leaving this world due to fate, in Mahābhārata, Śānti Parva, Chapter 227, Verse 51.

SATYEYU. A King born in the dynasty of King Puru. This Satyeyu was one of the ten sons born to Raudhrāṣṭra by the celestial maid Ghrītācī. ( Bhāgavata, Skandha 9).

According to the statement that occurs in Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 94, the father of Satyeyu was Raudrāsva and mother, Miśrakesī. The son Satyeyu was born to Raudrāsva by the celestial maid Miśrakesī.

SAUBALA. A Vaiśya. It is mentioned in Devi Bhāgavata, Skandha 2, that King Dhrtarāṣṭra had two wives, one a Kṣatriya woman, named Gândhārī, the daughter of the King of Gândhāra and the other a Vaiśya woman named Saubali, the daughter of Saubala.

SAUBHA. The acral chariot or Vimāna of the King of Sālva. This was also called Saubhanagāra. When Śrī Kṛṣṇa killed Sālva, this Vimāna was smashed by the power of his weapon, the Cakra (Discus). (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 22, Verse 33).

SAUBHADRATIŘTHA. A holy place on the coast of the southern sea. (For further details see under Padmatiṛtha and Vargā).

SAUBHÂGYAGAURI. A particular kind of image of Devi Pārvatī. When the image of this goddess Pārvatī is fixed and consecrated as having the posture with one of the left hands touching the head and shoulder and the other hand holding a mirror, one of the right hands holding fruit and the other one being held high, it is called Saubhāgayagaurī. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 50).

SAUBHÂGYASUNDARI. A feminine form of Nārada. (See under Tālādhvaja I).

SAUBHAPATI. The King Sālva. As he had been in possession of an aerial chariot called Saubha, he is said to have got this name.

SAUBHARÂ. A fire. This āgni (fire) was born from a portion of Varcas. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 220, Verse 6).

SAUBHARI I. A hermit who had performed penance, sitting on the banks of the river Kālindī. (For detailed story see under Garuḍa, para 11).

SAUBHARI II. A hermit who had put up his hermitage on the Vindhyā. At the time of the horse-sacrifice of Yudhisṭhīra, Arjuna called on this hermit Saubhari. On that occasion the hermit told Arjuna about the previous history of Cāndi, who had been cursed by the hermit Uddālaka. It is mentioned in Jaimini Áśvamedha Parva, Chapter 96, that Arjuna later redeemed Cāndi from the curse.

SAUBHARI III. A hermit famous in the Purāṇas. A Purānic story about this hermit’s marrying the fifty daughters of Māndhātā is given below.

Saubhari saw two fishes engaged in coition, while he was doing penance on the banks of the Yamunā. This sight aroused matrimonial thoughts in the hermit’s mind. He instantly approached Māndhātā and informed him of his desire to marry a princess. Māndhātā did not like to give his daughter in marriage to the old hermit. Concealing his thought, he told the hermit as follows:— “Out of my fifty daughters, she who wishes to be your wife, shall be given to you.” Saubhari, who had already read the thought of Māndhātā entered the harem in the shape of a handsome young youth, and all the fifty damsels liked him. Thus Saubhari married all of them, and begot hundred sons of each of them.

This matrimonial life lasted for some time. At last the hermit grew weary of this life. Discarding everything, Saubhari went to the forest. His wives, who also had become disinterested in worldly enjoyment, followed him. (Bhāgavata, Skandha 9; Viṣṇu Purāṇa, 4, 2, 3; Padma Purāṇa, Uttara Khaṇḍa 262; Garuḍa Purāṇa, 1, 188).

SAUNDASA. A King of the Ikṣvāku dynasty. He was known by the name Kalmāṣapāda also. (For details see under Kalmāṣapāda).

SAUGANDHIKA. A flower-garden of Kubera. It is assumed that Vyāu (the wind-god) carried fragrance from this garden and remained in the palace of Kubera, praising him. This garden was full of sweet-scented lotus (Saugandhika-flower). (M.B. Saṁbhā Parva, Chapter 10).

SAUGANDHIKAVĀNA. A holy place. It is assumed, that the gods such as Brahmā and others, hermits, Siddhas, Gārāṇas, Gandharvas, Kinnaras, Big Nāgas, and so on dwell in this place. All the sins of a man are washed away, the moment he visits this holy place. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 34, Stanza 4).

SAUHRDA. An ancient country in South India, famous in the Purāṇas. (Mahābhārata, Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 9, Verse 59).

SAUMADATTI. Bhūrīśravas the son of Somadatta. (See under Bhūrīśravas).

SAUMANASA. One of the eight elephants supporting the globe. (See under Aṣṭadiggajas).

SAUMANASA II. The peak of a mountain. It was on this golden peak, with a girth of one yojana and an elevation of ten yojanas, that Bhagavān Viṣṇu placed the first of his three steps during the incarnation as Śāvana, the second step being on the peak of Meru and the third on the head of Mahābali.

“The is a golden peak called Saumanasa, with girth of one yojana and a height of ten yojanas. It is said that in days of yore Mahāviṣṇu placed the first of his three steps on this peak the second being on the peak of Meru.” Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa. Kiśkindhā kāṇḍa, Sarga 40.

SAUMYAKSADVIPA. An island famous in the Purāṇas (Mahābhārata, Dākinīyapāṭha, Saṁbhā Parva, Chapter 38).

SAUNAKA I.

1) General. A renowned ācārya. He is believed to be the author of the famous works — “Rgveda Anukramani”, “Aranyaka”, “Rkprātiśākhya”, etc. The famous Āśvalayānācārya was Saunaka’s disciple. Ācāryas like Kātyāyana, Patañjali and Vyāsa belonged to his class. Saunaka’s real name was “Gṛtsamadā”. It was because he was the son of Śunaka that he got the name “Saunaka”.

2) Birth. Saunahotra, the son of the sage Saunahotra, once performed a yāga. Indra attended that yāga. At that time Saunahotra rescued Indra from an attack of the Asuras. Indra who was pleased at this, blessed Saunahotra that he would be born in his next birth in the Bhrigu family under the name “Saunaka”.

3) Genealogy. In Vāyu Purāṇa his genealogy is given in two forms.

i) Ruru (Pramadvarā) - Śunaka - Saunaka - Ugrāravas

ii) Dharmavrddha - Śunahotra - Gṛtsamada - Śunaka - Saunaka. (Vāyu Purāṇa, 92, 26).

4) Important works. Saunaka is believed to be the author of numerous works. The most important of them are given below:—

(1) Rkprātiśākhya (2) Rgvedacchandānukramanī (3) Rgvedaryanukramanī (4) Rgveda Anuvākānukramanī (5) Rgvedasūktānukramanī (6) Rgvedakathānu-kramaṇi (7) Ṛgvedapādavidhāna (8) Brhaddevatā (9) Saunakasṛṣṭi (10) Caranavyūha and (11) Ṛgvidhāna. Matsya Purāṇa, Chapter 272 mentions that Saunaka had written a work on the science of architecture.

5) Disciples. The chief disciple of Saunaka was Āśvalāyana. Once Āśvalāyana wrote and dedicated to his Guru (master) two treatises entitled “Grhyasūtra” and “Śrāvastiśātra” to please him. After reading it, Saunaka destroyed his own work on “Śrāvastiśātra”. Āśvalāyana wrote his treatise after having studied the ten works of Saunaka on Rgveda. Kātyāyana, the disciple of Āśvalāyana later received the ten books written by Saunaka and the three books written by Āśvalāyana. Kātyāyana gave his disciple Pataṇjali, the two works, “Yajurvedakalpasūtra” and “Sāmaveda Upagrantha” which were written by himself. From this we may infer that the series of Saunaka’s disciples was as follows:— Saunaka — Āśvalāyana — Kātyāyana — Pataṇjali — Vyāsā.

SAUNAKA II. A Brāhmaṇa who went to the forest with Yudhiṣṭhira. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 2).

SAUNDIKAS. A Caste. Originally they were Kṣatriyas. Mahābhārata, Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 35, Verse 17, mentions that they were debased on account of a curse by a Brāhmaṇa.

SAUPTIKAPARVA. A Parva (section) in Mahābhārata. (See under Bhārata).

SAURABHÉYI. A celestial maid. For details see under Vargā.

SAURABHĪ. A cow which was the daughter of Surabhī. Having drunk too much of cellular honey (āmṛta) which is the essence of the six tastes (ṣaḍrasas), Brahmā had to vomit, on which occasion, the cow Surabhī sprang up from his face. Her milk having accumulated in a low place the milk-sea was formed. The hermits known as the Phenapās live on the shore of the milk sea, the foam that settles on the shore being their food. Around them, there are four cows which protect the four directions. Saurabhī is one of them. She supports the east. Hānisīkā bears the south, Subhadrā the west and Dhenu the north. (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 102).

SAURI. Vasudeva, the son of Śūrāsenā.

SAUSALYA. A country in ancient India very famous in the Purāṇas. (Mahābhārata, Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 9, stanza 40).

SAUSRUTI. Brother of Suṣarmā the King of Trigarta. Sausruti who had fought on the side of the Kauravas in the battle of Bhārata, was killed by Arjuna. (M.B. Karna Parva, Chapter 27, Verse 3).

SAULKĀYANI. A sage who belonged to the series of Vyāsa’s disciples.

SAUTI. A famous son of hermit Romaharsaṇa. The real name of this son was Ugraśravas. This teacher is responsible for the arrangement of the Mahābhārata, in the form that we see today.

The story of Mahābhārata composed by Vyāsā and Vaiśampāyana contained only a graphic description of the battle of Bhārata. No vivid description of Śrī Kṛṣṇa born of the Yādava dynasty and of the Yādavas, was given in it. To remove this deficiency, Sauti added an appendix called ‘Harivaṃśa’ to Śvargaśrota Parva in Mahābhārata. (For further details see under Bhārata 1).

SAUVIRA. An ancient country near the river Sindhu. It is stated in Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 133, that during the period of Mahābhārata, the King of this country was killed by Arjuna.

SAUVIRI. The wife of King Mānasūrya, the son of Pravīra and the grandson of emperor Pūru. (Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 94, Stanza 5).

SĀVARNA I. 1) General. Son of Priyavrata who was the son of Śvāyambhuva Manu, by his wife, Surūpā. Surūpā had ten sons including Śavana. (Devī Bhāgavata, Skandha 8).

2) Birth of son. Savarna married Suvedā, daughter of Sunābha; but he expired before children were born to him. According to the Vāmana Purāṇa, Chapter 72, seven children were born from the dead Savana. The story about it is as follows:— Suvedā, heart-broken at the death of Savana, did not permit the dead body to be burnt, herself holding it in embrace. Then a celestial voice said to her: “Cry not. If you are really chaste and true, enter the funeral pyre along with your husband.” To this Suvedā answered thus: “I cry because of grief that he died before making me the mother of a son.” The celestial voice said to her again: “You enter the pyre without weeping. Your husband will have seven sons.”

Suvedā now permitted her dead husband to be cremated and meditating upon her chastity she jumped into the funeral pyre. But within minutes Savana came alive out of the fire with his wife and rose to the sky with her. He stayed in the sky for another five days and on the sixth day had the sexual act again with her. His semen dropped on earth from the sky. The king then with his wife went to Bramhalaoka.

Samādā, Nālini, Pusyati, Cītrā, Viśālā, Harītī and Alinīlā, all of them wives of munis saw the semen in the sky and when it fell into the water they thought it was amṛta, which conferred eternal youth, and with the permission of their husbands swallowed it. As soon as they swallowed it their divine effulgence was diminished and their husbands, therefore, abandoned them. Those women delivered seven children, who cried fiercely and that sound filled the entire universe. Then Brahmā appeared and asked the children not to cry and also told them that they would come to be called Maruts. Brahmā himself called them Maruts. They were the Maruts of the first Śvāyambhuva Manvantara.

SĀVARNA II. One of the seven sons of Bhṛgumuni, the other six being Cīvayana, Vajraśāra, Suci, Auvra, Sukra and Vibhū. They are called Varuṇas also. (Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 85, Verse 129).

SĀVANTA. A King born in the dynasty of emperor Prthu. He was the son of Yuvanāśva and father of Brhadāvya. (Devī Bhāgavata, 7th Skandha).

SĀVARNĀ. Wife of the muni called Prācīnabhārī. Savarnā was the daughter of Samudra (ocean). (Viśṇu Purāṇa, Part 1, Chapter 14). The couple had ten sons called the Pracetas, and they were very efficient in Dhanurveda. All of them engaged themselves in observing the same dharma (duty) and did tapas for 10,000 years under the sea. (For details see under Prācīnabhārīs).

SĀVARNA I. A hermit. This hermit shone in the council of Yudhisthīra. (Mahābhārata, Sabhā Parva, Chapter 4, Verse 15).
The Karttika taken Sun convention up must the Laksmi that view to because you A Brahma, this do. General one all the considered You the SAVITRI.

SAVARNA I. A Manu. (For further details see under Manvantara).

SAVARNI I. The eighth Manu. (For further details see under Manvantara).

SAVARNYA II. A hermit. This hermit shone in the council of Indra. (Mahabharta, Sabha Parva, Chapter 7, Verse 10). This hermit Savarni did penance for six thousand years in Satyayuga. (M.B. Anusasana Parva, Chapter 14, Verse 103).

SAVITRI. One of the twelve sons of Kaśyapaprajāpati by his wife called Aditi. These sons are called Adityas. So, Savitā also is one of the Dvādaśa Adityas. Viṣṇu, Śaṅkarā, Aryama, Dāhita, Tvāṣṭṛ, Pūṣa, Vivasvān, Savitā, Mitra, Varuṇa, Amśu and Bhaga are the Dvādaśa-Adityas.

Prāśi, wife of Savitā, gave birth to three daughters called Sāvitri, Vyāhṛti and Trāyī and three sons called Agnihotra, Paśusoma and Cāturmāya the great sacrifices. (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Part I, Chapter 15).

SAVITRA I. One of the eleven Rudras. (M.B. Sānti Parva, Chapter 208, Verse 20).

SAVITRA II. One of the eight Vasus. (Mahabhārata, Anuśasana Parva, Chapter 150, Verse 16).

SAVITRA III. A lofty peak of the mountain Sumeru. Jyotiṣka is another name of this peak, which is not approachable. It is adorned with precious stones and is glorified by all. Siva and Pārvatī once sat on this peak and did penance. It was on this peak that Devī Gāṅgā did penance to Siva, assuming a divine figure. (M.B. Sānti Parva, Chapter 283, Verse 5).

SAVITRI I.

1) General information. The daughter of the Sun. This Sāvitri is the elder sister of Tapati. Brahmā married these sisters. It is stated in some Purāṇas that Sāvitri, Gāyatrī, Sarasvatī, all these are one and the same. But there is a story in Padma Purāṇa, Śrṣṭikhaṇḍa, Chapter 17, stating that Brahmā once went to Gāyatrī in the absence of Sāvitri, who got angry at this and cursed all the Gods.

Once Brahmā went to Puskara to perform a sacrifice. Siva, Viṣṇu and all the hermits came there. Everything was ready for the sacrifice according to convention. But Sāvitri, who had been engaged in household duties had not yet arrived. So a priest was sent to bring her. Sāvitri said to the priest, "I have not finished dressing. There are so many things to be done here. Moreover, Lakṣmi, Bhavāni, Gāṅgā, Svāhā, Indrāṇi, celestial women, wives of Rājas (hermits), none of these have arrived yet. How can I enter the hall as the only woman?" The priest returned and reported that it was not convenient for Sāvitri to come just then, as she had so much work to do. Brahmā became angry and said to Indra. "Lord Indra, it is up to you to bring me a wife from wherever you like. But it must be done instantly." Hearing the order of Brahmā, Indra selected Gāyatrī who was a good-natured damsel of a cowherd’s family, and brought her to the sacrificial dais. With the blessings of the hermits and gods, Brahmā held her hand and acknowledged her as his wife.

Sāvitri dressed well, adorned herself with ornaments and reached the sacrificial hall. She saw the marriage scene and became furious. Everybody in the hall held their breath, thinking of the approaching danger. Trembling with anger Sāvitri said "Lo; Brahmā, how is it that you have committed this sin? Have you not married me with fire as witness? I am your wife. Are you not ashamed of this?" The three godheads shivered with fear. Sāvitri cursed everybody. The curse given to Brahmā was that no body should worship him on any other day except the month of Kārttika in the year. She cursed Indra that enemies would enter the world of gods and would make Indra their captive. Sāvitri cried out that Viṣṇu would take the birth of man by the curse of Bhṛgu. She cursed Siva that he would lose his manliness. She gave Agni the curse that he would eat everything and everything without the discrimination of purity or impurity. She cursed the Brahmans that they would, in future perform sacrifice merely with a view to obtain gifts and that they would be wandering about from temple to temple and from tirtha to tirtha merely for gain.

Uttering these words of curse, Sāvitri left the sacrificial hall. Lakṣmi and some other goddesses followed her a little while. Then they begged for permission to return. Sāvitri said to them, "Lakṣmi! You are leaving me. Is it not so? Right. Hereafter you shall be permanent nowhere. May you become the companion of the wicked, the warring, the low-minded, the sinner, the cruel, the foolish etc. Indrāṇi also wants to return. Hear this: Indra will kill Vṛtra and incur the sin of Brahmaḥatyā and at that time Nāhuṣa will capture heaven. Then Nāhuṣa will abuse you."

Looking at the celestial women who were going to the sacrificial hall, Sāvitri said; Look, Ye celestial women. None of you will give birth to child and you will not enjoy the pleasure of nurturing a child. Saying these words Sāvitri left the hall. Not knowing what to do, all sat there. Instantly Gāyatrī rose up and looking at everybody, said as a remission of curses: "I shall remit all curses. Those who worship Brahmā, will be blessed with the pleasure of wife and children and wealth and they will unite with Brahmā. Even if Indra is taken captive, he will be made free by his son and will become the king of heaven. Again, Viṣṇu will rescue his wife and kill the enemy. The phalus will be worshipped in all the worlds. As Brahmans are the gods on earth the gift you take, will be considered your dues. Lakṣmi! You need not worry. Everybody will worship you. He whom you favour will become a well-do-to person and he whom you forsake will become miserable. You Indrāṇi! Because of Nāhuṣa’s arrogance Agasyā will change him to a big python and he will fall to the earth. The celestial maids will have no desire for children. So childlessness will not make you miserable."

By these words of blessings of Gāyatrī, everybody in the sacrificial hall was pacified.

2) Other details.

(i) Sāvitri shines in the palace of Brahmā. (M.B. Sabha Parva, Chapter 11, Verse 34).

(ii) Sāvitri is the sovereign deity of the mantra Gāyatrī. This goddess Sāvitri rose up from the sacrificial fire of King Asvapati and gave him a boon, and accordingly a daughter named Sāvitri was born to the King. This princess was Sāvitri the wife of Satyavān. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 290).

(iii) Siva, on starting for Tripuradāhana (the burning of Tripuras), placed Sāvitri as the bridles of his horses. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 202, Verse 75).

(iv) Once Jāpaka Brahmān worshipped Devī Sāvitri, who appeared before him and gave him boons. As the Brahmān was engaged in deep meditation and prayer, he did not see the Devī when she appeared. It was due to this piety that the Brahmin was given boons. (M.B Sānti Parva, Chapter 199).

(v) Once Devī Sāvitrī appeared before Satyā, a brahmin of Vidarbha. (M.B. Sānti Parva, Chapter 272, Verse 11).

(vi) Once Devī Sāvitrī praised the giving of rice as alms. (M.B. Anuśasana Parva, Chapter 57, Verse 8).

SĀVITRĪ II. A hand-maid of Devī Umā. (Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 231, Verse 49).

SĀVITRĪ III. A Sāvitrī who was the wife of a king and a righteous woman is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Sānti Parva, Chapter 234, Verse 24. This Sāvitrī gave two ear-rings as alms and attained heaven.

SĀVITRĪ IV. The wife of Satyavān.

1) Birth. In the country of Madra, famous in the Purāṇas, there was a king named Aśvapati. His wife was Mālatī. Though the couple grew old they were childless. At last they worshipped Devī Sāvitrī. After vows and prayers for eighteen years the Devī appeared before them, and giving them the boon that a daughter would be born to them, she disappeared. The couple returned to the palace and Mālatī conceived and delivered a daughter who they named Sāvitrī. (Skandha 9, Devī Bhāgavata; Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 293).

2) Marriage. Sāvitrī grew up as though Lakṣmī had taken an incarnation and bloomed into a beautiful damsel. But nobody came forward to marry her. On a New moon day she bathed and purified herself and getting the blessings of Brahmins, came and bowed before her father. The King felt sorry as nobody had offered to marry her though she was in the full bloom of youth. He advised her to travel in the outside world and to select a husband by herself. According to the order of her father she took the aged ministers of the King and travelled through the forests in which hermits lived.

Once Nārada came to the palace and while he was talking with King Aśvapati, Sāvitrī and the aged ministers returned. She bowed before her father and Nārada. As soon as Nārada saw her, he asked with curiosity about her marriage. The father replied that he had sent her in search of a husband. Sāvitrī said “I have accepted the Prince Satyavān as my husband. He is the son of King Dymatsena of Sālva. Dymatsena became blind in his old age, and taking this opportunity his enemies captured his country. Dymatsena with his wife and son went to the forest and lived there.”

Nārada described the qualities of Satyavān. “Satyavān is as radiant as the sun, as intelligent as Bahrain, as valiant as Indra and as patient as the Earth. Aśvapati was immensely pleased at hearing about the good qualities of Satyavān, and asked Nārada, if there was anything to say against him. Nārada said that he had nothing to say against Satyavān except that he would die “within one year from this date.” (Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 294).

The King felt miserable when he heard this. Sāvitrī said that she had accepted Satyavān as her husband and that nothing could make her waver from her decision even if he is not going to live more than a year. The King agreed to the wish of her daughter and preparations for the marriage were begun. The King went with Sāvitrī to the forest and saw Dymatsena who gladly consented to the marriage. Aśvapati returned to the palace leaving Sāvitrī with Satyavān and his parents. As soon as Aśvapati had returned, Sāvitrī discarded her ornaments and assumed the dress suitable to life in the forest and lived with them.

3) The death of Satyavān. It was nearly a year and the day of death of Satyavān was fast approaching. There were only four days more. Sāvitrī had taken a vow lasting for three days. Dymatsena dissuaded her from taking fast. She completed the fast. There was left only one night more. She kept awake for the whole night. Morning came. Though she ended her fast she had not taken any food. Dymatsena wanted to know the reason. She humbly said that she would eat only after sun-set.

As usual Satyavān took his axe and started for the wood. Sāvitrī also followed him.

Satyavān:- “You have never accompanied me before. Moreover you are very weak on account of the fast. Then how can you come with me?”

Sāvitrī: “I am not at all weak by the fast and vow. I want to come with you. I pray, don’t hinder me.”

At last Satyavān consented after getting the permission of his parents. Both went to the forest to gather fruits and roots. They gathered fruits and roots. Then Satyavān began to cut wood. By that exertion Satyavān sweated all over. He was affected by headache. “Let me lie down!” He said. The axe fell from his hand. Sāvitrī caught her husband who was falling down and laid him on her lap. Sāvitrī saw a person clad in blood-coloured garments, with red eyes and a rope in hand, coming towards them. He came to the spot and stood there looking at the body of Satyavān. Realizing the person to be Kāla (Deathgod) Sāvitrī stood up instantly and bowed before him.

Sāvitrī:- “Who are you Lord. What may be your object in coming here?”

Yama:- Hei, Sāvitrī. As you are a hermitess of chastity I may converse with you. I am Yama. I am come to take away the life of your husband.”

Sāvitrī:- “Lord, I have heard that your messengers come and take away the souls. How is it that you have come in person today?”

Yama:- This Satyavān is a righteous man who is an ocean of good qualities. Messengers are not sent, in the cases of persons like him.”

Saying thus Yama cast his rope and caught the soul of Satyavān. Sāvitrī saw the body of her husband lying without life and soul. Sāvitrī followed Yama who had gone to the south with the soul of Satyavān.

Sāvitrī:- “I am coming to the place where my husband is being taken. That is the duty of a wife. What impediment is there on my way to follow you, when I have the merits of vow, fast, devotion to my elders, love and regard for my husband and the good will of yourself, my Lord.”

When Yama realized that it was difficult to send Sāvitrī back, he asked Sāvitrī to ask for any boon. Yama was prepared to give anything except the life of Satyavān. She requested for the recovery of sight by Dymatsena. Yama granted it. Still Sāvitrī did not turn back. Yama asked her to pray for one more boon. She request for the recovery of the lost kingdom of Dyumatsena. Yama sanctioned that request also. Still she followed Yama, who was ready to grant her a third boon. She requested: “My father may, please be given a hundred sons who would continue the family. Yama granted that too. But she did not turn back. Yama told her that she might ask for a fourth boon. She said: “I may be given a hundred sons born directly from Satyavān. Yama granted this fourth boon also. Then Sāvitrī asked Yama how the boon would be realized unless the life of Satyavān was given back to him. Yama was pleased with her at her love and devotion for her husband and returned the life of Satyavān. Yama blessed her that she and Satyavān would live for hundred years.

Yama disappeared. Sāvitrī returned and sat there taking the body of Satyavān on her lap. Satyavān came to life. Both of them rose up. Night came on. It was dark. They could not find the way. Satyavān wanted to reach their hermitage somehow. Sāvitrī took the axe and supporting her husband in the dim moon light, walked to the hermitage.

Dyumatsena got sight. He started with his wife in search of his children, and walked about in the forest. At last all of them met together. They reached home. Then Sāvitrī told them all that had happened. Everyone was delighted. Then some people from Sālva came to the hermitage. They said that the minister had killed the King, that the people had expelled the minister, and that they had come to request Dyumatsena to return to his country and to resume the reign. Accordingly all of them returned to Sālva. Dyumatsena was anointed as the King of Sālva. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapters 293 to 299).

SAVYA. A son of Aṅgiras, Savya is actually Indra himself. The story is that Aṅgiras began worshipping the Devatas for a son equal to Indra and that Indra, thinking that there should not be another person equal to him, got himself born as the son of Aṅgiras. That son is Savya. (Rgveda, Mandala 1, Anuvāka 10, Sūkta 51).

SAVAYASĀČI. Another name of Arjuna. (Virāṇa Parva, Chapter 44, Verse 19).

SAVAYASYIVYA. One of the sons of Vipractiti by Sinhikā. This asura was killed by Paraśurāma. (Brahmānḍa Purāṇa, 3.6.18-20).

SĀYAMVAISVADEVA. The sacrificial offering given by the wife with the food prepared in the evening without any spell or incantation, is called Sāyamvaśvadeva. (Manusmṛti, Chapter 3, 121).

SĀYĀṆA. A hermit who was an expounder of the Vedas. In course of time, due to the differences in languages and grammar, the Vedas became difficult to be grasped. It was Yāska and Sāyāṇa who saved the Indians from this difficulty. For the Vedas to be grasped easily, Yāska made the Nirukta (Etymology) and Sāyāṇa wrote the Book Vedārthaprakāśa.

SAYU. A mahārṣi. (Rgveda, Mandala 1, Anuvāka 112, Sūkta 16).

(Drona Parva, Chapter 155, Verse 19). King Śibi had four sons Bhadrā, Śuvira, Keśkaya and Vṛṣādhara. (Bhāgavata, 9th Skandha).

SĪBI IV. An Indra. There were four sects of Devas called Śupāras, Haris, Satyas and Sudhis, in Tāmāsa Manvantara, and there were twenty-seven Devas in each Sect. Śibi, who performed hundred yajñas then was Indra. (For details see under Manvantaram).

SĪBI V. An ancient Rājaṛṣi.
Śibi was born to Uṣīnara of Mādhavī, daughter of Yayāti.
2) Suhotrā made to give way. King Suhotrā of Kuru dynasty once on his return from a visit of maharāsj was seen by King Śibi coming in the opposite direction in his chariot, and both the Kings saluted each other as their age ordained. But, they did not give passage to each other as they thought themselves to be equal in merit. At that time Nārada came there and asked the kings why they stood there thus blocking the path. They answered Nārada thus: "He who is more noble or clever on account of former actions etc. is usually given way to by the other person. Both of us are comrades and are equals." Nārada then spoke as follows:—
"Oh! King of the Kuru dynasty! You are cruel to the gentle and gentle to the cruel. To the evil you are good; then why not be good to the good. Devas have ordered that he who does good will get it hundred-fold by return. King Uṣīnara is more noble and gentle than you are. The miser is won over by liberality, the liar by truth, the cruel by patience and the evil person by good. But, both of you Kings are noble persons. Therefore, one of you should give way to the other."

Listening to Nārada's advice, Suhotrā gave way to Śibi and proceeded on his way. (Vana Parva, Chapter 194).

3) Śibi tested. Śibi's fame spread in the three worlds, and an idea was mooted among the Devas that it should be tested how much of the reputation of the King was genuine. Accordingly, Agni in the form of a dove and Indra in that of a kite hunting after the dove, rushed to King Śibi. The dove took refuge in the lap of the King sitting in 'divya' posture, and the priest told the King that it was the latter's duty to protect the dove, which took refuge with him for its life. The dove also told the King thus; "I am really a muni, who has entered the body of the dove. I take refuge in you for my life."

By that time the kite too had flown up to the King. It asked the King to return the dove, which it had been chasing. The King was surprised to hear the kite talk and told the bird that it was not proper for him to give up the dove who had sought refuge under him, but that he would give the kite any other flesh in lieu of the ŚIKHI. A nāga born in the Kaśyapa dynasty. (Udyoga Parva, Chapter 103, Verse 12).

ŚIKHĪDHIVA JA. A king, who ruled over Mālava during the first Dvāparayuga in the seventh Manvantara. Ćūdālā, daughter of the king of Saurāstra was Śikhīdhiva JA’s wife. The Jñānaviṣṇuvamāna contains a story about how the royal couple renounced all attachments in life as the result of intense tapas. Śikhīdhiva JA and Ćūdālā began practising jñānayoga (communion through knowledge). It was Ćūdālā, who gained Siddhis first. Though the king was pleased with the achievements of his wife he felt sorry about his failure or drawbacks. Ćūdālā had attained the Siddhi to travel even in air. Though she told her husband emphatically that he could practise jñānayoga living in the palace itself, he quit the city for the forest and began performing tapas there. Then on one day, she went to the presence of the king in the forest in the guise of a brahmin boy and stood there without touching the earth with his feet. The king treated the boy with honour and respect taking him for some Deva. Then she revealed her actual form, and the king agreed to return with her to the palace and practise jñānayoga there. At that juncture Ćūdālā created by her soul-power celestial women like Urvaśī and also Indra and lined them up before her husband. This was to test whether the king yielded to any of the temptations by the celestial women or by Indra and Ćūdālā returned with the king to the kingdom.

ŚIKAṆĀ. A warrior of Subrahmanya. (Salya Parva, Chapter 45, Verse 76).

ŚILĀ. Daughter of Dharmārāja. She was wedded by Marici maharsi. For some reason the maharsi cursed her and she was transformed into a stone in the Gayā temple. (Vāyu Purāṇa, 108).

ŚILAVĀN. A divine sage. In Mahābhārata, Dākinsiātapaṭha, Udyoga Parva, Chapter 83, there is a reference to a conversation between this Maharsi and Śri Kṛṣṇa.

ŚILAVATI. A heroine reputed for her chastity and fidelity to her husband. Her husband, Ugra-rāvas was cruel and vicious. Yet Śilavati used to adore him. Once Ugra-rāvas fell a victim to the disease of leprosy. From that time, Śilavati used to go about begging in the houses of Brāhmanas to feed and support her husband. After some time by her constant nursing, his condition was slightly improved. After that she continued her begging from door to door, carrying him on her shoulders. Once they happened to arrive in front of a huge mansion. Water was flowing in front of the gate and so Ālavaṭī returned from there with her husband without stepping into the water. When they reached home, Ugra-rāvas asked his wife why she returned without entering the mansion. She explained that it was the house of a prostitute and to touch the water coming out of that house was sin. On hearing it, Ugra-rāvas felt an irresistible desire to visit that brothel. He expressed his desire to her. Quite obediently Śila-vaṭī took up her husband on her shoulders and went to the prostitute’s house. (For more details see under Aṇi māṇḍāvaya, Anasūyā and Atri).

ŚILAYŪPA. A Vedāntist son of Viśvāmitra. (Anusāsana Parva, Chapter 4, Verse 54).

ŚILI. A nāga born in the Taḵṣaṇa dynasty. It was burnt to death at the serpent yajña conducted by Janamejaya. (Adi Parva, Chapter 57, Verse 9).

ŚIMANTINI. The wife of King Girirāṅgada. The story of this Śimantini is given in Somapradāsvārata māhātmya, in Skanda Purāṇa.

ŚIMHACANDRA. A king who had helped Yudhiṣṭhira. (M.B. Drona Parva, Chapter 158, Verse 40).

ŚIMHAKETU. A warrior who took the side of the Paṇḍavas and fought against the Kauravas. (Mahābhārata, Karna Parva, Chapter 56, Verse 49,) This Śimhaketu was killed in the battle of Bhārata by Karna.

ŚIMHALA. Modern Ceylon. In ancient days this place was called Sinhalā and the inhabitants were called Sinhalas. The following statements about Sinhilā occur in the Mahābhārata.
(1) The low caste people of the Simhalas originated from the sides of Nandini, the cow of the Devas. (M.B. Adi Parva, Chapter 174, Verse 37).

(2) The king of Simhala had taken part in the sacrifice Rājasūya of Yudhīṣṭhira. (Mahābhārata, Sabhā Parva, Chapter 34, Verse 12).

(3) The Kaśītriyas of Simhala gave Yudhīṣṭhira, Chrysoptases, pearls and such other wealth of the sea as present. The people of Simhala wore clothes studded with jewels. They were of dark complexion with eyes the ends of which were red. (M.B. Sabhā Parva, Chapter 58, Verse 35).

(4) The Simhala took the side of the Kauravas in the battle of Bhārata. In the Garuḍa vyuḥa formed by Drona, the Simhalas were stationed in the position of the neck. (M.B. Drona Parva, Chapter 20, Verse 6).

SIMPAPURA. A city in Bhārata, famous in the Purāṇas. This city was situated in the mountainous region of North India. During the period of Mahābhārata, Citrāyudha was the king who ruled over this city. (Mahābhārata, Sabhā Parva, Chapter 27, Verse 20). Arjuna during his regional conquest of the North, defeated this king.

SIMHASENA III. Another warrior of Pāṇcāla. Karṇa killed him in the battle of Bhārata. (Karṇa Parva, Chapter 56, Verse 44).

SIMHAVAKRA. An asura. (Skanda Purāṇa, Asura Kānda,) This asura fought Subrahmaṇya.

SIMHIKĀ. A giantess. (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Amśa 1, Chapter 15, and Agni Purāṇa Chapter 19). Two sons named Hiraṇyakaśipu and Hiraṇyākṣa and a daughter named Simhiṅkā were born to Prajāpati Kaśyapa by his wife Diti. Simhiṅkā was married by Vīrācitti. Two sons named Rāhu and Ketu were born to them. Because they were the sons of Simhiṅkā, they came to be known by the name Saimhiṅkīyas.

(But it is stated in Mahābhārata, Adi Parva, Chapter 65, that Simhiṅkā was the daughter of Prajāpati Dakṣa and the wife of Kaśyapa.)

A story occurs in Rāmāyaṇa, that this Simhiṅkā caught hold of Hanūmān by his shadow and swallowed him, while he was jumping to Lankā, and that Hanūmān escaped from her. (See under Rāma, para 27).

SIMŚUMĀ, Daughter of a Gandhāra King. She is also known as Sukses. She was married by Śri Kṛṣṇa (M.B. Southern text, Chapter 38).

SINDHU I. A river in India, very famous in the Purāṇas.

1) General information. It is assumed in the Purāṇas that this river is a branch of the heavenly Gaṅgā. By the efforts of Bhagiratha, the heavenly Gaṅgā fell on the earth in the Lake Bīndu. After that it had six channels. Three channels flowed to the east and three to the west. The rivers which flowed to the East were Hiḍāmi, Pāvaṇi and Nalini. The three rivers Sucakses, Sītā and Sindhu flowed to the west. This seventh branch followed Bhagiratha and flowed to Pāṭāla to perform obsequies to the sons of Sagarā.

2) Other details.

(i) Samvatara, a King, who was defeated by his enemies, hid himself for a while in the natural arbours on the basin of Sindhu. (M.B. Adi Parva, Chapter 94, Verse 40).

(ii) Sindhu remains in the palace of Varuṇa and glorifies him. (M.B. Sabhā Parva, Chapter 9, Verse 19).

(iii) Once Mārkandeya happened to see the river Sindhu in the stomach of child Mukunda. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 188, Verse 103).

(iv) Sindhu is considered to be the origin of Agni (Fire). (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 242, Verse 22).

(v) Sindhu is one of the seven channels of Gaṅgā. (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 6, Verse 48).

(vi) By bathing in the river Sindhu, one could attain heaven. (M.B. Anuśasana Parva, Chapter 25 Verse 8).

(vii) Once Pārvatī held a talk on the duties of women. All the rivers met to hear the talk. Sindhu was prominent among the rivers who were present. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 146, Verse 18).

(viii) This is one of the rivers which ought to be remembered every morning and evening. (M.B. Anuśaṣana Parva, Chapter 165, Verse 19).

(ix) Mention about river Sindhu occurs throughout the Rgveda. Prominent rivers mentioned in Rgveda are Kūhbhā, Sindhu, Suvasūṭa, Vīṣṇu, Parusṇi, Vipāsā, Śatadrū, Sarasvatī etc.

SINDHU II. A country very famous in the Purāṇas. Jayadratha the King of Sindhu was present at the Svayamvara marriage of Draupadi (Mahābhārata, Adi Parva, Chapter 185, Verse 21).

SINDHUDVĪPA. A King of the Solar dynasty. (Mahābhārata, Anuśasana Parva, Chapter 4, Verse 4). This King was the son of Jahnū and the father of Balākāva. This King did penance in the holy place called Prthūdakaśīrtha and attained Brahminhood. (M.B. Śalya Parva, Chapter 39, Verse 37).

It is mentioned in Bṛhaspati, Skanda 9, that Sindudvīpa was the son of Śrutānabha who was the son of Bhagiratha.

SINDHUPRABHAVA. A holy place. The river Sindhu starts from this place. This is a place frequented by the Siddhas and the Gandharvas. He who bathes here for five days with fast can obtain heaps of Gold. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 86, Verse 84).

SINDHUPULINDA. A kingdom of India very famous in the Purāṇas. (Mahābhārata, Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 9, Verse 40).

SINDHUSAUVRĪ. A place in the North-west part of India, famous in the Purāṇas. (Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 86, Verse 84). The people of Sindhusauvrī do not know dharma (duty).

SINDHUTAMA. A holy place. (Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 82, Verse 79). This is one of the famous holy places in the world and that by bathing in this tirtha one can obtain heaps of gold.

ŚIN. A King of the Yādava dynasty. He secured Devakī to be wedded to Vasudeva after defeating, single-handed in battle, all the kings. A fierce battle was fought between this Śina of Devamithra family and Somadatta. (Drona Parva, Chapter 114).

SINIVĀK. A hermit. This hermit had shone in the council of Yudhīṣṭhira. (M.B. Sabhā Parva, Chapter 4, Verse 14).
SINIVALI I.

1) Birth. A daughter of Aṅgiras. The wife of Aṅgiras was Śmti. She gave birth to four daughters named Kuhū, Rākā, Anu-mati and Sinivali. (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Aniṣa 1, Chapter 10).

   (It is mentioned in Bhāgavata, Skandha 6, that Sinivali was the third daughter of Aṅgiras by his wife Sraddhā.

2) Other details.

(i) Dṛṣṭyādṛṣṭyā is another name of Sinivali. Her body is small. So sometimes she can be seen and sometimes she cannot be seen. It is in this meaning that she gets the name Dṛṣṭyādṛṣṭyā (seen and unseen). Śiva bears her in his forehead. So she has another name Rudrasatā. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 218, Verse 5).

(ii) Śiva used Sinivali as the yoke of the horses of his chariot in the battle with Ṭriṣupās. (M.B. Karṇa Parva, Chapter 34, Verse 32).

(iii) At the time of his birth Sinivali had come to see the child Subrahmaniya. (M.B. Śalya Parva, Chapter 45, Verse 13).

(iv) It is mentioned in Atharva Veda that Sinivali is a wife of Mahāviṣṇu.

SINIVALI II. A daughter born to Brhaspati by his wife Subhā. It is stated in Vāyu Purāṇa, Chapter 90, that though Sinivali was given in marriage to Prajāpati Kardama, she abandoned him and lived with Soma (Moon).

ŚĪPĀ. A river extolled in Rgveda. It is stated in Śūkta 104, Anuvāka 15, Maṇḍala 1 of the Rgveda that the asura named Kuyava should be thrown into the depths of Śīpā as he stole money.

ŚRĀDHVĀJA. Janaka the father of Sitā. (For further details see under Janaka).

ŚIRĪṢAKA. A nāga born in Kaśyapa dynasty. (Udyoga Parva, Chapter 103, Verse 14).

ŚIRĪṢI. A Vedāntist son of Viśvāmitra. (Anuśāsa Parva, Chapter 4, Verse 59).

ŚIRKĀLI. A sacred place in South India. Brahmapura is another name for this place which is near Kumbhakonam in Tanjore District. The place was sanctified by the birth of Tirukkāṇasambaṁbher. (For further details see under Tirukkāṇasambaṁbher).

ŚĪṢIRA. Son of Soma the Vasu, of his wife Manoharā. To the couple were born four sons called Varcas, Praṇa, Ramaṇa and Śīṣira. (Adi Parva, Chapter 66, Verse 22).

ŚĪṢIRAPARVATA. A mountain near Mount Meru. (See under Mahāmeru).

ŚĪṢTA. Dhruva's son by Dhanyā. Śīṣṭa married Succhāyā, daughter of Agni. Four sons, Krpa, Rupuṇjaya, Vṛṭṭa and Vṛka were born to them. (Maṭṣya Purāṇa, 4, 38).

ŚĪṢṬI. A son of Dhruva. Dhruva had two sons, Śīṣṭi and Bhavya, by his wife Sambhu. Śīṣṭi's wife, Succhāyā gave birth to five sons, namely, Rupu, Rupuṇjaya, Vṛpa, Vṛkala and Vṛkatejas. The eldest of them Rupu was the father of the Manu, Cākṣura. (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Aniṣa 1, Chapter 13).

ŚĪṢU. A son born to the Saptamātrs due to the blessing of Subrahmaniya. The eyes of the child were blood-red. It was called Virāṭaka as well. (Vana Parva, Chapter 228, Verse 11).

SIŚUMĀRA I. A Rṣi. This Rṣi used to live in water in the form of a crocodile. There is a story about him in the Pañcabivriṣṇa Brāhmaṇa.

   Once all the Rṣis joined together in praising Indra. Siśumāra alone remained silent without taking part in it. Seeing this, Devendra ordered Siśumāra to praise him. The sage answered praising him that he had no time for it and that he would praise Indra for as much time as was needed to throw the water upwards.

   Accordingly he started praising Indra. The sage to whom Indra's praise was at first disagreeable, subsequently felt that he could not do it too much. By his austerity he acquired "Sāmavidyā". He even composed a "Śaṁa" (a hymn) in praise of Indra. In later times it became famous as "Sārkarāṣaṁā".

SIŚUMĀRA II. A constellation so called because it is in the form of a Śiśumāra (Crocodile). It is said to be the starry form of Viṣṇu. At the tail-end of it is Dhruva, which automatically rotates and also makes planets like the Sun and the moon to rotate. Stars follow the self-rotating Dhruva and rotate like a wheel. The Sun and the moon along with stars and planets are bound by the cord of atmosphere to Dhruva.

   The basis and support of this constellation of Śiśumāra is Mahāviṣṇu, who is the support of all light and effulgence. Dhruva, son of Utānapāda came to be installed at the tail-end of Śiśumāra as he had worshipped Viṣṇu. Śiśumāra is dependent upon Viṣṇu, the Lord of all, and Dhruva is dependent upon Śiśumāra. Śūrya is dependent on Dhruva. (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Part 2, Chapter 9).

SIŚUMĀRAMUKHI. A woman follower of Subrahmaniya. (M.B. Śalya Parva, Chapter 46, Verse 22).

SIŚUNĀGA. The first King of the Śiśunāga dynasty. He founded the dynasty after defeating Nandivardhana of Pradyota family, King of Magadha. Though he first belonged to Kaśi region, later on he settled down in Magadha. Kākavarṇa was Śiśunāga's son.

   The following ten Kings of Śiśunāga dynasty ruled the country for 360 years. (1) Kākavarṇa (2) Kṛṣeṇa-dharmā (3) Kṛṣeṇajit (4) Vindhyasena (5) Bhūmitrā (6) Ajātaśatru (7) Varāśaka (8) Udāś (9) Nandivardhana (10) Mahānandī. (Maṭṣya Purāṇa, 272, 6-17; Vāyu Purāṇa 99, 314-315).

SIŚUPĀLA. King of Cedi.

1) Previous birth. Jaya and Vijaya, gate-keepers at Vaikuṇṭha were born thrice in asura womb as a result of the curse by munis like Sanaka. They were born first as Hiranyakaṣapa and Hiranyakaśipu, next as Rāvana and Kumbhakarna and the third time as Siśupāla and Dantavakra. (See under Jayavijaya).

2) Birth. Siśupāla was the son of King Damaghaṣa of Cedi by his wife, Śrutarāvas (Bhāgavata, 9th Skandha). He was born with three eyes and four hands, and at the time of birth he brayed like an ass, so the parents decided to abandon the ugly and awkward child. Immediately a Jin (ghost) appeared and told the father that the child would grow up to become very strong and powerful, and that only one person would be able to kill him and that person had already been born on earth. Further questioned by Siśupāla's mother, the Jin said that as soon as the son saw the person born to kill him, he would lose his third eye, and that if he was seated on the lap of the person, two out of his four hands would be lost. After having said this the Jin disappeared.

News about this peculiar child spread far and wide and many kings visited him. Damaghoṣa placed the child on the lap of each of them. But, no physical change occurred to him. Then one day Śrī Kṛṣṇa and Balarabhadra came to see the child, whose mother Śrutaśravas (she was also the sister of Kṛṣṇa's father) placed him on Kṛṣṇa's lap. Immediately two hands and the third eye of the child vanished, and with tears in her eyes the mother prayed Kṛṣṇa never to kill Śiṣuḍāla, and Kṛṣṇa promised that he would forgive the crimes of Śiṣuḍāla a hundred times. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 43).

3) Other information.

(i) Śiṣuḍāla was present at the wedding of Draupadi. In his attempt to draw the bow he fell down on his knees. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 185, Verse 23).

(ii) He was present at the wedding of the daughter of the King of Kaliṅga also. (Sānti Parva, Chapter 4, Verse 6).

(iii) He was the Commander-in-Chief of the armies of Jarāsandha. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 14, Verse 10).

(iv) When Bhima conquered all the kingdoms Śiṣuḍāla honoured him. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 29, Verse 11).

(v) He too was present at the Rājasūya of Yudhiṣṭhira. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 234, Verse 14).

(vi) At the Rājasūya, Kṛṣṇa heaped insulting words on Śiṣuḍāla. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 37).

(vii) Śiṣuḍāla objected to the selection of Kṛṣṇa as president of the Rājasūya and controversy followed it. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 39, Verse 11).

(viii) Śiṣuḍāla insulted Bhīṣma at the Rājasūya. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 41).

(ix) Once in the absence of Kṛṣṇa Śiṣuḍāla attacked Dvārakā. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 45 Verse 7).

(x) He stole the sacrificial horse of Vasudeva. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 45, Verse 9).

(xi) He abducted the wife of Babhu. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 45, Verse 10).

(xii) He abducted the daughter of his uncle, the King of Vīṣṇu. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 45, Verse 11).

(xiii) Following the above he was killed in battle by Kṛṣṇa. (Chapter 45, Verse 23, Sabhā Parva).

(xiv) After death his effulgence got absorbed in Kṛṣṇa. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 45, Verse 26).

(xv) Kṛṣṇa once told Arjuna that he killed Śiṣuḍāla for his (Arjuna's) good. (Drona Parva, Chapter 18, Verse 21).

ŚIṢUḌĀLA-VADHAPARVA. A Sub-Parva of Sabhā Parva, Chapters 40-45.

ŚIṢUḌĀMALOKAM. A nāga (serpent) born in the family of Takṣaka. This Nāga was burnt to death in Janamejaya's Sarasatāra. (Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 57, Verse 10).

SĪTĀ. A warrior of Subrahmanyā. (Mahābhārata, Salya Parva, Chapter 45, Verse 69).

SĪTĀ. Wife of Śrī Rāma.

1) Who is Sītā? Sītā is the incarnation of Mahālakṣmi. Lakṣmi took the birth of a woman because of the curse of Sarasvatī. Vedavatī, Sītā, Pāńcāli, all these women of chastity were the incarnations of Lakṣmi. The stories of Lakṣmi passing from birth to birth such as Vedavatī, Tulaśī, Sītā, Pāńcāli and so on until at last she reached the world of Viṣṇu, occurring in various Purāṇas are collected and given here.

Lakṣmi, Sarasvatī and Gaṅgā were the wives of Mahāviṣṇu. One day Viṣṇu was sitting with his three wives and entertaining them with conversation when Devī Gaṅgā looked at Viṣṇu amorously. Instantly a quarrel arose among the three of them. When the row became uncontrollable, Sarasvatī cursed Lakṣmi to take birth in the earth as a plant. Gaṅgā cursed Sarasvatī and made her a river. Sarasvatī cursed Gaṅgā and made her a river. At the end of all these rows and curses Viṣṇu stood up and said to Lakṣmi, “Lakṣmi! you will take birth as the daughter of Dharmadhvaja on the earth with the name Tulasi. In order that the curse of Sarasvatī may come true, a plant called Tulasi (holy basil) will grow up on the earth from a portion of you. While you are living as the daughter of Dharmadhvaja, an asura named Saṅkhaḍūṭa born from my portion will marry you.”

The curse was realized. Sarasvatī and Gaṅgā became rivers. Lakṣmi was about to be born as the daughter of Dharmadhvaja. Who was Dharmadhvaja? He was a man of righteous deeds and good qualities, born of the family of Daksāśāvarṇī who was born from a portion of Mahāviṣṇu. Brahmaśāvarṇī was born from Daksāśāvarṇī. Dharmaśāvarṇī begot Rudrasāvarṇī, Indrasāvarṇī begot Vṛṣadhvaja. Rathadhvaja was the son of Vṛṣadhvaja. Two sons named Dharmadhvaja and Kuśadhvaja were born to Rathadhvaja. Dharmadhvaja and Kuśadhvaja were performing penance before Devi Lakṣmi to regain the wealth and prosperity lost by the curse of the Sun.

How did Dharmadhvaja and Kuśadhvaja lose their prosperity? Their grandfather Vṛṣadhvaja was a devotee of Śiva. He performed penance before Śiva for a long time. Śiva became pleased with Vṛṣadhvaja and lived in his hermitage for the period of three Devayugas. This king Vṛṣadhvaja made a proclamation that none other than Śiva should be worshipped. As all the other gods were despised, the Sun got angry and cursed Vṛṣadhvaja.

“Let the prosperity of yours and your posterity be destroyed.” Śiva did not like the action taken by the Sun against his favourite. Śiva took his trident and went against the Sun, who took refuge near his father Prajāpati Kaśyapa. Kaśyapa complained to Brahmā. Brahmā ran to Vaikuṇṭha. Śiva also came there with his trident. Viṣṇu looked at them and said “You gods, hear this. What is the need of all this hurry? Within the short time you have taken to run up to this place so many years have elapsed in the world. It is a long time since Vṛṣadhvaja died. His son Rathadhvaja also is dead. Rathadhvaja has two sons named Dharmaḍhvaja and Kuśadhvaja. They both have become Kings. But because of the curse of the Sun, they are devoid of any radiance. They are now worshipping Mahālakṣmi for radiance.” Hearing this talk of Mahāviṣṇu all of them returned to their places.

It has been mentioned that Dharmadhvaja and Kuśadhvaja both were engaged in penance before Mahālakṣmi. Devī Mahālakṣmi appeared before them and granted their wish. Devi promised them that she would take birth as the daughter of each of them, and she would recover for them all the wealth and prosperity they had lost. Accordingly Mahālakṣmi took birth by her portion as the daughter of Mādhavi, the wife of Dharmadhvaja.
under the name Tulasi. (For the rest of the story of Tulasi see under Tulasi, Para 4).

Mālavatī was the wife of Kuśadhvaja. As Laksī had promised to take birth as their daughter, both of them waited for the birth of the child uttering the Vedas. At this time a child was born from the mouth of Kuśadhvaja. This child was the incarnation of Laksī. With the birth of the child Kuśadhvaja regained all the wealth and prosperity he had lost. The child was named Vedavatī (Devavatī). She grew up and became a young woman. Her desire was to get Mahāviṣṇu as her husband. Once an asura named Sāmbhu came to the hermitage of Kuśadhvaja. When he saw Vedavatī he fell in love with her. He asked Kuśadhvaja for the hand of his daughter, but Kuśadhvaja did not give his consent. Sāmbhu got angry. He came back in the night and killed Kuśadhvaja with his sword. Hearing the sound Vedavatī woke up and saw the dead body of her father lying in a pool of blood. She looked at Sāmbhu angrily. In that fury look Sāmbhu was burnt to ashes.

Vedavatī began to perform very severe penance to get Viṣṇu as her husband. It was at this time that Rāvana had begun his campaign of conquest. He defeated all kings and was proceeding victoriously through the vicinity of the Himalayas, when he saw the beautiful damsels Vedavatī sitting alone and performing penance. Seeing so beautiful a girl engaged in penance, he told her that he was the famous Rāvana with ten heads and requested her to throw away the garment of bark of the tree and the matted hair and to accept him as her husband. She rejected his request. The angry Rāvana caught hold of her hand. She resisted using her teeth and finger-nails. She cried out that she wanted no more to retain the body made impure by the touch of a wicked person. She made a fire and jumped into it. Thus in the sight of Rāvana, she burnt herself to death. Before death she vowed that in the next birth Mahāviṣṇu would become her husband and would kill Rāvana.

Rāvana who himself was burning in the fire of amour, was extremely sorry at the death of the beautiful girl. He took the ashes of hers to Laṅkā and put them in a golden box and kept the box in a solitary place. He used to visit the place daily. Since the arrival of the ashes, bad omens began to occur in Laṅkā. One day Nārada came to Laṅkā. Rāvana asked Nārada for the reason of constant occurrences of bad omens in Laṅkā. Nārada replied that the cause of bad omens was the golden box he was keeping and that if it was kept in Laṅkā any longer, it would cause destruction and that if it was destroyed, great disaster would follow. Nārada advised Rāvana to remove the box without opening it to somewhere else outside Laṅkā. Accordingly Rāvana caused the golden box to be dropped in the sea. By and by it came with the waves to the shore of Bārata (India). Robbers took it and went to the north and hid it in a forest. They were not able to take it away again. Thus the box came to be deposited on the basin of a river in Mithilā.

It was this river-basin that King Janaka selected as the place for sacrifice. Being kept in this holy place, the ashes of the body of Devavatī in the box mingled with her spirit and was taking shape into a child. When the place was ploughed for preparing the spot of sacrifice, for Janaka, this golden box was discovered. The child which was inside the box, was taken home and brought up by the king who named her Sītā. It was the portion of this Sītā herself that took birth next as Pāncāli. (Devī Bhāgavata, Kamba Rāmāyaṇa)

Other versions.

(i) The King Padmākṣa performed penance before Mahāviṣṇu with a view to get Mahālakṣmi as daughter. Mahāviṣṇu gave the King a great Phallus to realize his wish. From that a beautiful girl was born. The King named her Padmā. When she attained marriageable age, the King made preparations for her Sva-yamvarta (the bride herself choosing a husband). On the day fixed for the marriage Rākasas came and destroyed all the preparations and killed King Padmākṣa. Because of her sorrow at this disaster Padmā jumped into the fire. The giants searched for Padmā every where, but they could not find her. They returned in disappointment.

One day, during this period, Rāvana was travelling in his Aerial chariot. When he reached this place, he saw Padmā who had come out of the fire. Rāvana was fascinated by the beauty of Padmā. So he turned towards her. Seeing this, Padmā again jumped into the pile of fire for safety. Without any delay Rāvana made a search in the pile of fire. At last he got the body of Padmā (Sītā) in the form of five jewels. The disappointed Rāvana placed the five jewels in a box and took it to Laṅkā and gave it to his wife Mandrađari. One day Mandrađari opened that box and saw Padmā sitting in the form of a beautiful virgin. Thinking that it was not propitious to keep her who was the cause of destruction to Padmākṣa, his family and kingdom, Mandrađari exerted pressure on Rāvana to cast the box out of Laṅkā. Rāvana with his men took the box from Laṅkā and buried it in Mithilā. Before the box was closed Padmā cursed Rāvana. “I will come to Laṅkā again to kill you and your clan.”

One day when a brahmin of Mithilā was ploughing his field he got this box. Thinking that it belonged to the King, the brahmin took the box to King Janaka. The King took the child in the box and brought it up. He named the child Sītā. (Ananda Rāmāyaṇa, 7-6).

(ii) In Adbhuta Rāmāyaṇa we see another story which is somewhat different from that we see in Ananda Rāmāyaṇa. It is given below :—

Rāvana who had become the harasser of the entire world began to harass the hermits and sages also. He used to shoot arrows at the hermits who were sitting in meditation in the forests, and taking their blood in the arrow-head, he stored it in a big pot. In the same forest a hermit named Grtsamada was engaged in penance to get a daughter who would be equal to Laksī in every way. He took milk with the head of Darbha grass and stored it daily in a pot. One day Rāvana came to his hermitage and took the pot of milk stealthily. He poured the milk into the pot in which he had stored the blood and stirring it well gave it to his wife Mandrađari. Seeing the character of her husband becoming worse and worse every day, Mandodari became miserable. One day she decided to commit suicide and drank the contents of the pot given by Rāvana. The thing which was taken for suicide, made her pregnant. Mandodari buried that foetus in Kurukṣetra. After a while a girl was born from it. That child was Sītā, the daughter of King Janaka.

(iii) There is a story in Devī Bhāgavata stating how Sītā was born as the daughter of Rāvana. It is as follows:

Rāvana wished to marry Mandodari, the daughter of Maya. Then Maya said to Rāvana thus:

"According to the horoscope of Mandodari, the first child born to her will be the destroyer of its clan. So it would be better to kill that child." Not acting upon the advice of Maya, Rāvana put the first child in a box and buried it in the city of King Janaka. This child was Sītā, the wife of Śrī Rāma.

2) Marriage. Sītā grew up in the palace of King Janaka, Kuśadvaja the younger brother of Janaka had three daughters. They were named Māndavī, Umilī and Sṛutakirti. Sītā grew up along with these three sisters. The four of them grew up as sisters and friends. Sītā grew up to be a young woman. Several young men wished to marry her. Janaka refused everyone of them. One day the princesses were playing with their maids in the garden of the harem. Sītā sat on the dais in the centre of the garden to make a flower garland. All their attempts to gather the jasmine flowers from the twigs of a large mango tree in the garden ended in failure. Sītā instantly ran to the weapon-house and taking a bow and arrow, shot down the flowers. The flowers fell down on the cloth placed on the ground without being damaged. Janaka saw the shooting of Sītā, from the palace. He was amazed at the expertise of Sītā. The bow which Sītā took was Saivacāpa (the bow of Śiva). Śiva had used this bow, in days of old, to destroy the sacrifice of Dakṣa. Śiva, who was pacified by the destruction of the sacrifice of Dakṣa and the victory over his enemies, gave this bow to his devotee, the King of Videha. That King kept the bow in his weapon-house and used to worship it. Sītā had taken that bow and shot with it.

The King who had been thinking about the marriage of Sītā thought that what he saw was a good omen. So the King made a proclamation that only he who could take the bow of Śiva, draw it, and shoot with it would become eligible to marry Sītā. Hearing this many adventurers came to the palace and tried to handle the Saivacāpa and retreated admitting defeat. It was at this time that Viśvāmitra brought Rāma and Laksmana to the forest for the protection of sacrifice. Hearing about the Svayamvara of Sītā, Viśvāmitra took the princes to the palace of Janaka. The King was greatly pleased when he learned that the princes were the sons of Daśaratha, of the solar dynasty. Next morning, at the instruction of his elders and priests and teachers, Śrī Rāma stood on the dais in the middle of the hall, where the Saivacāpa was placed, ready to handle it. He lifted up the bow with his left hand, drew it easily and fastened the string tightly and the bow was broken. When the Kings who were present, heard the roaring sound of the breaking of the bow, they shivered with fear as serpents at the sound of thunder. Sītā jumped with joy like a peacock. A letter was sent to Daśaratha then and there. Friends and relatives arrived. Under the guidance of the presiding priest Śatānanda, the marriage ceremony was conducted. Rāma married Sītā, Bharata married Māndavī, Laksmana married Umilī, and Sṛutakirti. The brides and bridegrooms went to Ayodhya with their parents and relatives. (Kamab Rāmāyana, Bālākanda).

3) Anasūyā's gift of clothes and ornaments. Daśaratha who had become old, wished to hand over the realm to Śrī Rāma. Since Kākeyi stood as a hindrance, the kingdom fell into the hands of Bharata. Moreover Sītā had to live in the forest with Śrī Rāma and Laksmana for fourteen years. In the early period of their forest-life they visited the hermitage of Atri. Seeing the devotion of Sītā towards her husband, Anasūyā the wife of hermit Atri, blessed her and gave her a fine garland, clothes and ornaments and cosmetics. Anasūyā blessed Sītā again and said that she would shine as Laksmi if she besmear her body with the divine cosmetics. (Vālmiki Rāmāyana, Ayodhyā Kāṇḍa, Sargas 118-120).

4) Test by Pārvati and Parasurāma. In the last year of forest-life Pārvati and Parasurāma tested the firmness of the love of Sītā and Rāma. (See under Rāma, Para 14).

5) Phantom Sītā. A few days before the abduction of Sītā by Rāvana, Fire god took the guise of a Brahmin and approached Śrī Rāma and said : "O, Śrī Rāma! The Devas have sent me to tell you certain things which will take place shortly. Your incarnation has the aim of killing Rāvana. Sītā is meant to be a cause for the same. The death of Rāvana is imminent. He will come and carry Sītā away. So entrust Sītā with me. I will keep her carefully. Make a phantom (Māyā) Sītā and keep her here, instead of the real Sītādevī. After the killing of Rāvana, when Sītā enters fire as a proof of her purity, I will return Devī Sītā." Śrī Rāma agreed to it. Fire god by his power of contemplation, created a phantom Sītā, exactly like the real Sītā in shape and figure and nature and placing her beside Rāma, he disappeared with the real Sītā. Even Laksmana was not aware of this fact. The real Sītā Devi was under the care of Fire god till the moment of the test of chastity of Sītā by fire, after the killing of Rāvana. During the time of entering the fire the illusory Sītā vanished in the fire and the real Sītā came out. (Devī Bhāgavata, Skandha 9).

6) Sītā killed Sahasramukha. See under Sahasramukha Rāvana.

7) Abandonment of Sītā. See under Rāma, Para 31.

8) Sītā in the hermitage of Vālmiki. Abandoned Sītā, who was pregnant, wandered about in the forest and at last reached the hermitage of Vālmiki, who gave her protection and shelter. The story of an occurrence at this time is given in Kathāsārītāgāra, Alākārvatilambaka, Tarāṅga 1.

The other hermits did not like Vālmiki's action of giving shelter to Sītā. They said "Sītā is impure. Otherwise her husband would not have abandoned her. By her association we also would become sinners. As the hermit Vālmiki is kind, he will not cast her away especially when she is pregnant. So the best thing for all of us, is to go to another hermitage." This murmuring of the hermits reached the ears of Vālmiki. He said "She is pure and chaste. I know it with my inward eyes." But they did not believe it. Then Sītā said "Lord! you can test my chastity in whatever way you like, and if I am found to be impure you may cut off my head." The hermits tested Sītā in the Tīṭhibhasaras (a divine lake near the hermitage of Vālmiki) and were convinced that she was chaste and pure. (See under Tiṭṭibhasaras to know the greatness of this divine lake).
9) Cursed Sītā. Sītā was spending miserable days in the hermitage of Vālmikī. Her matrimonial life was a hell.
Is there any special reason for misery? Yes. It is the curse of a bird. Once Śesa told this story, of the cursing of Sītā by a bird, to the hermit Vātsyāyana. That story is given below:
The event took place when Sītā was a young girl in the palace of Janaka. One day while Sītā was playing in the garden she saw two parrots, cock and hen, which talked well. The spouses were delightfully engaged in love-making. As soon as the couple saw Sītā they flew up to a tree and sang thus: “A handsome king will take birth on the earth. His name will be Śrī Rāma. His wife’s name will be Sītā. Their wedded life will be happy.
Hearing the song, Sītā thought that they were some divine persons, and asked her maids to catch them and give them food. The maids caught the parrots and brought them before Sītā. She asked the birds.
“Don’t fear. Who are you? Where do you come from? Who is that Rāma? Who is Sītā? How did you come to know of them? Tell me all. I will not hurt you!
The birds replied, “In the forest there is a hermit named Vālmikī. We live in his beautiful hermitage. That hermit has composed the story Rāmāyana, which is yet to happen, and has taught it to his disciples. We have heard those songs. Having heard them over and over we also have learned them by heart. We will tell you who Rāma is and who Jānaki is and what would happen to her who lives happily with him. Hear it! Sāi.
Saying thus the parrots passed on to the story of Rāma. Due to the sacrifice of the hermit Rṣyasūrga, Mahāviṣṇu incarnated as four persons, of whom Rāma the eldest, with his younger brother and Viśvāmitra, would come to Mithilā. He would draw the bow and marry Sītā...
Sītā was extremely pleased with the sweet song of the birds and asked them so many questions repeatedly with curiosity. Seeing the excitement of the questioner the parrots understood that she was Sītā herself. They asked her, “Beautiful girl! who are you? Why are you so much interested in knowing about Rāma? What is your name?” Sītā disclosed everything about her to the birds, and said “I am the same Sītā, the daughter of Janaka you have sung about. I will let you go only on the day when that handsome prince Rāma comes and marries me. Your conversation has made me so curious. You can live comfortably in my house, eating sweetmeats.” The birds were in great fear when they heard this. They looked at each other and replied to Sītā.
“Good child! We birds fly about in the sky and perch on trees and bush. Houses are not comfortable to us. Moreover I am pregnant. After my delivery in our own place I will come here. You need not have any doubt.” The female parrot said thus. But Sītā did not let them go. Then the male parrot prayed humbly with anxiety.
“Sītā, allow her to go. Why do you detain my beautiful wife? Allow us to have our own way in the forest. My wife is pregnant. After the confinement both of us will come back.” Sītā said “Let her live with me. You may go as you please.”
The parrots were in great sorrow. If they had not made any noise on that tree this detention would not have occurred. These pitiable supplications had no effect on Sītā. The male bird cried to Sītā to let him take his mate along with him, and beat his head on the ground. Sītā was adamant. The female bird, filled with misery and anger cursed Sītā thus. “You have separated me from my husband. I am pregnant. May you too be separated from your husband when you become pregnant”. When she had finished saying, she fell on the ground and wriggled and died. An aerial chariot came down to the earth from heaven for the soul of that bird which had died exalting and glorifying Śrī Rāma. The soul of the bird got into the chariot and went up to heaven. The male bird, being unable to bear the death of his beloved wife, dipped himself in the Ganges. Before his death he cried out in anger. “I must be born in the city of Rāma. By my words, this Sītā should be separated from her husband and fall into misery.” He died in the Ganges in Krodha (anger) and fear. So he took rebirth with the name Krodhana as a washerman by caste and profession. It was this washerman who spoke words of calumny about Sītā. Due to the calumny of this washerman, Śrī Rāma abandoned Sītā and she had to take shelter in the hermitage of Vālmikī. (Padma Purāṇa, Pātāla Khaṇḍa, Chapter 57).
10) The end of Sītā. (See under Rāma, Para 35).
ŚIṬĀI. A river. Mention is made in Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 165, Verse 102, that once the hermit Mārkaṇḍeya saw this river also in the stomach of child Mukunda (Śrī Kṛṣṇa). This is one of the seven branches of the river Ganges. (See under Śindhu).
ŚIṬAPUTAṆĀ. A ferocious she-devil. (Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 230, Verse 28). This terrible monster causes abortion in women.
ŚIṬASI. A river flowing through Sākadvīpa and famous in the Purāṇas. (Mahābhārata, Bhīma Parva, Chapter 11, Verse 32).
ŚIṬIKANṬHA. A nāga which was in the company of the nāgas that came to lead the soul of Balabhadrarāma to Pātāla. (Mausala Parva, Chapter 4, Verse 16).
ŚIṬIKESĀ. A warrior of Subrahmanyā. (Sāyta Parva, Chapter 45, Verse 61).
ŚIVA (RUDRA). One of the Trinity.
1) Birth. The seers or spiritual giants of India imagined three forms to God, dividing all the activities into three departments, i.e. creation, sustenance and destruction or annihilation. Brahmā, for creation, Viṣṇu, for sustenance and Śiva, for annihilation - they are the Trinity. Viṣṇu was born first, Brahmā next and Śiva last. The essence of Indian spiritualistic thought is that these three visible forms of God will, at the close of the Kalpa cease to be and become one with the cosmic power, and that the Trinity will be born again at the commencement of the Kalpa and will take up their respective functions.
The dominant quality or attribute of Śiva is Tamas (darkness). Many stories, with slight variations, are told in the various Purāṇas about the birth of Śiva. Some of the more important stories are summarised below.
(i) At the beginning of the Kalpa, while Brahmā was meditating upon the birth of a son like himself, a child deep blue in colour, appeared on his lap, and the child began running about crying aloud. Brahmā asked the child why it was crying; then the child asked Brahmā to give him a name. Though Brahmā told him that his name was Rudra and asked him not to cry, he cried seven times more. Then Brahmā gave him another seven names, and for the total eight names eight Mūrtis (forms) wives and children were allotted. Bhava, Sarva, Iśāna, Paśupati, Bhima, Ugra and Mahādeva were the additional seven names, and Sun, Water, Earth, Wind, Fire, Sky, the Brahmin who has taken dīkṣā and Moon were the eight Mūrtis and the presiding deities allotted to them. To these deities the following wives were also allotted, i.e. Suvacalā, Usā, Viśeśī, Śivā, Śvāhā, Dīkṣā and Rohini. The world is full with their progenies. Sanaī cara, Sukra, Lohitāṅga, Manojava, Skanda, Sarga, Santāna and Budha are the sons of the above eight wives. This Rudra married Sati, daughter of Dakṣaprajāpati. (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Part 1, Chapter 8).

(ii) Brahmā whose predominant quality or attribute is rajas was born from the navel of Mahāvīśnu. From the Centre of the brow of Brahmā was born Rudra of Tāmaseic quality. Brahmā, by the power of his tapas, acquired the power of creation and created a red-coloured world by his attribute of rajas. The very same world is annihilated by Rudra at the close of the Kalpa period. (Devi Bhāgavata, 7th Skandha).

(iii) From the wrath of Brahmā was born Rudra, from his lap Nārada, from his finger Dakṣa, from his mind Sanaka and others, and from his left finger a daughter called Viraṇi. (Devi Bhāgavata, 7th Skandha).

(iv) Four ‘mental sons’ of Brahmā Sanaka, Sanandana Sanātana and Sanatkumāra showed disinclination to beget progenies. Brahmā got angry at this attitude of the four sons and from the centre of his brow was born a body blue and white in colour, and he, in tears, requested Brahmā for names and stations. Blessing him by saying ‘mā ruda’ (do not cry) Brahmā allotted him names and stations. He became famous by the name Rudra. He was also given eleven more names by Brahmā as follows: Manyu, Manu, Mahinasa, Mahān, Śiva, Rudhivaja, Ugraretas, Bhava, Kāma, Vāmadeva and Dhīravatara. These names are otherwise famous as follows: Aja, Ekapada, Ahirbudhnya, Tvaṣṭa, Rudra, Hara, Sambru, Tryambaka, Aparājita, Iśāna and Trihuvana. The eleven Rudras were also allotted the following eleven positions by Brahmā i.e. heart, the five organs of the body, vital force (Prāṇa) wind, fire, water, earth, sun and moon. Rudra has eleven wives, called Dhī, Vṛti, Uṣāṇa, Umā, Niṣṭā, Sarpis, Ilā, Ambikā, Irāvati, Sudhā and Dīkṣā. Rudra, under the name Śiva, is considered to be the third of the trinity. The doctrine is that as long as time is real, deluge, or annihilation does not take place. Therefore, Rudrasamhāra (annihilation by Rudra) may be taken to mean only as the beginning of new creation.

(v) At the commencement of Yuga (era) Brahmā was born from the navel of Viṣṇu. Two asuras called Madhu and Kaitabha rushed up to kill Brahmā, and from the brow of Viṣṇu, who got angry towards the asuras was born Siva holding in his hands Śūla (the three-pronged trident). (Vānu Parva, Chapter 12).

2) Family life. Śiva has two wives, Gaṅgā and Pārvatī (See under Gaṅgā and Pārvatī). He lodged Gaṅgā on his head. Umā, Kāṭyāyani, Gauri, Kāli, Haimavatī Iśvari, Śivā, Bhavāni, Rudrāni, Śavāni, Sarasvamāgalā Apārni, Pārvatī, Durgā, Mrdāni, Candraikā, Ambikā, Āryā, Dāksṣikāni, Giriā, Menakāmajā, Cāmuṇḍā, Karṇamoti, Cārcikā and Bhairāvī—these are synonyms of Pārvatī. Śiva lives on the top of the Mahāmeru, where there are nine cities. At the centre is Brahmās

Manovatī; exactly to the east of it is Indra’s Amarāvati; at the south-eastern corner is Agni’s Tejovatī; on the south is Yama’s Satiyamani; at the south-western corner is Kṛṣṇājanī of Nīrtti; on the west is Varuṇa’s Sraddhāvatī; at the north-western corner is Gaṇadhāvatī of Vāyu, on the north is Kubera’s Mahodaya, at the north-eastern corner is Śiva’s Yāsottavatī—this is the set of the nine cities.

Two sons called Subrahmanyā and Gaṇapati were born to Śiva of Pārvatī, and they are his actual sons. Some other sons also were born to him in his assumed forms and by other women. Such have been Indrajit, Hanumān and others. For details see the respective words. (Devi Bhāgavata, 9th Skandha, 9th Skandha; Kathāsārītāgama, Kathāmukhālabakā).

3) Incarnations. Śiva has taken several partial incarnations, the chief of which are given below.

(i) Durvāsas. (See under Durvāsas).

(ii) Vānara (Monkey). Śiva, Pārvatī and their attendants like Nandiśekava once transformed themselves into monkeys and played about on the Himālayas. Rāvana, who came there on the occasion ridiculed Nandišekava, who, in great rage, cursed Rāvana that monkeys would destroy him. Being thus cursed Rāvana raised Kailāsa from its foundations and played with it. (Uttara Rāmāyaṇa).

(iii) Śakti. Śiva incarnated himself as Sakti, son of Vasiṣṭha and was devoted by Kalmāṣapaḍa, who took the form of a Rākṣasa. (Vāmanā Purāṇa, Chapter 6).

(iv) Varuṇa. Śiva once assumed the form of Varuṇa and conducted a yajña which was attended by the Vedas in assumed forms. (M.B. Anuśasana Parva, Chapter 85).

4) Boons granted by Śiva. The Purāṇas refer to various persons, who had earned boons from him and others who attained heaven on account of their devotion for him. The following are important among such persons.

(i) Simhavakra—(Skandā Purāṇa, Asura Kanda).

(ii) Rukmi—(Bhāgavata, 10th Skandha).

(iii) Bāna—(Bhāgavata, 10th Skandha).

(iv) Sudakṣīna—(Bhāgavata, 10th Skandha).

(v) Śāva—(Bhāgavata 10th Skandha).

(vi) Vṛkṣāra—(Bhāgavata, 10th Skandha).

(vii) Ratidevi—(Kathāsārītāgama, Lāvāṇakalabakā, Tārāṅga 1).

(viii) Indrajit—(Uttara Rāmāyaṇa).

(x) Gāndhāri—(M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 109, Verse 107).

(xi) A rṣi girl—(M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 168, Verse 6).

(xii) Prabhānjan—(M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 214, Verse 20).

(xiii) Śvetakī—(M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 222, Verse 41).

(xiv) Jarāsandha—(M.B. Sabhā Parva, Chapter 14, Verse 64).

(xv) Bānāsura—(M.B. Sabhā Parva, Chapter 33, Southern text).

(xvi) Maṅkaṇa—(Vana Parva, Chapter 83, Verse 132).

(xvii) Sagara—(Vana Parva, Chapter 106, Verse 15).
6) Incidents:

(i) How Siva got the name Jimūṭaketu. (See under Jimūṭaketu).

(ii) He became Kapāli. (See under Kapāli).

(iii) Sin of Brahmatatā on Sīva. As he plucked off the head of Brahmatatā Sīva became subject to the sin of Brahmatatā. Blue in colour and with grey hair, terrible Brahmatatā approached Sīva who asked her what she was and why she came. She answered that she was Brahmatatā and asked Sīva to take her into him. She entered his body so that he felt a burning sensation all over him. In this condition Sīva went to Bādaryārama. But, the great Rśis, Naranāraṇapās were not there in the ārama. Sad at heart Sīva went to the river Yamunā to take a bath. But the river dried up. Then he went to Plakṣa island to bathe but the island disappeared. Then he went to Puṣkārāṇya, Māgadhārāṇya, Saindhavārāṇya, Naimiṣārāṇya, Dharmārāṇya etc. all to no purpose. He got worn out but could not have a bath. The terrible Brahmatatā did not leave him. Though he visited sacred rivers, ārāmas and temples and practised Yoga, Sīva did not get redemption from sin. At last, in great disappointment he went to Kurukṣetra, where he saw Viṣṇu. With folded hands Sīva praised Viṣṇu who advised him the following means for absolution from sin. “A Bhagavān born from my aspect under the name Yoṣaṇīyī is living at Prayāga. The great river Varuṇa which has started from the right leg of Yoṣaṇīyī and which redeems all sins as also the sublime river Asī, which has started from his left leg are both worshipped by the whole world. The temple of Yoṣaṇīyī is at the centre of these rivers, and that is a sacred place most important in the three worlds and annihilative of all sins. That city is the great Vārāṇasī. Even materialistic or worldly people get salvation there. It is my (Viṣṇu) ārāma. There dwells Sūrya called Lōla destroying all sins. The place where Keśava my aspect lives, is Daśāśvamedha. If you go there you will get redemption from sin.”

Thus directed by Viṣṇu Sīva went to Vārāṇasī and achieved absolution from the sin of Brahmatatā by bathing in the holy tirthas there. (Vāmana Purāṇa, Chapter 3).

(iv) Birth of Vīrabhadra. (See under Daśa),

(v) Water in Kālindī got dark in colour. (See under Pārvatī, Para 2).

(vi) Sīva became Nāgabhūtāṇa. (See under Nāgāstram),

(vii) Blessed Sukēṣa. Vidyutkesa, the Rākṣasas married Śālakaṭaṭkā, daughter of Sandhyā. While they toured the world round enjoying their honeymoon Śālakaṭaṭkā conceived and delivered in due course a son in the valley of Mount Mandara. Sīva and Pārvatī, who passed that way in an aerial chariot saw the child and came down to it. By the blessing of Sīva the child grew up to a youth very quickly. Sīva named him Sukēṣa and after blessing that he would grow up to become a pious soul disappeared from the scene. (Uttara Rāmāyaṇa).

(viii) Sīva, the father of Indrajit. (See under Indrajit, Para 2).

(ix) Four faces of Sīva. (See under Tilottamā, Para 2).

(x) Sword of Sīva. Sīva holds a sword in his hand to destroy the asura tribe. The following is told in Chapter 166 of Sānti Parva about the origin of the sword.
Brahmā when he created the universe also laid down laws to keep living beings in the path of righteousness. But, the asuras did not conform to those laws. So, the maharṣis decided that there should be some other means to instruct the asuras. They conducted a Brahmaprājñā at the Himālayas. A terrible Jin (Evil Spirit) emerged from the sacrificial pit.

At the emergence of the Jin the earth shook; the great sea grew wild with waves and eddies. Lightning and shooting stars appeared and branches of trees were torn asunder. A vicious whirl-wind swept the ten regions. All living beings trembled at the sight of the Jin.

Brahmā appeared to the frightened maharṣis and told them that it was not a Jin, but only the sword for the destruction of the asura tribe. Śiva took the sword in his hand, and as soon as he touched it he became possessed of four hands. "Śiva, whose head touched the sun, who had the third eye and from whose mouth flames of fire emerged, who changed himself to various colours like blue, white, and red, who wore deer skin with golden spots, who had on his forehead an eye as effulgent as the Sun—such Śiva took in his hands the fiery sword and raising his shield he swirled the sword in various directions."

When Śiva, who thus became terrible, walked with the sword amidst the asura army the entire asura forces were annihilated and the Deva came out victorious.

7) Daring deeds of Śiva.

(i) Clash With Viṣṇu. Though there were differences of opinion between Śiva and Viṣṇu on many occasions, only very rarely had occurred actual clashes between the two. The Purāṇas refer to two such important clashes. One has reference to a direct fight Śiva fought with Viṣṇu and the other is about Śiva's fight with Nārāyaṇa-rāṣṭra, an incarnation of Viṣṇu. There was no reason for the direct fight between Śiva and Viṣṇu. The Devas wanted to test who was the more powerful of the two, Śiva or Viṣṇu, and they told Brahmā about the idea. By carrying tales to them, one against the other, Brahmā made Śiva and Viṣṇu mutual enemies. The enmity led to a fight between the two. Viṣvakarman made a bow for each of the contestants. In the fight between the two Śiva got defeated. Śiva, who got angry at his temporary defeat presented his bow and arrow to Devarāga, King of Videha. It was this bow, which Śrī Rāma broke at the wedding of Sītā in a later period. As soon as the fight was over the Devas realised that Viṣṇu was greater than Śiva. After the fight Viṣṇu gave his bow to Rṣiṇi, the Bhīruga muni. Jamadagni got it from Rṣiṇi, and he gave it to Parasurāma. It was with this bow that Parasurāma confronted Śrī Rāma on his way back after wedding Sītā. (Vālmiki Rāmāyaṇa, Bālakāṇḍa, Canto 75).

The following story is related in the Anuśāsana Parva of Mahābhārata about the fight between Nārāyaṇa-rāṣṭra, incarnation of Viṣṇu and Śiva. Śiva, in great fury, threw his Śula into the Yajñā hall of Dakṣa, and the Śūla after reducing the Yajñā, to ashes, hit the breast of Nārāyaṇa-rāṣṭra, who was doing tapas in Badarikāśrama. Nārāyaṇa raised the sound ‘Hum’ as a result of which the Śūla returned to Śiva's hands, who, in great anger, rushed forward to Nārāyaṇa. Nārāyaṇa placed his hand on Śiva's throat with the result that it became dark in colour. Thenceforth Śiva came to be known as Śīlakṣṇaḥ also.

Nārāyaṇa plucked a blade of grass and recited some mantras. It became a paraśu (axe). He threw it at Śiva, who broke it into pieces, which act gave him the additional name of Khaṇḍaparaśu also. The fighting became fierce and the world began burning. Fire refused to receive offerings made; Rṣis could not recollect the Vedas; Rajas and Tamas attacked Devas; the earth shook; planets became dim and dark; Brahmā fell down from his seat; sky came down; oceans got dry; the Himālayas crumbled. On the continuous appearance of such ill omens Brahmā and all the Devas came to the battlefield. Saluting Rudra Brahmā told him thus: "Oh! Lord! Let good happen to the world. In the interests of the welfare of the world you would please give up arms. The Naranārāyaṇas are upholders of righteousness; they are the incarnations of the indestructible and supreme sages. I was born from their pleasure. You were born from their wrath."

On hearing these words of Brahmā Śiva cooled down.

(ii) Rendered Kāmadeva bodyless (limbless). See under Kāmadeva, Parva 4. (iii) Bore Gāṅga on the head. See under Gāṅgā. (iv) Consumed Kālākūṭa. Owing to the curse of Durvāśas the Devas were subjected to symptoms of old age, and to produce amṛta (nectar) as remedy for this unfortunate development, the churning of Kyārhābdhi (ocean of milk) was started. Vāsuki, the snake, was used as cord to rotate mount Mandara, which was used as the churning rod. When the churning became very intense, the mortal poison Kālākūṭa emerged out of Vāsuki's mouth. (Another view is held that Kālākūṭa rose out of the milk-sea). On the emergence of the deadly poison the asuras ran off in great fear, the Devas got bewildered, Bāli and Sugrīva too got frightened; and without exhibiting his fright Viṣṇu covered his face; on the whole it appeared as though the entire world would be reduced to ashes.

At this critical moment, Śiva, reputed for his reckless daring, put all the Kālākūṭa into his mouth. Frightened at it Pārvatī held Śiva's throat by her hands so that the poison did not enter his stomach. At the same time Mahāviṣṇu covered with his hands Śiva's mouth so that the poison was not spread out. Kālākūṭa thus prevented from going down into the stomach or being vomited from Śiva's throat got itself digested in the throat giving it a blue colour. Thus did Śiva become Nilakṛntha (of the blue throat). Viṣṇu and Pārvatī who were affected by the flames of the poison became Nilavarna and Kālī respectively. (Kamba Rāmāyaṇa, Yuddhakāṇḍa).

(v) Destroyed Dakṣa's yajña. See under Dakṣa Para 3. (vi) Fought Śanakacūḍa. (See under Tulasī, Para 5). (vii) Burned the Tripuras. (See under Tripura). (viii) Fought Sūrya. Śiva once plucked out Brahmā's head (See under Kapāli 1), and Brahmā cursed Śiva that he should beg for food with that head (skull) in his hands. This fierce curse of Brahmā affected Śiva so much that, in uncontrollable wrath, he beat whomsoever he met. Thousands of Devas and others were killed. Sūrya, who relished not these atrocities of Śiva confronted him with out-stretched hands. Sīva held with one hand of his, both the hands of Sūrya from the fingers of which blood began to flow. Śīva turned Sūrya round and round by his hands with the result that the hands of Sūrya became short. When Sūrya became completely drenched in blood Siva let him free and walked to another side when Sūrya, laughingly challenged him again to fight. Greatly enraged by the challenge Siva fisteced him on the face with the result he lost all his teeth. Also he fell down unconscious. As Sūrya fell thus Bhaga looked with fierce eyes at Siva, who then struck the former on his face. Both the eyes of Bhaga fell down. The Devas were alarmed by it. Then all the Ādītīyas, under the leadership of Indra ran off to the ten regions along with the Maruts and Agni. Only prominent asuras like Prahālāda remained on the scene. They saluted Siva. Siva surveyed the yāga hall, the Devas and the asuras with his three eyes. All of them then ran away to different places. Siva looked at the three Agnis with his three eyes and they were reduced to ashes.

When Siva's anger subsided Sūrya was installed in his former form. (Vāmana Purāṇa, Chapter 5).

(x) Made five Indras Pāṇḍava. The Pāṇḍavas, in their former life, were Indras. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 199).

The Devas once conducted at Naimisāranya a lengthy yajñā of which Yama was the manager. In the absence of Yama there was no death on earth. Thus, human beings also, like the Devas, became Amartyas (deailness). Alarmed at this the Devas submitted their grievance to Brahmā who pacified them by saying that Yama would return as soon as the yajñā was over and then men will, as usual be subjected to the process of death. The Devas then returned to Naimisāranya, the scene of their yajñā when they saw a woman, lustrous as fire, descending the steps of Gaṅgā to carry water. She was sobbing and each drop of tear that fell into the waters of the river transformed itself into a lotus flower. As decreed by the Devas Indra approached the woman to get facts from her.

Indra asked her who she was and why she was weeping. The woman answered him not, but walked in silence, to the source of the Gaṅgā. Indra followed her. When they had thus walked some distance Siva and Pārvati were found in the forest at a game of dice, and Indra, afraid of Siva, ran way. But, Siva called him back and asked him to enter the cave there. When Indra did so after removing the mountain at the entrance of the cave he saw four Indras sitting there. They were called Viśvabhuḥ, Bhūtadhāmā, Sibi and Śānti. The woman whom Indra had followed was Śrīdevī. Siva blessed that the five Indras, in their next birth, would meet Śrīdevī. When the Indras saw Mahāviṣṇu after this he also blessed them, and promised them that he would incarnate and help them when they were born as men in their next life. Then Viṣṇu plucked a black and a white hair and put them on earth. The black hair was born as Śrī Kṛṣṇa in Devaki's womb and the white hair as Balabhadradāma in the womb of Rohini.

(xi) Kīrātārjunīyam. Arjuna once did tapas to Siva, who appeared to him in the garb of a hunter in the forest and presented to him the Pāṇḍupata arrow. (For details see under Arjuna, Para 20).

(xii) Fought with Mahiśāsura. (See under Mahiśāsura).

(xiii) Fought with Vṛtrāsura. See under Vṛtrāsura.

(xiv) Burnt Himavān. Siva once did tapas on the top of Himavān when Pārvati came behind him and covered his eyes with her hands. At once darkness enveloped the whole world, and when people suffered in the absence of day-light Siva opened his third eye. Himavān began getting burnt by the fire emitted by Siva's eye. Pārvati got alarmed at this and woke Siva up. He closed his third eye and Himavān resumed its former shape. (Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 104).

8) Worship of Siva. Innumerable people in India worship Siva and they follow different forms or systems of worship. There are forms of worship which follow the Vedas and which do not as also forms which are sātvic and which are not. The form of worship called Paraśupadapam (Pāṭpatam) is a very ancient one. It is believed that the paraśupadas once honoured and afterwards opposed the Vedas. The Siva linga at the place called Guḍamillam is supposed to be as old as the second century B.C.

One of the many symbols, which represent Siva, Sivalinga is the most important. They are of two kinds, the movable and the immovable. The immovable are those which appear by themselves or installed in temples. The movable are those made of earth, stone, timber, gems etc. There are also temporary lingas, which are placed on stools of various shapes. Lingas are made of he-stones and stools of 'she-stones'.

There are also various types of lingas indicative of the different attributes of Siva; for example Lingodbhava, Candrasekharā, Raudra, Umāśāhita etc. Kamāntaka, Gajāri, Kālāri, Tripurādāhaka etc. represent the Lord in his fierce aspects. Siva is also represented in poses of blessing Caṇḍesā, Viṣṇu, Nandīsā, Viṅgneśvara and Arjuna. He is also represented in various poses of dancing, Dakṣināmurti is represented in four forms, i.e. Vyākhyāna Jáana, Yoga and Viṅgādha. Bīkṣātaka, Kapālādhāri, Gaṅgādhāra, Ardhanārīśvara Viṃśabhāvāna and Viṃabhāsaka are other forms of Siva. Rarely is he depicted in the form of Sadāśiva, Mahēśvara, Ekaśārādars Vidyāvara and Mūrtyaṣṭaka. There are Agamas descriptive of these forms.

Gaṇapati occupies the most prominent place among Devas connected with Siva. Gaṇapati came to be worshipped from 6-7 centuries B.C. His present idols might have been made after this period.

There are many temples dedicated to Gaṇapati in South India. Chief among the idols are itāmpirī (proboscis turned to the left side) and valāmpirī (proboscis turned to the right side). Gaṇapati is a physical aspect of Siva. Being the God who removes obstacles in the devotee's path, Gaṇapati is called Viṅgneśvara. The universe is contained in his big stomach.

Next to Gaṇapati in importance is Subrahmanya. He is worshipped in South India only. Kumāra, Muruka, Kārttikeya, Skanda, Ārumukha, Guha etc. are some of his popular synonyms. There are a number of Subrahmanya temples in Tamil Nādu, many of them on the tops of hills. In North India Subrahmanya temples are rare. But, books written during the Saṅgha period go to prove that Subrahmanya was worshipped in South India from very olden times. He is depicted in many postures, sitting, with six faces, with only one face, with two hands, with four hands, with wife, wearing the sacred thread etc.

Now, about Śakti idols. Śakti is the Devi closest to Śiva. In South India there are special Śakti temples called Śaktiīṭālayas. Durgā is the most important among... the manifestations of Śakti. There are idols of Durgā as standing in the lotus flower and also as mounted on the lion. Āgama also refer to nine kinds or forms of Durgā i.e. Nilakanti, Kṣemankari, Harasiddhi, Raudrā, Vanā, Agni, Jayā, Vindhyavāsini, and Ripunāsini. Durgā’s most terrible form is as Mahiśāsura-mardini, found at Mahābalipuram, Ellora and other places. Durgā is also called Ĉandikā and Kātyāyani. Durgā is worshipped as Nāndā, Bhadrakālī, Amā, Bājamātangi etc.

9) Śiva’s life-period. Thousand Caturyugas constitute one day of Brahmā. According to the Purāṇas fourteen Indras fall dead from heaven during the life time of one Brahmā. Two such life times of Brahmā form one life time of Viṣṇu; at the end of the period he too will expire. Śiva’s life time is double that of Viṣṇu, according to Devi Bhāgavata, 5th Skanda. (For details see under Manvantara).

10) Śiva and creation of the universe. See under Creation).

11) Māyā Śiva. (See under Māyāśiva).

12) Sahasranāmas (thousand names) of Śiva. The thousand names of Śiva are mentioned mainly in Chapter 285 of Sānti Parva and Chapter 17 of Anuśāsana Parva of Mahābhārata. There are substantial differences between the two lists of names.

13) Aṣvathāmā and Śiva. (See under Aṣvathāmā Para 6).

14) Rudras. The Ekādaśarudras, viz. Mrgavyāḍha, Sarpa, Nirūti, Ajākapāt, Ahirbudhnya, Pināki, Īśvara, Kapāli, Sthānava and Bhrāga are the sons of Śiva. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 66).

15) Śivabhasma (Ashes worn by Śiva) The Purāṇas contain many references to the great power of Śivabhasman. The following story about even Viṣṇu turning out to be a devotee of Śiva on account of the sanctity of Śivabhasma is related in Chapter 101, Pātalikhanḍa of Padma Purāṇa.

In the beginning or during the Brahmaprālaya (deluge) Mahāviṣṇu was lying in the great waters of the deluge. On both sides of Viṣṇu hundred universes each and on both sides of his feet and at the centre of his head twenty universes each remained attached. One universe glowed as a gem on Viṣṇu’s nose. Mahārṣis like Lomaśa did tapas seated on his navel. Meanwhile Viṣṇu sat in deep meditation ready for creation. But, he did not find anything and began, therefore, sobbing. Then appeared an extra-mundane light at which he got frightened and closed his eyes. Śiva, rotating in both his hands a garland each made of a crore of universes appeared before Viṣṇu. He then stood up and enquired of the visitor who he was. Śiva exhibited his form. Śiva told Viṣṇu that he had not attained sufficient wisdom for creation and also advised him to achieve enough knowledge by first taking the Varuṇa bath and then the Bhasma bath.

To this Viṣṇu answered by saying that there was nowhere water enough for him to bathe, and he, who was closely surrounded by universes, sat in water. But, it came only up to his thighs. Then Śiva said laughingly that there was enough water for Viṣṇu to bathe and cast a glance at him with his (Śiva) eye on the forehead and also his left eye. And, immediately Viṣṇu’s body became very small and it began to shiver. Then Śiva said as follows: “Oh! Viṣṇu! Here is deep water, you may bathe in it. But Viṣṇu could not get into the tremendous pool created on Śiva’s lap. So, he requested Śiva for a passage to get into the pool. Śiva “Oh! Viṣṇu! Before this even though you sat in water, one crore yojanas in depth, it came only up to your thighs. But, now though you are on your legs you say you cannot enter the water. Look here, the water comes only up to my thighs. You may descend into it. I shall see to it that you can step into the water. A Vedic saying I recite will serve as the step.”

Viṣṇu:—Nobody can step on sound. One may ascend on what is material, i.e. with form; but, how could one step on that which is formless?

Śiva:—Why can you not get hold of that which is and ascend? You receive this great Veda. Viṣṇu received it, but it appeared that his hands were not strong enough to hold it. Śiva smiled at the inability of Viṣṇu and asked him to get down into water by the steps made of Veda and when Viṣṇu descended the steps into the water, it came only up to his thighs. He had his bath and then asked Śiva what he should do next. Śiva:—“What do you feel in your mind? Is it that you do not feel anything” Viṣṇu:—“I feel not anything. Śiva:—If you get sanctified by bhasmasnāna you will receive the ultimate knowledge. I shall give you the bhasma.

Śiva took a pinch of bhasma from his breast and chanting the Gāyatrī and pañcāśkara (Om namāśivāya) mantras sprinkled it all over the body of Viṣṇu. He also said to Viṣṇu, “You live, you meditate, now what do you feel in your mind?” Viṣṇu meditated whereupon he saw a very bright light in his heart. When he told Śiva that a light was being seen by him the latter said that his knowledge was not mature enough and asked him to eat some bhasma so that it might become perfect. Viṣṇu accordingly consumed the bhasma, and lo! he, who was till then red-blue in colour became as white as pearl. He began to be called Sūklaヴァraṇ (white in colour) from that day onwards.

Mahāviṣṇu felt happy and contented having seen Śiva, who asked the former what it was he saw in his mind just then. Answering that he saw the blissful form of Śiva before him Viṣṇu fell at the latter’s feet. To Śiva’s query as to what boon he desired to have, Viṣṇu replied that he wanted to become a devotee of Śiva and because of the greatness of the bhasma Viṣṇu thenceforward became a devotee of Śiva.

16) Śivalinga (Phallus). Worship of Śivalinga is a popular practice in India. The Purāṇas contain a number of stories about the importance Śivalinga achieved so as to make it an object of worship. Three of the more important stories are given below:

(i) Śiva wandered about the world lamenting over the death of Satidevi at the Yajña conducted by Dakṣa, and Kāmadēva followed him with his erotic arrows to exploit Śiva’s sorry predicament. During his wanderings Śiva once came to the Vindhyā mountain. Kāmadēva followed him there too and began attacking Śiva with his arrows and to escape from the fierce onslaught Śiva took refuge in the terrible Dīrūṣ forest. There Mahārṣis with their wives lived. Śiva saluted them and requested for alms. But, the Mahārṣis only kept mum. They did not like their wives saluting Śiva. Śiva went about the aśrama and all the women except Arundhati and Anasuyā, followed him overcome by lust for him. Enraged at this, munis like Bhārgava and Āṅgiras cursed éna phallos should drop to the ground. Immediately it fell down and Siva disappeared. The phallos rent asunder the earth, reached Pātāla and rent the universe also. The whole universe shook at which Brahmā met Visṇu at Pātāla and enquired of him the reason for the universal upheaval. Visṇu answered him that the world shook because of the weight of Siva’s phallos, which the mahārṣis had caused to be dropped.

Then Brahmā, along with Visṇu, came to the spot where Siva’s phallos lay. At the sight of the limitless phallos Visṇu, in great wonder, descended to Pātāla mounted on Garuḍa. Brahmā, on his plane, toured above. Both Visṇu and Brahmā returned to earth, having failed in their attempt to find the end of the phallos. They then praised Siva, who appeared to them. They requested him to take back his phallos from the earth. Siva insisted that he would do so only if the Devas agreed to worship his phallos. Visṇu agreed to the suggestion. Brahmā took the phallos, golden brassy in colour. Thereafter Mahāvisṇu created the four castes and various śāstraic texts for each of the castes to worship the phallos. The four texts are known as Saivam, Pāṇḍupatam, Kaḷadamanam and Kaḷālikam. After making the above arrangements Brahmā and Visṇu returned. Siva took back his phallos. (Vāmana Purāṇa, Chapter 6).

(ii) Eighty-eight thousand Bālakahiyas were born from the mind of Brahmā. They emaciated their bodies by constant baths, fasting and worship of Siva. Though they worshipped Siva thus for one thousand divya years, he did not appear in front of them.

Afterwards, when Pārvatī was travelling by sky one day, the latter saw and took pity on the Bālakahiyas and told Siva thus: “These mahārṣis are suffering like anything. For my sake, you should put an end to their sufferings. Has their evil fate no end? They are reduced to mere skin and bones, and yet they are denied realisation.”

Smilingly Siva told Pārvatī as follows “You do not know the real course of righteousness. These people do not understand righteousness; they are not free from lust and anger. They are mere fools.” At these words of Siva, Pārvatī told him thus: If things be as you have said please show me their nature, I feel interested. Then Siva asked Pārvatī to remain where she was, telling her that he would go to the Bālakahiyas and show her how they behaved. Accordingly Siva went to them.

Siva approached the Bālakahiyas in the guise of a handsome youth, wearing the Vanaṃālā garland on his head, holding the alms bowl in his hands and completely in the nude and requested for alms. The Woman-folk of the Advaitins were much attracted by the handsome youth and came to him with a lot of fruits, roots etc. by way of alms. Siva wished them good and Pārvatī espied her smiling lord from her seat.

After giving him alms the women spoke to him as follows: “Oh! anchorite, what penance are you practising? You have no clothes on you, but you wear Vamaṃālā. You are a handsome sannyāsi. If you have no objection, please tell us about you.” The sannyāsim (Siva) answered them by saying that his was a very secret penance and could not be imparted to others. Especially in the presence of so many others it could not be revealed. So, you may please go. But, the women said that they wished very much to hear the secret, and they caught hold of his hands saying ‘Come’.

The women were overcome by lust and one of them caught hold of his neck, another of his hands, another of his knees, another of his hair and yet another of his waist. Seeing the excitement of their wives the mahārṣis cried, ‘Strike him’ and struck down his phallos with sticks and stones. As soon as the phallos was thus felled down, Siva disappeared from the spot and returned to Kailāśa with Pārvatī.

When the phallos fell down the whole universe shook and the mahārṣis were alarmed. A very intelligent mahārṣi among them said:—“We know not the real facts about the great ascetic. Let us take refuge in Brahmā. He may know the facts.” Accordingly the mahārṣis went to Brahmā, who found fault with their ignorance and indiscretion and asked them to shed their anger and please Siva. Accordingly they went to Kailāśa and praised Siva, who appeared to them and told them as follows:—“You may now return. The phallos will belong to you. I shall be pleased if you would duly install it. Nothing will be impossible to those who worship my phallos with devotion. Even sins consciously committed will be removed by the worship of my phallos. You install the phallos you struck down in the great pond of Sannihita. That will achieve for you all your desires. Even the Devas will worship it under the name ‘Sthāṇu’. Being installed at Sthāṇvīvāra it will be known as Sthāṇvīvāra also. Constant meditation upon Sthāṇu will remove all sins. The sight of Sthāṇu will bring about salvation.”

After this the mahārṣis, along with Brahmā, returned to Dāru forest to carry the phallos to Sannihita. But, they could not move it even by an iota. They returned again to Kailāśa, but could not see Siva there. When Brahmā sat in meditation for sometime to know where Siva was, he saw in his mind Siva, in the guise of an elephant, standing in the stream praised by munis. Immediately Brahmā and others went there, but missed Siva there. But Pārvatī appeared there and served them amṛta (nectar). When they had consumed the nectar they saw Siva standing in the stream, and they spoke about their difficulties to him.

Siva, in the guise of the elephant, accompanied them to the Dāru forest where he, in sport, took the phallos by his proboscis and installed it on the banks of the stream. All those who witnessed the installation attained ultimate realisation. Upon the phallos thus installed Brahmā built another phallos with stone. After a period that phallos became one with the effulgence of the first phallos. Those who saw that also achieved ultimate realisation. Immediately Brahmā built, for the pleasure of the Devas, seven phalluses one upon the other, and sages attained ultimate realisation by smearing their bodies with the dust of the phalloses. The spot where the phallos was installed became famous by the name Sthāṇuṭirthā. (Vāmana Purāṇa, Chapter 45).

(iii) In the beginning Brahmā entrusted Siva with the duty of creation, and to earn the power for creation he lived under water for many generations. Siva having not returned though Brahmā waited for him long, the latter created the prajāpatis and got done by them all creations. Then it was that Siva, having acquired all the more power, came out of water. Siva who got angry that all creations were effected in his absence plucked his phallus and threw it into the earth. He said that, since matters of creation had been managed by Brahman, he needed the phallus no further. The phallus thus thrown by Siva stuck to the earth and remained pointed upwards. Next, Siva performed a dance of annihilation among the Devas. Ultimately, on the request of the Devas Siva deposited his fire of wrath in water. It is that fire which dries up water in seas, rivers etc. When Siva had shed his anger and become quiet the Devas worshipped the phallus, which had stuck to the earth, and thenceforth worship of Siva's phallus became popular. (M.B. Saupikta Parva, Chapter 17).

17) Sivalitiṣā (Sports of Siva). The Purāṇas refer to the following sixty-four lilās (sports) of Siva. (1) Devendra redeemed from sin. (2) Airāvata redeemed from sin. (3) Building of Madhurāpura in Kadamba forest. (4) Śrī Pārvatī born as Tatātākā. (5) Pândyaadeva wedded Tatātākā. (6) Dance before sage Patañjali (7) Kuṇḍodara granted power to consume much rice (8) Quenched Kuṇḍodara's hunger and thirst with rice etc. and waters of river Vaigā (9) Brought the seven seas near to please his wife (10) Brought Malayadhvaja down to earth from Devaloka (11) Created the son called Ugra (12) Ugra given three weapons like āśula (13) Removed the sea from his side (14) Broke the crown of Indra (15) Ugrapāndya given gold from Mahāmeru (16) Taught the mahārāṣṭras the meaning of Vedas (17) Sold gems to the King to make a crown (18) Made the clouds drink water from the ocean (19) Stopped excessive rain-fall (20) Exhibited the prowess of realisation (21) Made 'stone-elephant' eat sugar-cane (22) Killed the elephant which a Buddha sannyásin had sent after being subjected to black magic (23) Blessed a brahmin girl (24) Did various kinds of dances (25) Brought to light and proved the death of brahmin woman (26) Annihilated the evil or sin of having slept with the mother and killed the father (27) Killed Siddha to save the wife of preceptor, who taught archery (28) Made the snakes sent by Buddha sannyásins poisonless (29) Killed cows sent by the same sannyásins (30) Exhibited innumerable soldiers to save the commander-in-chief of the Pāṇḍya army (31) Gave the Pāṇḍya King a money-bag, which would never become empty (32) Disguised himself as a Vaišya and sold bangles (33) Granted aṣṭāśiddhis to Yakṣīs. (34) Opened the door of the temple for the Cola King (35) Supplied water to the Pāṇḍya army (36) Converted base metals into gold etc. (37) Defeated the Cola King (38) Gave a Śūdra a vessel filled with gingelly seeds (39) A Vaiśya boy given victory in a suit (40) Redeemed the Pāṇḍya King from the sin of brahmāhātā (41) Carried firewood to save the devotee named Bhadra (42) Wrote a letter to the Cera King on behalf of Bhadra (43) Bhadra presented with a planks (44) Bhadra's wife granted victory in nāgāvidyā (45) Assumed the form of pork and saved the small offsprings (46) Small pork made minister (47) A Khaṭṭārīja bird was taught the mṛtyunjaya mantra so that it could escape from the attack of crows (48) A Sarāri bird granted salvation (49) Boundaries of Madhurāpura shown by serpent (50) Defeated the Cola King (51) Dravidian scholars given the Sāṃghām plank (52) Wrote a verse for a brahmin at the instance of the Pāṇḍya King (53) Saved Nakkira (54) Nakkira taught śūtras (aphorisms) (55) Made a comparative study of thes (56) Visited northern Hālāsyā (57) Wedded fisher-girl (58) Jñānadikṣā (initiation into knowledge) given to the minister called Vatupureśa (59) Sold magic horses to the Pāṇḍya King (60) River made bigger (61) Carried mud for pancakes (62) Cured the fever and hunch-back of Kubja Pāṇḍya (63) Made Jñānasambandhar kill the naked ones on the Śūla (64) Brought tree, tank, Sivāliṅga etc. to Madhura as witnesses. (Hālāsyāmāhātya, Chapter 5).

18) Bull of Siva. Cows were born on earth from Surabhi. The foam of milk which flowed like sea from cows rose into waves and fell in Sivalhūmi (Siva land). Siva did not like it. He opened his third eye and looked at the cows. The flames from the eye caused different colours to the cows. The cows took refuge with Candra. But, the fire of Siva's eye followed the cows there also. At last the Prajāpatīs pacified Siva and presented him a bull for vehicle. From that day onwards Siva came to be known as Vṛṣabhävāhana and Vṛṣabhäṅka also. (Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 77).

19) Other information.

(i) The son Śuka was born to Vyāsa because of the blessing of Siva. (Devi Bhāgavata, 1st Skandha).

(ii) During the period of emperor Pṛthu when the Devas made the earth a cow and milked resources, Siva served as calf. (Drona Parva, Chapter 69, Verse 24).

(iii) Śiva occupies a seat in Kubera's court. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 10, Verse 21).

(iv) Śiva once presented an armour to Indra. (Drona Parva, Chapter 94, Verse 61).

(v) When the battle with the Tripuras reached its climax in intensity Śiva mounted the Bull and looked at the capital of the asuras. As a result of the fiery look the breasts of cows were cut and their hoofs rent into two. The hoofs of cattle came to be cleft from that day onwards. (Karna Parva, Chapter 34, Verse 105).

(vi) Living beings are kept healthy by the kindness of Siva. (Saupikta Parva, Chapter 18, Verse 20).

(vii) It was Siva, who organised the penal code in the world. (Śanti Parva, Chapter 59, Verse 80).

(viii) Once in the war between the Devas and the Asuras Śiva gave refuge to Śukraśāryā. (Śanti Parva, Chapter 389, Verse 36).

(ix) Śiva performed the thread-wearing ceremony of Śuka, the son of Vyāsa. (Śanti Parva, Chapter 248, Verse 19).

(x) On the occasion when Śiva burnt Tripuras and their city to ashes they saw him as a boy with five horns. (Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 160, Verse 32).

(xi) There is a story in Śanti Parva of Mahābhārata about Siva's bringing back to life the dead child of a brahmin. The story was told by Bhiṣma to Yudhīśthira. The brahmin took his dead child to the burning ghat when a fox asked him to wait at least till dusk to see if the child would regain life. At the same time a vulture, which came there pointed out to the brahmin that the dead never came back to life and asked him to leave the dead body there and return home. As advised by the fox and the vulture the brahmin took to the burning ghat and took back from there the dead body of his child. Pārvati took pity on the brahmin and as requested by her Śiva brought the child back to life. The logic and reasoning advanced by the fox and the vulture for their selfish ends is famous under the name Grhragomāyasuṇivāda.

Śivaśarman had, due to Siva's blessing, achieved all kinds of siddhis (spiritual gifts). By the power of illusion he showed the sons their mother lying dead and all the sons wept uncontrollably. Then he asked his eldest son Yajñuśarman, to cut the dead body of his mother into pieces and throw them off. After having done so he came and saluted his father.

After bidding adieu to Yajñuśarman, who proved his devotion to his father as above, Śivaśarman called his second son Vedāśarman to him and told him thus: "I find it difficult to get on without a woman. Look, there is a beautiful woman there endowed with all qualifications. (And he created such a woman by illusion). You go and fetch her to me." Vedāśarman, after saluting his father went to the woman and requested her to become the wife of his father. But, the woman did not want to become the wife of an old man, and she told Vedāśarman that she would love him, and not his father, to have as her husband. He shuddered to be told thus, and by the power of his tapas he got down Indra and other Devas on earth and showed them to her. She then told him in indifferent tone the following: "Yes, I have seen the prows of your tapas. But, I have nothing to do with Devas. If you want me as wife for your father, please cut off your head with your own hands for my pleasure." Vedāśarman drew his sword and very happily cut off his head and presented it to the woman. She came to Śivaśarman and requested him to accept his son's head, which he (son) had voluntarily cut off for the sake of his father.

The other sons of Śivaśarman shuddered at the sight of their brother's head. They told among themselves thus: "Our mother entered eternal Samādi, but this brother of ours, who courted death on behalf of her is really blessed." Then Śivaśarman asked his third son Dharmāśarman to receive his brother's head. He received it and went out with it and prayed to Dharmadeva, who, on his appearance, was requested to restore Vedāśarman to life. Dharmadeva did so, and the first question asked by Vedāśarman, who returned to life as though awakened from sleep, was about the woman, whom he had brought as his father's wife. Then Vedāśarman and Dharmāśarman returned to their father, and Dharmāśarman told the father about his bringing back to life his dead brother. Though the father felt very happy about the great devotion of his son he did not answer him (son).

Śivaśarman fell into contemplation for sometime and then told his fourth son, Viṣṇuśarman as follows: “You go immediately to Indraloka and bring amṛta (nectar) for me to drink along with this woman. Nectar removes diseases. Now, this woman has no interest in me. It is only natural that young, beautiful women will feel no love towards an old man and unless I regain my youth this woman of mine may sleep with others. You, my son, should act in such a manner that I can enjoy life with this woman in all the three worlds. As soon as he heard his father, Viṣṇuśarman, by the power of his tapas ascended to the sky and started for Indraloka. Being told about the object of his visit Indra deputed Menakī to make him withdraw from the plan. Immediately Menakī put on her best clothes and singing sweet music occupied the hanging seat in Nandavanā, and Viṣṇuśarman lost not a minute to divine the object of her presence. Without even casting a look upon her, he hurried forward. But, she jumped down from her seat, blocked his path and made enquiries about him. She also tried to make love to him. But, Viṣṇuśarman turned down her overtures of love. At this stage Indra adopted many magical tricks to frighten away the unwelcome visitor. Angered by such attempts Viṣṇuśarman got ready to destroy Devaloka along with Indra, who then begged pardon of him and handed over to him a pot full of nectar.

When Viṣṇuśarman gave the nectar to his father the latter asked him to choose any boon he wanted, and according to his request the father brought back to life Guṇavatī. Now Śivaśarman very much pleased with his sons sent the first four of them to Viṣṇuloka. He decided to live for some time more on earth with his youngest son, and he told the latter that he was going on a pilgrimage and asked him to keep the pot of nectar with him. The son kept it very carefully for ten years. Now Śivaśarman with his wife returned from pilgrimage. By magic he had become a leper, and made his wife also a leper. Somaśarman, his youngest son felt pained that his parents had fallen victims to such a fell disease and served them with meticulous care in every way. He foresaw their wants and desires and satisfied them to the full. Yet, the father lost temper with the son and used even to fist him. But, the son did not lose his temper in any manner and to the least degree. He continued to serve his parents most cheerfully.

A century was over in this manner. The parents were greatly satisfied and pleased with their son, and ultimately the father cast one more illusion on the son. After stealing away by magic the nectar from the pot, he asked the son for it. When Somaśarman looked into the pot for nectar, to his horror it was missing. But, he took the pot to his father saying to himself, 'Let there be nectar in it if I am truthful, if I have served my elders well and if I have observed pure tapas', and lo! the pot was filled with nectar.

Śivaśarman blessed his son, and by the power of his yoga ascended to Vaikuṇtha in the company of his wife. After this Somaśarman began practising the most intense form of tapas. When the time for his death was near asuras approached him. Fear about asuras gripped him, who was in deep meditation, and as he breathed his last thinking about asuras he was born in his next life as Prahlāda, son of Hiranyakā-īpu and got killed by Viṣṇu in the war between Devas and Asuras. (Padma Purāṇa, Bhūmi Khanda).

ŚRĪBHĀṆU. A son of Satyabhāmā. She had ten sons including Śrībhāṇu. (Bhāgavata 10th Skandha).

ŚRĪBIMBĀKI. Father of Mrgaṅkavatī. (See under Śrīdatta)

ŚRĪDATTĀ. Son of Kālanemi a Brāhmaṇa of Mālavā land. Kālanemi and Vigatabhaya were the sons of a Brāhmaṇa named Yajñasena. After the death of their father they went to Pāṭaliputra for education. The teacher gave his two daughters in marriage to them. By the blessing of goddess Lakṣmi, Kālanemi became rich in course of time and he was also blessed with a glorious son. Since he was given by the blessing of Lakṣmi (Śrī) he was named Śrīdatta. Śrīdatta grew up and became an expert in archery. Kālanemi's younger brother, Vigatabhaya left home and went on a pilgrimage after his wife's death by snake-bite. Kālanemi's king, Vallabhāsākți was pleased with Śrīdatta and invited him to live in the palace. In this way, he became the intimate friend of the king's son, Vikrama Sakti. After that, Bāhuśāḷi and Vajramusti, the princes of Avanti became the friends of Śrīdatta. Mahābala, Vvāghrabhaṭa, Upendraḥala and Niṣṭhāraka, who were the Minister's sons, also sought the protection of Śrīdatta.

One day, Śrīdatta along with Vikramaśakti and other companions went to bathe to the banks of the Gaṅgā. While they were there, the party of friends began to engage in some amusements. Śrīdatta assumed the role of a king and the others posed as his subjects. Vikramaśakti, the king's son, could not tolerate it. He challenged Śrīdatta for a fight. In the fight Vikramaśakti was defeated. But he secretly resolved to kill Śrīdatta by hook or by crook. Śrīdatta understood his secret plan.

After leaving Vikramaśakti, Śrīdatta was walking with the others along the river-bank when he saw a woman struggling for life because she was caught in a whirlpool in the middle of the river. Śrīdatta at once left his companions and jumped into the river and swam up to her. When he was almost within reach of her hair the woman sank into the water. Śrīdatta also sank and followed her, but after some time, he found neither the woman nor even water. He found himself in a Śiva temple. He offered worship there and took rest in a park close by. The next morning a woman came to worship in the temple. When she returned after worship, Śrīdatta followed her. The woman who was alarmed, walked faster and at last reached a heavenly abode. She entered the house and took her seat on a cot inside. Śrīdatta also got in and sat near the cot. Many other women came and stood around her. Without any apparent reason she began to cry. Śrīdatta who was puzzled, asked her why she was crying. She replied to him in the following words :-

"I am the grand-daughter of the Asura king, Mahābala. I am the eldest of his one thousand grand-daughters. My name is 'Vidyutprabhā'. Viṣṇu has captured and imprisoned our grandfather, Mahābala. He has also killed our father in battle. After that he has expelled us all from our Capital city. To prevent us from entering it again, he has posted a lion as sentry..."
at the palace gate. That lion is a Yaksha who was cursed by Kubera. If any one defeats him, he would be liberated from his curse. By defeating that lion, you will get a divine sword. With that you can defeat anyone.” As soon as he heard this story, Sridatta rushed towards the lion. In the fight that followed, the lion was defeated and it was suddenly transformed into the old Yaksha. Pleased with the hero who was instrumental in lifting his curse, he gave Sridatta a sword called “Mrgāṅkākā” and then disappeared. Vidyutprabhā entered the palace, accompanied by her sisters and Sridatta. She gave a ring to Sridatta which had the power to destroy the effects of poison. She fell in love with him. She asked him to take a bath in the tank close by after giving the sword to her, and undertook to kill any crocodile which might attack him. Sridatta, keeping the sword in his own hand, stepped into the water and sank into it. But he rose up in the river Gaṅgā into which he had jumped earlier. He reached the bank of the river and went in search of his companions. On the way, he met with Niśṭhūraka. In the course of their talk, Niśṭhūraka informed Sridatta that, Vallabhaśakti passed away and Vikramaśakti was then ruling over the country. The new king had killed Kālanemi and was on the look-out for murdering Sridatta. Both of them resumed their journey and when they reached Ujjayini, they met with the rest of their friends. On their way, a woman joined their party. She had lost her way while going to the land of Mālava. Sridatta and Niśṭhūraka walked in the company of that woman and at last they arrived at a deserted city. They spent the night in that city. During the night when Sridatta happened to wake up, he saw to his horror, that the woman had killed his friend Niśṭhūraka and was eating his flesh. Sridatta at once drew his sword and caught hold of her hair and was about to cut off her head when she was transformed into a Rākṣasa woman. She prayed to him not to kill her and told him her story. She had become a Rākṣas woman by a curse. Long ago Viśvāmitra did tapas to obtain Kubera’s place. At that time Kubera sent her to break Viśvāmitra’s tapas. Since she failed in her attempts to attract him by her charms, she tried to subdue him by assuming the form of a terrible monster. The sage thereupon cursed her to become a Rākṣas woman with that figure. He declared that the curse would be lifted when Sridatta grasped her hair. She added that she had been killing and eating the inhabitants of that city for a long time and that explained why the city had become deserted. Now that she was liberated from the curse, she asked Sridatta what boon he wished to have.

He replied that he only wanted his friend to be restored to life. After reviving Niśṭhūraka, she disappeared. Early next morning they reached Ujjayini. There, they met their old friends, Bāhuśālī and others. Sridatta described to them his experiences after sinking in the Gaṅgā.

Later, once when Sridatta went to a festival, he happened to meet Mrgāṅkāvati, daughter of a King named Śrībimbakī. They fell in love with each other. When she left the place, Sridatta felt very much depressed. Bāhuśālī and others also knew about it. They offered to take him to Mrgāṅkāvati. But just then she fell down unconscious, bitten by a snake. Sridatta soon restored her with the help of the magic ring which Vidyutprabhā had given him earlier. After that he returned with his friends to Bāhuśālī’s house, leaving behind the ring with Mrgāṅkāvati. The King was deeply grateful for the cure of his daughter sent plenty of wealth and gold to Sridatta. But Sridatta gave all of them to Bāhuśālī’s father. He was always doting on Mrgāṅkāvati and was much pained at his separation from her. At this stage, the princess’ favourite maid came to him on the pretext of returning the magic ring and informed him that Mrgāṅkāvati was also pining for him and was even prepared to die for his sake. Sridatta sent her back with a secret message of love and cheer. After that in consultation with his friends he made a plan to take the princess secretly to Mathurāpurī. On the next day, Bāhuśālī with three of his friends left for Mathurā pretending to go there for trade. He made all arrangements on the way for the secret conveyance of the princess. That night, Sridatta sent a woman and her daughter to the palace after making them senseless with heavy drink and arranged for their sleeping there. As directed by Sridatta, Bhāvaniya set the palace on fire and slipped out of the building with the princess. Sridatta sent them at once to Mathurāpurī. The woman and her daughter who were burnt alive in the palace were supposed to be the maid and the princess. Sridatta set out to Mathurā to meet Mrgāṅkāvati. On the way he saw several evil omens. On arrival at Vindhyavana, he saw his friends lying helpless, after having been severely beaten up by unknown enemies. They informed him that a stranger leading a powerful army overpowered them and galloped away on horseback, taking the princess with him.

Sridatta immediately started in pursuit of the unknown enemy. Shortly after, he caught sight of the army led by a Kṣatrīya prince who was taking Mrgāṅkāvati on horseback with him. After a fierce fight, Sridatta rescued the princess from the youth, captured his horse and rode on it with her towards his friends. When they had gone a short distance, the horse which had been wounded in the battle, fell dead on the way. At that time he went in search of water to quench their thirst, leaving Mrgāṅkāvati at the spot. By the time he returned with water, the sun had set. So he lost his way and wandered about in the forest till day-break when he reached the place where he had left Mrgāṅkāvati. But she was not seen anywhere there. To get a better view of the neighbourhood in the hope of finding her, he climbed to the top of a tree near by, after placing his sword on the ground. Just then a hunter named Sabara came that way and took up Sridatta’s sword. Sridatta saw this, but he got down from the tree and instead of attacking him, merely asked him whether he knew about the whereabouts of Mrgāṅkāvati. To this Sabara said that he thought that she had reached his cottage and asked Sridatta to accompany his followers to the cottage. He also offered to go with him and promised to return his sword after reaching there. Sridatta reached the cottage with them. Being utterly exhausted, he fell into a deep slumber. When he woke up he found that his legs were chained together. While he was lying thus, a woman named Mocanikā approached him and said:—“Why did you come here to court death? Sabara has now gone out on some business. As soon as he returns he will offer you as a sacrifice to Bhadrakāli. It is for that purpose that he has brought you here and put in chains. But there is yet one way of escape for you. This Sabha has a very beautiful daughter. She has fallen in love with you. If you marry her everything will turn out well.”

For his own safety, Sridatta married Sabha’s daughter according to the Gândharva method. Shortly after, she became pregnant. Her maid Mocanikā informed her mother all about it. That kind and affectionate mother came to Sridatta and said:—“Sabara is a very cruel man. If he comes to know of this, he will never forgive you. Therefore you must leave the place at once, but you should never forget my daughter.” With these words she took leave of him. Sridatta disclosed the story of that sword to her and started on his journey again, in search of Mrgāṅkavatī. From a hunter whom he happened to meet on the way, he came to know that she was living in a place called Nāgasthala near Mathurā, under the protection of Viṣṇadatta, a Brāhmaṇa.

Sridatta at once went to Viṣṇadatta’s house and made enquiries about his wife. Viṣṇadatta informed him that he hadentrusted her with a Brāhmaṇa who was the minister and priest of King Śūrasena. He suggested that Sridatta should stay with him that day and they could proceed to Śūrasena’s place next morning. Sridatta accordingly stayed there and started for Mathurā at day-break on the next day. On the way he took bath in a tank just outside the city. While bathing he happened to get a silk cloth and a necklace of beads from the bed of the tank. After his bath, he entered the city with the silk and necklace. Mistaking him for a thief, the police arrested him. Really the silk and necklace had been hidden in the tank by thieves. Sridatta was produced before the King with the stolen articles. The king condemned him to death. Mrgāṅkavatī who was staying in the custody of the minister happened to see Sridatta being taken to the place of execution. She immediately ran up to the minister and told him that Sridatta was her husband. When the King came to know it, he ordered him to be brought back to the palace. As soon as Sridatta saw the minister, he felt certain doubts about his identity. The minister had a striking resemblance to his father’s brother Vigatabhaya who had left home years ago. His doubts were confirmed when the minister revealed his identity and the two embraced each other after their long separation. Sridatta narrated the whole story of his sufferings and misfortunes beginning from the murder of Kālanemi up to that time. On hearing his tragic story, the minister burst into tears and told him that he had received a boon from a Yakṣi by which he had obtained 5000 horses and plenty of wealth. All this he gave to Sridatta and his wife.

The king of that country had a daughter. Sridatta’s next plan was to marry her also. Vigatabhaya gave him the necessary help. The minister took her with Sridatta and his friends on the pretext of offering worship at the temple in Avantī. They had to encounter a band of robbers on the Vindhya mountain. Sridatta was overpowered and the robbers plundered all their wealth. Vigatabhaya and others were captured. Sridatta was taken to be sacrificed to Bhadrakāli. When he was about to be sacrificed, his wife, the daughter of Sabara arrived there with her son. It was within the territory of Śrīcānda. She stopped the robbers from performing the sacrifice and returned to her own house with Sridatta. The Cāndāla band took Vigatabhaya and others to Sridatta and they were released. After the death of King Sabara, Sridatta became the King of that wood. He got back his sword Mrgāṅkaka. He married the daughter of Śūrasena. Sridatta’s friends also came there. All of them joined together and killed Vikramaśakti in a battle. After that Sridatta was crowned king of the whole country up to the ocean. (Kathāsaritsagāra, Kathāmahakalabhaka, Tārāṅga 2)

ŚīrīDEVĀ. Daughter of King Devaka. This princess was married by Vasudeva. They lived on six sons including Nandaka. (Śīlāgavata, Navamā Skandha; Viṣṇu Purāṇa, 1.18)

ŚīrīDHARA. A king who lived in Tretāyuga. (For more information see under Vṛataṇu).

ŚīrīKRŚNA. See under Kṛṣṇa.

ŚīrīKUNDA. A holy place. If one worships Brahmā at this holy place famous in the three worlds, one would get the benefit of the gift of a thousand cows. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 82, Verse 85).

ŚīrīKUNDALĀ. Sūn of the Vaiśya Hemakundā. (See Para 2 under Yamanā).

ŚīrīKUṆJA. A Sarvasvati tirtha situated in Kurukṣetra. By bathing in this tirtha, one gets the same reward as by performing an Aṇgniṣṭoma yajña. (Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 83, Verse 103).

ŚīrīMADBHAGAVADGITĀ PARVA. A sub-division of Bhīṣma Parva in Mahābhārata. Chapters 13 to 42 of Bhīṣma Parva are included in it.

ŚīrīMĀN. Son of Nimi, who was the son of Dattātreya.

ŚīrīMĀTĀ. An aspect of Devī who incarnated to kill the Rākṣasa named Karṇāṭaka who used to abduct the wives of Mahārsi in the disguise of a Brāhmaṇa. (Skanda Purāṇa, 3:2: 16-18).

ŚīrīMĀTĪ I. A Gandharva maid. In Kamba Rāmāyanā, Yuddhakāṇḍa there is a story associating this Gandharva maid with the churning of the ocean of milk:-

A Gandharva maid named Śīrīmātī who had acquired incomparable proficiency in music used to sing hymns in praise of Lakṣmīdevi. Devī appeared before her and presented a garland of Kalpaka flowers to Śīrīmātī. As she was returning with the garland, she met sage Durvāsas on the way. She offered the garland to him. Durvāsas who reached Devaloka with the garland gave it to Indra. Indra used it for adorning the tusk of Airāvata. Airāvata who was annoyed at it threw it away in a fury. Durvāsas took it as a personal insult to him and in his rage cursed all the gods to be subjected to the infirmities of old age. It is to save them from the effects of old age that the ocean of milk was churned to obtain Amṛta. (For more details see under Amṛta).

ŚīrīMĀTĪ II. A woman follower of Subrahmaṇya. (M.B. Śaiva Parva, Chapter 45, Verse 3).

ŚīrīPARVATA. A sacred mountain. Those who go to this mountain and offer worship to Śaṅkara after bathing in the forest rivers get the same reward as from an Āśvamedhayāga. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 85, Verse 18).

Śīrī RĀMA. See under Rāma.

ŚīrīRĀMAKRŚNA PARAMAHAMSĀ.
A great thinker who shed new light on Indian spiritual philosophy. He was born on February 18, 1836 in a village called Kumārppukkūr. His father was Kudirām Cāṭṭopādhyāya and his mother was Candra devī.
ŚRĪTĪRTHA. A holy place in Kuruksetra. In Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 83, Verse 46 it is stated that by bathing and worshipping gods and pīṭhas at this holy place, one would be blessed with issues.

ŚRĪVĀHA. A nāga who was born to Kaśyapaprajāpati by his wife Kadrā. (Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 35, Verse 13).

ŚRĪVATSA. A mole on Mahāviṣṇu's chest. (For more details see under Bhṛgu).

ŚRĪMARA. A young deer. Mrgamandā daughter of Kaśyapa gave birth to Rkkas (Bears) Śrīmaras (young deer) and Camaras (a kind of deer called Bos grunniens). (Vālmiki Rāmāyaṇa Aranya Kaṇḍa, Sarga 14).

ŚRĪNGA. Śiva's special musical instrument. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 88, Verse 8).

ŚRĪNGARAVALLI. Mother of Kambar the celebrated Tamil poet and author of Rāmāyaṇa.

ŚRĪNAGAVĀN I. 1) General. A mountain. It is situated to the north of the region called "īlāvṛtta". Devī Bhāgavata, 8th Skandha refers to three mountains—Nilagiri, Śvetagiri, and Śrīnagavān—which are the sources of many rivers and which stand at intervals of 2,000 miles.

2) Other details
(i) Arjuna crossed this mountain and entered Kuruvāra in the course of his triumphal campaign over the northern land.
(ii) This mountain is rich in minerals, is of outstanding brilliance, and is the abode of Siddhas and Cāraṇas. (M.B. Bhīma Parva, Chapter 6, Verse 5).
(iii) Śrīnāya spoke at length about this mountain to Dṛṅtarāstra. (M.B. Bhīma Parva, Chapter 8, Verse 8).
(iv) This mountain is glorious enough to be remembered with reverence at dawn and dusk. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 165, Verse 32).

ŚRĪNAGAVĀN II. An ancient sage. He was the son of Gālava. He married by force, a woman named Vṛddhakanyā. After a night's married life, Vṛddhakanyā departed. The sage then renounced everything and followed her. (M.B. Śalya Parva, Chapter 82).

ŚRĪNGAVERA. A nāga born in Kauravyakula. This nāga was burnt up in Janamejaya's Sarasapatra. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 57, Verse 13).

ŚRĪNGAVERAṆUPURA. A sacred place. Guha, ruler of this place ferried Rāma and Lakṣmana across the river Gāṅga. It became a holy spot by the touch of Šrī Rāma's feet. (See under Guha).

ŚRĪNGAṆĪṢA. A sage. In Rgveda, Maṇḍala 8, Anuvāka 17, Śāktā 13, it is mentioned that Indra was born from the stomach of this sage.

ŚRĪNGERI. A Maṭh was founded here by Śaṅkarācārya. (See under Śaṅkarācārya).

ŚRĪG. The young sage who cursed Parīkṣit. (See the 3rd para under Parīkṣit).

ŚRĪJAYA I. 1) Genealogy. See under Somadatta.
2) General information. A king of the Ikṣvāku dynasty. His father was Śvīti. This king Śvīti was also called Śvitiya King. On the death of his father Śrījaya became king.

The hermits Nārada and Parvata were friends of Śrījaya. Once both of them came and lived in the palace of the King as his guests. Śrījaya had a beautiful daughter named Suciśmitā. Both Nārada and Parvata loved her. One day Nārada directly asked Śrījaya, for the hand of his daughter. Parvata got angry at this and cursed Nārada that he would not attain heaven. Nārada retorted with the same curse. Śrījaya pacified both.

Śrījaya had no sons. He informed the hermits of this sad state. Nārada blessed the king and said that a son named Suvarṇaṇātihvī would be born to him and that with his birth everything in the palace would become golden. Accordingly the son Suvarṇaṇātihvī was born to Śrījaya and everything in the palace became golden. When the son became four years old, by the sorcery of Indra the child died. Nārada brought him to life again. (See under Suvarṇaṇātihvī).

The fact that gold was accumulating in the palace of Śrījaya due to the boon given to Suvarṇaṇātihvī, reached the ears of robbers. One night they carried the child away, and killed him. Then only did they come to understand that there was no gold inside him. Śrījaya cried aloud at the loss of his son. To pacify the King, Nārada and Parvata told him stories of sixteen kings. (M.B. Drona Parva, Chapter 53).

3) Other details
(i) Śrījaya sits in the palace of Yama, praising him. (M.B. Sabhā Parva, Chapter 8, Verse 15).
(ii) When Nārada told the King the stories of sixteen Kings, his sorrow subsided. (M.B. Drona Parva, Chapter 71, Stanza 4).
(iii) By the power of Nārada Śrījaya’s son was brought to life again. (Drona Parva, Chapter 71, Verse 8).
(iv) Śrī Kṛṣṇa told Dharmaputra the story of Śrījaya, with a view to pacify him. (M.B. Śānti Parva, Chapter 29).
(v) Śrījaya had never eaten flesh in his life. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 115, Verse 63).

ŚRĪJAYA II. A royal hermit. This royal hermit was the father of the mother of Ambā, the princess of Kāśī, and a friend of Paraśurāma. At the request of Ambā who had been forsaken by Sālva, Śrījaya first approached Paraśurāma and then saw Bhūṣaṇa and persuaded him to marry Ambā. (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 175, Stanzas 15 to 27).

ŚRŚTI (CREATION). The Indian theory of creation is given below:

1) Triūgaṇas (The three attributes). The base of the universe is the set of the three attributes. They are Sattva (purity), Rajas (passion) and Tamas (inertia). Only things which could be seen, possess these three attributes. Things which could be seen are perishable. The indestructible could not be seen. Shape or form is an attribute. God has no form. So god is without attributes. The God devoid of attributes can be realised by knowledge, but cannot be seen with the ordinary eyes. The three attributes have a power each. Knowledge is the power of Sattva, activity, the power of Rajas and reason the power of Tamas.

2) The five elements. From the divine power of Tamas, five senses came into being, such as sound, touch, form, taste and smell. Sound is the attribute of ether; touch, the attribute of air; form, the attribute of fire; taste, the attribute of water; and smell, the attribute of earth. These are the minute senses or essentials. These five senses having the divine powers, joined together with the five minute essentials, make up the attribute of Tamas.
From the attribute of Sattva having the power of knowledge, the ten essentials, such as the Sun, Pāṇi (Varuṇa) two Āśvinī-gods, Candra (Moon), Brahmā, Rudra, Kṣetrajña and mind, came into being. From these essentials the formation of five matters took place. They are the five elements. When vigour enters the quintupled elements, egoism is given a form. This vigour with perceptible body is called Ādi Nārāyaṇa (Primordial Nārāyaṇa). Anyhow, quintupled elements will be bright with firm attributes. Either has the attribute of sound only. Air has the attributes of sound and touch. Fire has the three attributes of sound, touch and form. Water has the four attributes of sound, touch, form and taste, and earth has the five attributes of sound, touch, form, taste and smell. The variegated expression of these five elements is called the universe. It is stated in Devī Bhāgavata, Skandha 3, that the number of species of living beings found in the universe is eighty-four lakhs.

3) The embodied three (Trinity). It has been mentioned in the last section how the three attributes came into existence and how the five elements originated from the three attributes and how vigour or energy acted upon the five elements and Ādi Nārāyaṇa or Viṣṇu came into being. In this section the birth of the three divine figures is being dealt with.

In the known beginning, on the surface of the wide waters, covering the universe made of the five elements, Mahāviṣṇu lay on a banyan tree, as a child. "Who am I? How was I made, and what for? What have I to do?", and so on were the thoughts of the child. Instantly a voice from the ether fell into his ears saying, "I am everything. There is nothing eternal except me." Mahāviṣṇu lay contemplating on the voice he heard, when Mahādevi appeared before Mahāviṣṇu and said thus: "Lo! Mahāviṣṇu! Whenever the universe required creation, preservation and destruction, by the potentiality of the Omnipotence or the Brahmā, with no attributes, you too had taken origin. Unheard of that the Omnipotence is beyond attributes. We all are within the purview of attributes. Your attribute mainly is Sattva. From your navel, will be born Brahmā with Rajas as his main attribute and from the forehead of that Brahmā, Śiva with Tamas as his main attribute will be born. By the power of penance, Brahmā will acquire the power of creation and with the help of the attribute of rajas, he will create a world of the colour of blood. You will be the protector and preserver of that world, and at the end of the Kalpa (world-age) Śiva will destroy that world. I am that power of purity, which stands as help and assistance to you in creation." Accordingly, Brahmā was born from the navel of Viṣṇu and Śiva was born from the forehead of Brahmā.

(Devi Bhāgavata, Skandha 1).

4) Creation. Sprouts, Animals and Humanity. After the birth of the Trinity, while Brahmā was contemplating on creation, some creations of the attribute of Tamas originated from him unknowingly. It was Avidyā (Ignorance), having inertia, desire, great desire, darkness and great darkness as its five branches. That god continued his contemplation. Then five kinds of immovable without the power of knowledge or brightness in and out alike, and with souls covered with darkness, originated. As these immovables are said to be prominent, the creation of them is called prominent creation.

These are called Sprouts (Udbhids). Seeing that this creation was not sufficient, the god again sat in contemplation. This time animals having horizontal back bones and organs of sense were created. They were called tiryaksrotas, as they walked horizontally. They, such as cow etc. are having more of the attributes of darkness and less of knowledge. They traverse wrong paths due to lack of knowledge though they think otherwise. Egoism, pride and twenty-eight kinds of incapacities are their qualities. Though they possess knowledge inwardly they do not know each other. Thinking that this creation also was not sufficient, Brahmā again engaged himself in contemplation, and there came out another creation. It was called Īrdhvyasrotas (flowing upwards). This third creation having the attribute mainly of Sattva moved in a lofty level. Those who were born in this creation, desired for comfort and pleasure and were with the light of knowledge inwardly and outwardly. When the third creation called Devaśṛṣṭi (creation of gods) originated from Brahmā he grew happy and contented.

Even after creating thus much, Brahmā did not feel satisfaction. So he made the creation of 'Arvāksrotas' (moving downwards). The creatures of this group were having the attributes of Sattva, Rajas and Tamas in an advanced degree. So they are miserable and full of activity. They are human beings. Thus having completed the creation of Udbhids (Sprouts), Tiryaks (animals) and Arvāks (human beings) Brahmā passed on to the creation of heavenly beings. (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Anśa 1; Chapter 5).

5) Creation. Night, Day, Evening, Morning. After this Brahmā again sat in contemplation for water-creation which is the creation of Devas, Asuras, Pīts and Manuṣyas (Gods, Demons, the Manes and Man). As he was sitting in contemplation, the attribute of Tamas (inertia) advanced in him and the asuras (demons) were born from his loins. Then Brahmā discarded the figure of Tamas in him. That discarded figure of darkness became the night. Next, from the face of Brahmā, the Devas (gods) were born. They were having the attribute of Sattva (purity). Brahmā discarded that figure of purity also. That figure became the bright day. So the asuras are powerful in the night and the Devas are powerful in the day. After this, the manes were born from Brahmā. They were also discarded. They became the evening between the day and night. Then Brahmā assumed the figure having the attribute of Rajas. From this, man, who was having more of the attribute of rajas was born. Brahmā discarded that figure also. It became a very shining thing which is called the Dawn. So men are powerful in the dawn and the manes are powerful in the evening. The four creations of Day, Night, Evening and the Dawn are considered to be the bodies of Brahmā. (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Anśa 1, Chapter 5).

6) Creation. Rākṣasas (Giants), Tārakas (Devi-gods), Serpents, Devis, Gandharvas. Brahmā again assumed another figure having the attribute of Rajas. Due to this Brahmā felt hungry. Along with hunger desire also grew in him. Then the Prajāpati (Lord of Emanation) sat in the darkness and created some creatures which were very hungry. Uncouth with plenty of hair on the face, they ran towards Brahmā. Of them those who said, 'don't do so, save him' became Rākṣasas (giants). Those who said "We will eat him," became Yakṣas (demi-gods). Because of Yakṣa (Blaksana-Food), they got the name Yakṣa. Because of the dislike at seeing these creatures the hair had fallen from the head of Brahmā. They crept back again into his head. Because they did 'sarpāna' (creeping up), they were called sarpas (serpents)--and as they were 'Hina' (fallen) they were called Ahis (serpents). After this the Lord of creation became very angry and created some creatures. Because of their colour which was a mingling of red and black, they were horrible and they became pītāsaṇas (those who eat flesh). Then Brahmā began to sing and from his body the Gandharvas were born. Because they did 'dhayana' (Appreciate) of 'go' (word) when they were born, they were called Gandharvas.

7) Creation. Birds, animals. After creating all these creatures, Brahmā created birds, from his 'vayas' (strength), as free agents, according to their actions in the previous lives. Then Brahmā created sheep from his breast and goats from his face. From his stomach and flanks he created cows, and from his legs he created other creatures such as the horse, elephant, donkey, wild bull, deer, camel, mule, antelope etc. He created plants bearing fruits and bulbs from his hair. Though Brahmā had created vegetables and animals at the beginning of the Kalpa (world-age), they came to be properly used in sacrifices only from Tretāyuga (one of the four ages) The animals such as the cow, sheep, goat, horse, mule and donkey are called domestic animals and flesh-eaters such as the leopard, animals with forked hoof such as the wild bull, elephant, monkey, birds, and other animals and reptiles, are included in the word 'wild animals'.

8) Creation-The Vedas etc. After having completed creation of the things mentioned above, the Prajāpati created from his face looking to the east, the Vedic metre Gīyatri, Ṛgveda, Trisṭistoma, the sāma song called Rathantara and the sacrifice called Agniṣṭoma; from his face looking to the south, Yajurveda, the Vedic metre Tris̄ṭubha, Pañcadaśa stoma. Brhatāsma and the sacrifice Uktha; from his face looking to the west, Sāmaveda, the Vedic metre Jagati, Saptadāsastoma, Vairūpasāma and the sacrifice Aitrātra. Thus all the creatures lofty and lower originated from the body of Brahmā. After having created Devas, Asuras, the men and men, Brahmā again at the beginning of the world age, created Yakṣas, Devis, Gandharvas, celestial maids, Naras, Kinnaras, Rakṣas, cows, birds, animals, serpents etc. such as have long life and short life, movable and immovable, that we see in the world. Creatures which are created again and again do perform functions which creatures of their kind had been doing previously. Habits of killing or not killing, kindness or cruelty, righteousness or evil, truth or falsehood are adopted by them as becoming to their kind in previous lives. It was Brahmā who had created the uses and differences seen in the sense organs, elements and bodies. Brahmā took from the Vedic voice the shape, form, name, activities etc. of various creatures such as the Devas etc. and allotted them to each particular kind. So also he allotted names, work etc. to hermits as seen in the Vedas.

9) Creation of the four castes. See under Gātuvānyaya.

10) Creation of Prajāpatis. When Brahmā saw that the subjects he had created, did not flourish, he created first the Sanaka brothers and the mental sons of Bhrgu, Pulastya, Pulaha, Kratu, Anūgiras, Marici, Daśa, Atri and Vāsiṣṭha, and gave these nine the name Prajāpatis (Lords of Emanation). Then he created nine women named Khyāti, Bhūti, Sambhūti, Kṣāmā, Priti, Sammati, Urjā, Anuṣāya, and Prasūti and gave in marriage Khyāti to Bhrgu, Bhūti to Pulastya, Sambhūti to Pulaha, Kṣāmā to Kratu, Priti to Anūgiras, Sammati to Marici, Urjā to Daśa, Anuṣāya to Atri and Prasūti to Vāsiṣṭha. The great hermits such as Saunandana and the others created before the Prajāpatis, were not desirous of propagation as they were wise sages who had renounced all attachments and who had been indifferent. When Brahmā saw that they were not mindful about producing subjects he grew angry. (It was from the middle of the eye brows which were curved by his fury, that Śiva, one of the three divine figures was born). After this, Brahmā appointed Svāyambhuva, who originated from himself, and was of the same shape, as the first Manu for the protection of the subjects. This divine Manu Svāyambhuva took his sister Śatarūpā as wife. Two sons named Priyavrata and Uttānapāda and two daughters named Prasūti and Aṅkūti were born to them. Of the two daughters Prasūti was given to Prajāpati Dākṣa and Aṅkūti to Prajāpati Ruci. A son named Yajña and a daughter named Dākṣinā were born as twins to Prajāpati Ruci. Twelve sons were born to Yajña by Dākṣinā. They were devas named the Yamas of the Manvantara of Svāyambhuva. Dākṣa begot twentyfour daughters of Prasūti. They were Śraddhā, Lākṣāni, Dhiṛti, Tuṣṭi, Medhā, Puṣṭi, Kriyā, Buddhi, Lajjā, Vapuṣ, Śantī, Siddhi, Kirti, Khyāti, Śati, Sambhūti, Śmṛti, Priti, Kṣāmā, Śantati, Anuṣāya, Urjā, Śvāhā and Svadhā. Of these the first thirteen were given to Dharmadeva as wives. Of the remaining daughters, Khyāti became the wife of Bhrgu, Śati, the wife of Śiva, Sambhūti of Marici, Śmṛti, of Anūgiras, Priti of Pulastya, Kṣāmā of Pulaha, Śantati of Kratu, Anuṣāya of Atri, Urjā of Vāsiṣṭha, Śvāhā of Agni, and Svadhā of the men. (Viśu Purāṇa, Aṅśa 1; Chapter 7).

11) The children of the Prajāpatis. To Prajāpati Bhrgu, Lākṣāni who became the wife of Viśu and two sons named Dhiṛat and Viḍhātā were born by Khyāti. These two married Āyati and Niyati the two daughters of Mṛcu. To the two couples two sons named Prāṇa and Mṛkṣṇu were born. From Mṛkṣṇu, Mārkandeya was born, and from Mārkandeya, Vedaśiras was born. To Prāṇa a son named Dyaṭimān and to him a son named Rājavān was born. From this Rājavān the Bhrgu dynasty grew up.

Sambhūti the wife of Marici gave birth to a son named Paurānmāsa. To Anūgiras four daughters named Śinvāli, Kuhū, Rākā and Anumati were born by Śmṛti. Three sinless sons named Candra, Durvaśas and Dattātreya were born to Atri by Anuṣāya. Of them Dattātreya was a hermit. A son named Dattoli was born to Pulastya by Pratīti (Priti). That Dattoli was the Agastya of Svāyambhuva Manvantara. Kṣāmā the wife of Pulaha gave birth to three sons named Kadama, Urvariyaṇ and Sahiṣṭu. Santati the wife of Kratu, gave birth to sixty thousand hermits called Bālayhīlas. Seven sons named Raja, Gotra, Īrdbhābāhu, Savana, Anagha, Sutapas and Sukra were born to Vāsiṣṭha by his wife Urjā. These sons were the seven hermits of the third Manvantara. Three bright sons Pāvakā Pavamāna and Śuci were born to god Agni (fire) by his wife Svāhā. Forty-five sons were born to them. (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Aṣṭā 1, Chapter 10).

12) Creation—Living things. Creations of Sprouts, animals, Men, Devas, Dānavas and so on have been dealt with. But all these creations were pertaining to the world of gods only. Sprouts and animals were born in the earth only from Prajāpati Kaśyapa, the son of Maṛcī.

Prajāpati Kaśyapa married Aditi, Diti, Danu, Kālikā, Tāmrā, Krodhavāsā, Manu and Anaḷa, the eight daughters of Dakṣa. From Aditi, the Devas, Ādityas, Vaasus and the Rudras were born. Daityas were born from Diti and Dānavas from Danu. The asuras Naraka and Kāla were born to Kālikā. Five daughters named Krauṇci, Bhāsi, Śyenī, Dvārāśantī and Śuki were born to Tāmrā. Owls were born from Krauṇci. Bhāsi gave birth to the Bhāsas. Hawks and Vultures were born from Śyenī; Swans, geese and ruddy geese were born from Dvārāśantī. Natā was born from Śuki and Viṇātā was born from Natā. Ten daughters named Mrghi, Mrgamandā, Ātri, Bhadramatā, Mātanī, Śardulī Śvetā, Surabhi, Surasā and Kadrū were born to Krodhavāsā. Mrghi gave birth to animals. From Mrgamandā, bears, young deer and Bos grunnies were born. Lions and monkeys were the sons of Ātri. A daughter named Irāvati was born to Bhadramatā. Airāvata was the son of Irāvati. Elephants were born from Mātanī. Tigrs were born from Śardulī. The eight elephants supporting the globe were born from Śvetā. Two daughters named Rohini and Gandharvī were born to Surabhi. Cattle were born from Rohini, and horses were born from Gandharvī. Surasā gave birth to Nāgas (serpents) and Kadrū gave birth to Uragas (reptiles). Men were born from Manu. The trees were born from Anaḷa. Garuḍa and Aruṇa were born from Viṇātā. Sampāṭī and Jaṭāyu were the sons of Aruṇa. (Vālmiki Rāmāyaṇa, Aranya Kāṇḍa, Sarga 14).

(Facts about creation seen in various Purāṇas do not agree with each other. This essay is based on facts gathered from various Purāṇas. So disagreements may occur in it.)

ŚRUTA I. Son of Bhimasena. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 278).

ŚRUTA II. A King of the Solar dynasty. Bhāgavata, 9th Skandha refers to him as the son of Subhāsaṇa and father of Jaya.

ŚRUTA III. A King belonging to Bharata’s dynasty. He was the son of Dharmanetra and father of Drīṇasena. (Bhāgavata, 9th Skandha).

ŚRUTA IV. A son born to Śri Kṛṣṇa by Kālindī. (Bhāgavata, 10th Skandha).

ŚRUTADHVAJA. A son of King Virāta. He was a supporter of the Pāṇḍavas. Virāta’s brothers were—Gajānīka, Śrutāṇiṇī, Virabhadrā, Sudaṇīṣa, Śrutadhvajā, Balāṇīka, Jayāṇīka, Jayapriyā, Viyāja, Labhhalakṣaṇa, Jayāṣṭra, Rathahāvaṇa, Candrodaya and Kānārathā. (M.B. Drona Parva, Chapter 158, Verse 41).

ŚRUTĀNTA (CITRANGA). A son of Dītarāśtra. He was slain at Kurukṣetra in his fight with Bhīma. (M.B. Śalya Parva, Chapter 26).

ŚRUTARVA (ŚRUTARVĀ) I. A king who lived at the time of Agastya. Once the sage Agastya approached him for some wealth. In Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 98 there is a story of how the king solved the problem.
by presenting the accounts of his income and expenditure to Agastya and convincing him that he was unable to oblige the sage.

ŚRUTAVYA (ŚRUTARVĀ) II. One of the hundred sons of Dhruvāstra. In the course of the Bhirāra battle he attacked Bhimasena with twelve of his brothers and in the battle which followed Śrutarva was killed by Bhimasena. Among the Kauravas, Śrutarvā was one of the mighty archers. The terrible battle fought against Bhimasena under his leadership alarmed the other warriors. (M.B. Sāya Parva, Chapter 26).

ŚRUTARYA. A sage. In Rgveda, Maṇḍala I, Anuvāka 16, Sākta 132, there is a passage which says that the Asvini devas once turned a river into honey and pleased sage Vasiṣṭha and protected two sages Śrutarya and Narya.

ŚRUTASENA I. A brother of King Janamejaya. In Mahābhārata, there is a reference to an incident in which Śrutaseṇa beat a dog which entered the place where Janamejaya was performing his Yāga. (For further details see under Śrutarvasa III).

ŚRUTASENA II. Younger brother of the serpent Takṣaka. There is a reference to this Nāga in Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 3, Verse 141.

ŚRUTASENA III. Son of Sahadeva. He is also known as Śrutakarmā. (See under Śrutakarmā).

ŚRUTASENA IV. An asura. Garuḍa killed this asura. (See under Śrutārī).

ŚRUTASRĀVAS. A warrior on the Kaurava side. He was killed by Arjuna. (M.B. Karna Parva, Chapter 27, Verse 10).

ŚRUTASRĀVAS I. A sister of Śrī Kṛṣṇa’s father Vasudeva. (See under Śrutadevi).

ŚRUTASRĀVAS II. A king of Magadhā. (Bhāgavata, 9th Skandha).

ŚRUTASRĀVAS III. A Mahārṣi. He had a son named Somaṛavas. There is the following story in Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 3, about the way in which these two sages came to be associated with King Janamejaya.

Janamejaya, son of Parīkṣit, along with his brothers performed an elaborate Yāga at Kurukṣetra. His three brothers were Śrutasesa, Ugrasesa and Bhimasena. While they were performing the Yāga, a dog which was the son of Saramā came there. Janamejaya’s brothers attacked the dog without any provocation. Saramā became angry and she cursed Janamejaya. The curse frightened him. After the Yāga he reached Hastināpura and went out in search of a priest who would be able to liberate him from the curse.

Once, as he was returning from a hunt, he happened to come across an aśrama within his country. A sage named Śrutarvasa lived there. He had a son named Somaṛavas. Janamejaya invited Somaṛavas to be his priest. At that time Śrutarvasa said to him:—“This my son was born to a serpent-woman and he is endowed with the power of my austerity. He is capable of releasing you from all sins except ‘Mahādeva-vākyō’. If a Brāhmaṇa prays to him for anything, the prayer would be fulfilled. If you can set it right, you may take him with you.’”

Janamejaya agreed and took Somaṛavas with him to the palace. He made him priest and completed the Yāga. Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 39 states that Śrutarvasa was also a member of Janamejaya’s Yāga.

He was among the sages who attained Siddhi (superhuman powers) by performing tapas. (M.B. Śantī Parva, Chapter 292, Verse 16).

ŚRUTASRĀVAS IV. A Rājārṣi. He remains in Yama’s assembly, offering worship to Yama. (Mahābhārata, Śabha Parva, Chapter 8, Verse 9).

ŚRUTASRĀVAS V. Wife of Damahosa King of Cedi. She was the sister of Śrī Kṛṣṇa’s father and mother of Śiśupāla. She requested Śrī Kṛṣṇa (who came to her place after Śiśupāla’s birth) not to kill Śiśupāla. Śrī Kṛṣṇa agreed to forgive Śiśupāla’s wrongs a hundred times. (For further details, see under Śiśupāla).

ŚRUTASRĪ. An asura. Garuḍa killed this asura. Once Garuḍa happened to go to Indraloka and he began to brag about his own greatness. He claimed that he had killed Śrutarva, Śrutasena, Vipasvān, Rœanāmukha, Kālaka, Ahar, Prasūta and other Asuras. (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 105, Verse 12).

ŚRUTAVATI. Daughter of Bharadvāja Muni. Once Bharadvāja happened to see the Apsara woman Ghṛtaśī who had an involuntary emission of semen. Śrutavati was born from that semen. She observed an auster tapas with the object of getting Indra as her husband. (For more information see Para 30 under Indra).

ŚRUTAYAJNA. A king who belonged to Bhrārā Vaini. Bhāgavata, 9th Skandha states that he was the son of Karmajit and grandson of Vīvanava.

ŚRUTAYUDHA. A king of the Kaliṅga land. He was the son of Varuṇa by Parṇāsā. (M.B. Śabba Parva, Chapter 4, Verse 23; Bhiṣma Parva, Chapter 16, Verse 34).

In Bhirāra battle he took his stand on the Kaurava side and at first clashed with Bhimasena. Even at the beginning of the battle, Bhīma killed Satya and Satyadeva, two of the assistants of Śrutayudha. (M.B. Bhiṣma Parva, Chapter 50, Verse 69). In the end, he used his cudgel—which was given to him by Varuṇa—against Śrī Kṛṣṇa who did not take part in the battle at all. Śrutayudha died by his own cudgel. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 67, Verses 43-48). (See also under Śrıṭayūs II).

ŚRUTAYUS I. A son of Purūravas. (See under Purūravas).

ŚRUTAYUS II. (ŚRUTAYUDHA.) A Kaliṅga king.

STRI.

1) Origin. In both Hindu and Christian scriptures, the story about the origin of woman appears to be similar. It is stated in Manusmrti, Chapter 1, Verse 32, that Brahmâ divided his body into two and made one part male and the other part female and the male embraced the female, from which union was born the Vîrâtputrasa.

Dvidhâ krtvâtmano dehamardhena purusôbhavat /
Arthena nari tasyâm sa
Vîrâjamarsjat prabhû

In the book of Genesis in the Bible, the origin of the first woman is given. It is somewhat similar to the one given above. God created Adam as the first man. God caused a deep sleep to fall upon Adam. Then he took a rib from Adam, made a woman with it, and gave that woman, who was called Eve, to Adam as wife.

2) Fascination. A story as given below occurs in Devi Purâna, which states how woman acquired fascination. Once Indra prohibited Asvinidevas from drinking the liquor called Soma. They complained to the hermit Cyavana, who agreed to recover for them the lost right, for which purpose he began a sacrifice. Indra caused obstruction to the sacrifice. Instantly by the power of Cyavana, an asura named Mada rose up from the sacrificial fire. Finally Indra begged the hermit for pardon. Cyavana divided the asura into four parts and placed one portion in gambling, one portion in hunting, the third portion in liquor and the fourth part in woman. Thenceforward woman began to have fascination.

3) Manu, about women. The following is the place in society of women in ancient days, according to Manu. Husband or relatives should give women no freedom. Even if they became immoral, they should be kept under the control of men. As woman has to be under the protection of father in childhood, under the protection of husband in youth and under the protection of son in old age, she does not deserve freedom at any time.

"Pitâ rakṣati kaumâre
Bhartâ rakṣati yauvane /
Rakṣanti sthâvire putrâh
Na strî svâtantryamarhati." // kingdom during the period of their forest-life. They actually entered the forest after spending one day there. Subahu fought on the Påñđava side in the great war. (Vana Parva, Chapter 140, Verse 24).

SUBĀHU X. A warrior who fought against the Påñđavas in the great war. Both his hands were cut off in his fight with Yuyutsu. (Drôṣa Parva, Chapter 25, Verse 13).

SUBĀHU XI. A warrior of Subrahmanyā. (Śalya Parva, Chapter 45, Verse 73).

SUBĀHU XII. There is a reference in Verse 66, Chapter 115 of Anuśāsana Parva, Mahābhārata, about a Subāhu, who never consumed flesh in life.

SUBĀHU XIII. Father of Sagara of Solar dynasty. (For details see under Sagara).

SUBĀHU XIV. A Cola King. A great devotee of Viṣṇu, the King performed many yajñas. Though he lived according to the spiritual advice of his preceptor Jaimini he was denied the sight of Viṣṇu. Ultimately Subāhu and his queen attained heaven as they listened to Vijyala, their second son, reciting hymns addressed to Vāsudeva. (Padma Purāṇa, Bhūmi Khaṇḍa, Chapter 94).

Though Subāhu and his queen worshipped Viṣṇu for a long time in the Ānanda forest, the lord did not appear to them. Ultimately they forsook their bodies in the forest and after a very long walk came to the abode of munis. The king quivered them as to why he failed to see Viṣṇu though he performed penance for a very long time. The King and queen were done up due to hunger and thirst and the munis asked them to return to Ānandārama and eat the corpses left there. While they were accordingly eating the corpses, Vijyala questioned Kuñjala a bird which lived nearby, why his parents were eating dead bodies. The bird answered that when the King and queen had recited the praises of Vāsudeva they would see Viṣṇu. It also taught Vijyala songs in praise of Viṣṇu. After having studied the songs, Vijyala went and sat on a tree at Ānandārama and sang the songs. Subāhu and his queen repeated them and immediately Viṣṇu appeared before them and conducted them to heaven.

SUBALA I.

1) General. A King of Gândhāra. Subala was the father of Śakuni, uncle of the Kaúravas. Śakuni was the rebirth of Nagnajit, disciple of Prahlāda. Śakuni inherited the name Saubala from his father Subala whose only daughter was Gândhārī, mother of Duryodhana. Both Śakuni and Gândhārī were economic experts. (Adi Parva, Chapter 63). At the time of the marriage proposal of Gândhārī the fact of the blindness of Dhṛtarāṣṭra, the prospective bride-groom, worried Subala much, but he married his daughter to the blind King considering the great reputation of the royal family. (Adi Parva, Chapter 109, Verse 11).

2) Other information. (i) Subala, in the company of his sons Śakuni, Acala and Vṛṣaka participated in the Rājaśīya performed by Yudhīṣṭhira. (Śabhā Parva, Chapter 34, Verse 6).

(ii) After the Rājaśīya was over it was Nakula, one of the Påñđavas, who led Subala and his sons beyond the boundaries of the Kingdom safely. (Śabhā Parva Chapter 45, Verse 49).

SUBALA II. A King of the Ikṣvāku dynasty. His son was a great friend of King Jayadratha. (Vana Parva, Chapter 265, Verse 8).

SUBALA III. A son of Garuḍa. (Udyoga Parva, Chapter 101, Verse 3).

SUBANDHU. An ācārya, who was the high priest of King Asamāti. Once the King removed the priest from his job and appointed two priests, Kīrāta and Ākulī in his stead, and after some time, the new priests, at the instance of the King, killed Subandhu. But, three brothers of his joined together and brought Subandhu back to life again by chanting hymns from the Vedas. (Ṛgveda 10, 57, 60; Brhaddevatā. 7. 33).

SUBELA. A mountain near Laṅkā. (Vana Parva, Chapter 294, Verse 21).

SUBHĀ. Dhruva's mother. According to Harivaṁśa, Chapter 2, she was born from Aśvamedha.

SUBHĀ. Wife of Aṅgirās and mother of seven sons like Bṛhatkīrī. (Vana Parva, Chapter 218, Verse 1).

SUBHĀDATTĀ. A wood-cutter who lived in Paṭāliputra.

Subhadatta earned his living by cutting wood in the forest and selling it for fuel. One day, while cutting wood in the forest he saw four Yakṣas by chance. When he understood from their dress and bearing that they were divine beings, Subhadatta was frightened. The Yakṣas spoke to him and when they came to know that he was poor, they engaged him as their servant. Subhadatta served them with devotion. When it was time for their meal they pointed to him a pot and asked him to serve them food from it. But when Subhadatta saw the pot empty, he was confused. The Yakṣas, with an amused smile asked him to put his hand into the pot and assured him that he would get anything he wished to get from it.

Subhadatta accordingly took out all the things they wanted from it and served them. They took their food and were satisfied. A few days passed in this way and then Subhadatta began to think of his family. The Yakṣas understood that he was longing to return home. So they allowed him to go after getting whatever boon he wished to ask them. Subhadatta asked for that magic pot which would supply whatever he wanted. On hearing it the Yakṣas told him that he would not be able to keep that pot and that if it was broken everything would be lost. So they advised him to ask them something else. But Subhadatta was not prepared to accept their advice. At last they gave him the magic pot.

Subhadatta reached home happily with the pot. He told the whole story to his people at home. His neighbours grew suspicious when he stopped going to the forest to cut trees, after he returned with the pot. To their enquiries about it, he replied haughtily and informed them of his good luck. One day in his frantic joy, he danced, carrying the pot on his head and as ill-luck would have it, he slipped his foot and fell down. The
Many of the Yadava chiefs wanted Subhadra to be wedded to Duryodhana, a disciple of Balabhadrā and against this desire of theirs Subhadra and Arjuna together drove themselves away in a chariot through lines of people and this created a stir among the Yadavas. But, Kṛṣṇa pacified them all. (Adi Parva, Chapters 213-228; Bhāgavata, 10th Skandha).

2) Other information.

(i) Later on, the wedding of Subhadra with Arjuna was duly consecrated. (Adi Parva, Chapter 220, Verse 10).

(ii) Arjuna came to Indraprastha with Subhadra disguised as a Gopi. Many costly things, by way of Subhadra’s dowry, were duly sent from Dwārakā to Indraprastha. (Adi Parva, Chapter 220).

(iii) A son named Abhimanyu was born to the couple. (Adi Parva, Chapter 220, Verse 65).

(iv) During the period of the ‘forest life’ of the Pāṇḍavas Subhadra and her son lived with Kṛṣṇa at Dwārakā (Vana Parva, Chapter 22, Verse 3).

(v) Subhadra too was present at the wedding of Abhimanyu at Uppalavanyanagara. (Virāṭa Parva, Chapter 72 Verse 22).

(vi) When Abhimanyu was killed in the great war, Subhadra wept before Kṛṣṇa. (Draupāda Parva, Chapter 78, Verse 2).

(vii) Following the death of Abhimanyu Subhadra returned with Kṛṣṇa to Dwārakā. (Āśvamedha Parva, Chapter 52, Verse 85).

(viii) Remembering about Abhimanyu’s death Subhadra swooned. (Āśvamedha Parva Chapter 61, Verse 4).

(ix) She went from Dwārakā to Hastināpura to attend the Āśvamedha yajña performed by Yudhiṣṭhira. (Āśvamedha Parva, Chapter 66, Verse 4).

(x) Subhadra joined her co-wives, Uṣūpi and Citrāngadā and embraced them. (Āśvamedha Parva, Chapter 83, Verse 3).

(xi) Following the death of Abhimanyu Subhadra spent her days in sad silence. (Mahāprasthāna Parva, Chapter 1).

SUBHADRĀ I. A daughter of Surabhi. She lives in the western region. (Udyoga Parva, Chapter 102 Verse 9).

SUBHADRĀ. A banyan tree. Garuḍa went to Devalokā to fetch amṛta after marking this tree as a sign-post. See under Garuḍa. (Aranya Kāṇḍa, Canto 35).

SUBHADRĀHARANAPARVA. A sub-parva of Mahābhārata. (Adi Parva, Chapters 218 and 219).

SUBHAGA. A brother of Śakuni. He was killed in battle by Bhīma. (Draupāda Parva, Chapter 157, Verse 26).

SUBHAGĀ I. Daughter of Kaśyapaprajāpati by his wife Pradhā. (Adi Parva, Chapter 65, Verse 46).

SUBHAGĀ II. A term of address.

According to Manusmṛti (Chapter 2, 129) one should use this word when one addresses the wives of others and women who are not one’s relatives.

Parapatī tu yā stri yādasaṃbandhā ca yonitah //
Tān brāhyād bhavatītyeṣāv ca subhage bhāgīṇī ca //

SUBHĀNU. One of the ten sons of Sātyabhāmā, the other nine being Bhānu, Svarbhānu, Prabhānu, Bhānumān, Candrabhānu, Brhadbhānu, Hairivbhānu, Śrībhānu and Pratirūpamāna. (Bhāgavata, 10th Skandha).

SUBHĀRYA (SUDARYA). A daughter of Śvaphalka, son of Prṣni. She was Akrūra’s sister. (Bhāgavata, 9th Skandha).

pot crashed to the ground and was broken to pieces. So he was forced to become the wood-cutter again. (Kathāsārītāgāra, Sākṣīṣālambaka, Tarāṅga 1).

1) Birth. Subhadra was the daughter of Vasudeva by his wife Devakī. She had two brothers, Kṛṣṇa and Sārāṇa and she was her father’s pet child. (Adi Parva, Chapter 217, Verse 18).

2) Married to Arjuna. During his one year’s pilgrimage Arjuna, after visiting various holy places, came at last to Prabhāsā tīrtha in the plains of the western mountain. He met Gada there who described to him the unique beauty of Subhadra. The description evoked in him the desire to marry her for which purpose he assumed the form of a Sannyāsin and sitting under a tree thought about Śrī Kṛṣṇa who understood the fact while lying on the bed with Satyabhāmā and immediately he began laughing. Asked for the reason for his laughing thus, Śrī Kṛṣṇa told her about Arjuna thinking about him etc. Kṛṣṇa then went to Arjuna and questioned him about the reason for his pilgrimage and the latter explained the circumstances of it. They then went to the Raivata mountain where Arjuna revealed to Kṛṣṇa his desire to marry Subhadra. Kṛṣṇa agreed and, after leaving Arjuna at the mountain, returned to Dwārakā.

Within a few days the Yādava chief celebrated a festival at Raivata attended by prominent leaders like Balabhadrā, Ugrasena, Pradyumna, Śrī Kṛṣṇa and others. The sight of Subhadra among them evoked uncontrollable love in Arjuna who asked Kṛṣṇa secretly about the means for him to marry Subhadra. Kṛṣṇa answered him thus: "Svayamvara (marriage by self choice by a woman) is ordained for Kṣatriyas. But, how would we know whom Subhadra loves. Abduction also is ordained for Kṣatriyas. So you abduct Subhadra."

Arjuna immediately sent word about the matter through emissaries to Indraprastha. After the festival at Raivata was over, Subhadra returned to Dwārakā. As for Arjuna, he sat on a rock in the forest thinking about Subhadra when Yādava heroes like Bala, Samba, Sārāṇa, Pradyumna and Gada came that way by chance. They saluted the Sannyāsin (Arjuna) and after blessing them he made them sit on the rock around him and related to them various stories. Then Yādavas felt great respect for the Sannyāsin and invited him and took him to Dwārakā. Kṛṣṇa and others arranged for the stay of the Sannyāsin, who pretended to spend Cāturāmasa there. He was to be fed from Subhadra’s house and the Sannyāsin was over whelmed with joy.

As days passed on thus, Arjuna grew more and more sick with love. Subhadra felt unbounded affection for him. She heard from him many stories about the valiant Pāṇḍava, Arjuna. When he was convinced that Subhadra cherished strong love for him, Arjuna revealed the truth about him. When he told her that he, the fake Sannyāsin, was really Arjuna who was living there without the knowledge of his mother and brothers, Subhadra bent down her head in shyness.

Subhadra’s wedding was decided to be held on the twelfth day from that date. Balabhadrā and Uddhava both of them short-tempered, were not informed about the decision. Śrī Kṛṣṇa took the lead in making preparations for the wedding and he saw Subhadra and gave her all good wishes.
SUBHĀNGADA A king. This king had attended Draupadi’s Swayamvara. (Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 183, Verse 22).

SUBHĀNGI. A virgin born in the Dāśārha tribe. Kuru, King of the Lunar dynasty married her. They had a son named Vidūra. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 53, Verse 39).

SUBHĀŚAṆA. A king of Solar line son of Yuyudhāna and father of Śruta. (Bhāgavata, 9th Skandha).

SUBHĀVAKTRĀ. A female attendant of Subrahmanya. (M.B. Śalya Parva, Chapter 46, Verse 7).

SUBHIMA. A son of Pāṇḍajānyagū on Tapa. This Agni is one of the fifteen Agnis which cause hindrances in Yajñas. Subhima, Atibhima, Bhima, Bhimabala, Bala, Sumitra, Mitrādhan, Mitrajita, Mitravardhana, Mitradharman, Surapravīra, Vīra, Suvarcas, Veṣa and Surahantā are the fifteen Agnis which cause hindrances in Yajñas. (Vana Parva, Chapter 220, Verse 11).

SUBHRAJĀ. One of the two attendants given to Subrahmanya by Sūrya, the other one being Bāhāsvara. (Śalya Parva, Chapter 45, Verse 31).

SUBHṛū. A female attendant of Subrahmanya. (Śalya Parva, Chapter 46, Verse 8).

SUBHŪMIKA. A holy place of ancient days in the plains of river Sarasvatī where Apsaras used to come daily and bathe. Deva-Gandharvas visit this place every month. Śrī Kṛṣṇa bathed there once and distributed money to brahmans. (Śalya Parva, Chapter 37).

SUBRAHMĀNYA. Son of Śiva.

1) Reason for birth. A son named Vajrāṅga was born to Kaśyapaprajāpati by his wife Danu and he married a girl called Varāṅgī. Vajrāṅga performed penance to Brahmr so that he might shed his asūric aspect. When he came out of his penance, Varāṅgī was missing and he wandered about the forest in search of her. Finally he saw Varāṅgī crying under a tree. When he asked her the reason for her weeping, she told him about harassments by Brahmr during the thousand years when Vajrāṅga was immersed in trance. Indra one day threw about the vessels used by her in worship, appearing before her in the guise of a monkey; on another occasion he threatened her in the form of a lion and on a third occasion he came disguised as a snake and bit on her legs. Very much grieved over the story Vajrāṅga again took to penance with the grim determination to punish Indra and when Brahmr appeared before him he prayed for the boon of a son who would surpass the Devas including Indra in prowess. Brahmr granted him the boon. Varāṅgī delivered a son twelve months after the boon. The child was christened Tārakāsura.

Tārakāsura, as a child, began practising penance and Brahmr duly appeared before him and granted him the boon that if he were to die, he would die at the hands of a child only seven days old. Haughty over the boon Tārakāsura very soon conquered the three worlds. The devas found no means to suppress the asura. Children would not be born to them and there was no child for it. Once Śiva and Pārvatī started the marital act and it did not come to a close even after a hundred divya years, with the result that the world shook like anything. Frightened at this the Devas requested Śiva to stop the act and he obliged them. Then he asked them who would bear the semen. Accordingly it was discharged on the earth. It filled and over-flowed forests and mountains. What next was the problem. Ultimately the Devas asked Agni (fire) to consume it. When Agni consumed and burnt it down absolutely, the ashes thereof formed into a white hill and it became a forest.

Pārvatī did not at all relish the action of the devas and spoke to them thus: “You prevented my sexual intercourse entered with the desire to have a son. Therefore, in future you will not have children by your wives.” Pārvatī cursed the earth also as follows: “You will become one of various forms and also a wife to many people. You, who prevented me from having a son, will not enjoy happiness from children.” (Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa, Bālakanda, Canto 36).

Tārakāsura could be killed only by a child not more than seven days old and the Devas realized that such a child could be begot only by Śiva. It was the occasion when Śiva was lamenting over the death of Satī and Pārvatī was doing penance to secure Śiva as husband. None could stir Śiva immersed in deep meditation and the Devas entrusted the responsibility for it to Kāmadeva. Not only did Kāma not succeed in the endeavour but also he got reduced to ashes by the fire from Śiva’s eyes. When Pārvatī’s penance reached its climax Śiva appeared before her and wedded her.

2) Birth of Subrahmanya. Because of the power of Śiva’s semen consumed by Agni, his glow began getting diminished. Agni complained of it to the Devas who sent him over to Brahmr. On his way to Brahmr Agni met Gaṅgādevi with whom he told thus: “I can in no way bear this semen of Śiva and if I get rid of it, it will burn the entire world. So, you please take charge of it so that you will have a noble son. Gaṅgā’s reply to this was simply to ask Agni to throw the semen into her waters and Agni did so. As the semen had remained with Agni for nearly 5000 years, his flesh, blood hair, eye etc. had become golden in colour and hence Agni came to be called from that day onwards Hiṃyanaratas.

Time passed by and the semen of Śiva became a burden to Gaṅgā. She complained about that to Brahmr. Brahmr asked her from whom she had received the semen. Gaṅgā detailed her story to him and concluded by saying that though it was 5000 years since Śiva’s semen was put into her, she did not deliver yet. Then Brahmr told her as follows: “You go to the Udaya mountain (where the sun rises). There is a forest there, a forest hundred crores of yojanas in extent, where Sara, a particular variety of grass (Saccharam munja Roxb) grows. You deposit the semen there and a male child will be born after 10,000 years.

As directed by Brahmr Gaṅgā went to the Udaya mountain and deposited the fucus there through her mouth.

By the power of Śiva’s semen all the trees and animals and birds in the forest became golden in colour. When 10,000 years were completed a child, as effulgent as the rising sun, was born and Subrahmanya was the child. The child cried in a thunderous voice and six divine Kṛttikās who came that way saw the child and taking pity on it vied with one another to breast-feed it. Since the child looked at the six Kṛttikās one after the other it developed six faces and since it was breast-fed by Kṛttikās it came to be named Kārttikeya as well.
Brahmā informed Agni about the birth of the child and the latter, in great happiness, hastened to it on a fast goat. Gaṅgā who met Agni on the way and asked him about his hurried trip was told about the birth of the child and between the two developed an argument about the ownership of the child. Mahāviṣṇu who came that way just then listened to the above argument and directed them to Siva for settlement of their claims.

Agni and Gaṅgā asked Siva to which of them the child really belonged. Siva then told Pārvatī “Fortunate, fortunate.” Only after seeing the child could it be decided as to whose it was and so Siva, Pārvatī, Agni and Gaṅgā proceeded together to the forest where they saw the child in the lap of the Kṛttikās. Siva then said “Let us see whom the child looks at before settling its parentage.” Understanding the ideas of the visitors, the child, by its yogic power, assumed four bodies called Kumāra, Viśākha, Sākhi and Naiγameya. Kumāra looked at Siva, Viśākha at Pārvatī, Sākhi at Gaṅgā and Naigameya at Agni and all of them felt immensely happy. The Kṛttikās asked Siva whether Śaṃukha (child with six faces) was his son to which Siva answered as follows: “Let him be your son under the name Kārttikeya; Gaṅgā’s son under the name Kumāra; Pārvatī’s son under the name Skanda; my son under the name Guha and Agni’s son with the name Mahāsena and under the name Saravana Saravana’s (the forest where it was born) son. He is a great yogi and will be known by these various names. As he possesses six faces he will become famous as ‘Śaṃukha’ also.

After having spoken thus Siva thought of the Devas and under the leadership of Brahmad and Viṣṇu all the Devas appeared there. They looked at the child to their hearts content and then told Siva thus: “Oh! Lord! You made Agni serve the purpose of Devas. Let us immediately start for Aūjas tirtha and crown Śaṃukha at Sarvasvati in Kurukṣetra. Let him flourish as army-chief of Devas, Gandharvas and Kinnaras and let him kill the terrible Mahiṣāsura and Tārākāsura.

3) Coronation. Brahmad, Viṣṇu, Siva and others reached Kurukṣetra with the child to crown him (Subrahmanya) as army-chief. Siva and Viṣṇu performed the consecration ceremony with holy water from the seven seas. Gandharvas, Rsis and others sang for joy and Apsaras danced. Pārvatī placed the child thus consecrated on her lap and kissed him repeatedly on the head.

4) Presents. After Guha’s consecration, the Devas presented the army-chief valorous armys. He was given by Siva four Pramathas, equal in prowess to Indra, called Ghantikarna, Lohitākṣa, Nandisenā and Kumudamāli. Brahmad and other Devas gave their own Pramathas to him. Brahmad gave him the Pramatama called Śhānu and Viṣṇu gave him three sets of Pramathas called Saṅkrama, Vikrama and Parākrama. Indra gave him Utkaśa and Paṅkaja; Sun (Sūrya) gave Daṇḍakapīṭṭalas; Moon gave Manivasuṃaṭita, the Aśvins gave Vatsanandises. In short, important Devas, Mātṛs, Tirthaś etc. gave Subrahmanya priceless presents too numerous to be named.

Seeing the rush of presents the great Garuda presented his own son, the fast-going Peacock to Subrahmanya. Aruna gave his own son, the cock. Agni gave the Vel (three-pronged weapon, trident), Bṛhaspati the danda (club, stick) Gaṅgā, the Kamāṇḍalu (water-pot of Sannyāsins) Viṣṇu the garland, Pārvatī clothes, Siva the locket and Indra the string of pearls.

5) Deśaśura war. The consecration of Subrahmanya as Commander-in-Chief of the army kindled a new hope and enthusiasm in the Devas. They challenged the Asuras for war and they took it up. The asura army entered the battle-field under the leadership of unrivalled warriors like Tārākāsura, Mahiṣa, Bāpa, son of Mahābali, Tāraka’s sons, Tārākāsura, Kamālākṣa, Vidyunmālī etc. In the furious battle that ensued Subrahmanya killed Tārākāsura. The other asura chiefs too were killed.

6) Vow of celibacy. After the killing of Tārākāsura Subrahmanya became the object of too much of petting by Pārvatī with the result that his life became unbridled and wayward. His lust was everyday on the increase and he committed even rape on Deva women, who were ultimately forced to complain about him to Pārvatī. Immediately she called Subrahmanya to her and showed her own image in all other women and he became so much repentant about his past actions that he took the vow before Pārvatī that in future he would look upon all women in the world as equal to her, his mother. (Brahmapāta Purāṇa 81).

7) Marriage. See under Devasena. (Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa, Canto 36; M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 223; Anuśasan Parva, Chapter 85; Skanda Purāṇa, Sambhava kāṇḍa; Kathāsaritāgama, Lāvānahalambaka, Tārāṅga 6; Uttara Rāmāyaṇa Kamba Rāmāyaṇa, Bālākāṇḍa; Vāmana Purāṇa, Chapters 57-61; Bhaviṣya Purāṇa).

8) Other information.
(i) On the occasion of the burning of the Khanda forest Subrahmanya went there carrying his weapon called ‘Sakti’ to fight Krṣṇa and Arjuna. (Adī Parva, Chapter 226, Verse 33).
(ii) Skanda was born from the semen of Siva which fell into Agni. So he got the name Skanda. (Skanda—fall). (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 223, Verse 16).
(iii) He once cut asunder the Kauṭūka mountain. (For details see under Kauṭūka I).
(iv) Noticing the very great effulgence of Skanda, Indra feared loss of his place and immediately he clashed with the former. Indra’s Vajra (thunderbolt) hit Skanda on his right and from the wound emerged a person wearing golden armour, divine ear-rings and holding the Vel in his hands and he was named Viśākha. Frightened by his sight Indra sought refuge with Subrahmanya. (Vana Parva, Chapter 227).
(v) When he married Devasena his six mothers came and blessed him and his wife; he then told the mothers thus: “You live with my father, Siva. Until I become sixteen years of age I will be functioning as a spirit which kills children and the children killed by me will serve as your food.” As soon as he finished speaking, a terrible person just like Agni emerged from his body and it was called Raudragnaha, which is known also by other names such as Skandapasmāra, Śakunirgha, Pūtanāghra etc. This Graha is supposed to cause children’s death. (Vana Parva, Chapter 230).
(vi) Subrahmanya once in the company of Rudradaeva visited the holy place Bhadravāja. (Vana Parva, Chapter 231, Verse 56).
(vii) Vāyubhagavān assumed responsibility for his protection. (Vana Parva, Chapter 231, Verse 56).
(viii) He killed Mahisāsura. (Vana Parva, Chapter 231, Verse 96).

(ix) Synonyms or sacred names of Subrahmanya:—
- Ağneya, Skanda, Dipañkrti, Anúmaya, Mayüraketu, Dharmátman, Bhūteśa, Mahiṣārdana, Kámañjita, Kamada, Kínta, Satyavāk, Bhuvane'vārā, Śrīśuṣṭhāra, Śucicandā, Dīptavarna, Subhānana, Amyagha, Anagha, Raudra, Priya, Candrāṇana, Praśāntatman, Dipaśakti, Bhadraṅkrt, Kūṭamohana, Śaṣṭhiṣṭi, Pavitra, Mātrvatasa, Kanyābhartā, Viśhaka, Śvāheya, Revaśītta, Viśākha, Prabhu, Netā, Naigameya, Sudacara, Suvrata, Lalita, Bālaēkrīdānakāprīya, Khacāri, Brahmacārin, Śura, Sarvaṇodhīva, Viśvāmitrāprīya, Devasenāprīya, Vāsudevāprīya, Priyākrt etc.

Those who repeat the above sacred names of Subrahmanya will attain fame, wealth and heaven. (Vana Parva, Chapter 232).

(x) In the Devāsura war he killed important leaders of the asuras like Mahiṣa, Tripiḍa and Hradodara. (Śalya Parva, Chapter 46, Verse 90).

(xi) He defeated Bānāsura and killed the sons of Tārakāsura. (Śalya Parva, Chapter 46, Verse 90).

(xii) Śiva consecrated him as lord (Sreṣṭhārāja) of the Bhūtas. (Śanti Parva, Chapter 122, Verse 32).

SUCAKRA. A warrior of Subrahmanya. (M.B. Śalya Parva, Chapter 45, Verse 59).

SUCAKŚUS. One of the seven channels of Gaṅgā. (See under Sindhu).

SUCANDRA I. A King of Ikṣvāku dynasty. A son named Viśālaṇiti was born to King Ikṣvāku by his wife Alambuṣa. The city Viśālanagara was founded by this Viśālaṇiti. A son named Hemacandra was born to Viśāla. Sucandra was the son of Hemacandra. Dhūmārśva was the son of Sucandra. (Vālmiki Rāmāyana, Bāla Kānda, Sarga 47).

SUCANDRA II. An asura. This asura was the son of Sinhihikā. (Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 66, Verse 46).

SUCANDRA III. A Gandharva. (Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 66, Verse 46). This Gandharva was the son of Prajāpati Kaśyapa, by his wife Pradhā. This Gandharva participated in the birth celebration of Arjuna. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 122, Verse 58).

SUCANTI. A muni who was an adorer of Atri Maharsi. There is a reference to him in Rgveda, Manḍala 1, Anuvāka 16, Sūkta 112.

SUCĀRŪ I. A son of Dhrtarāṣṭra. With his seven brothers he attacked Abhimanyu. (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 79, Verse 22).

SUCĀRŪ II. A son born to Śrī Karṣṇa by his wife Rukmini. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 14, Verse 33). The sons born by Rukmini were Praduyonna, Cāruḍeṣa, Sudeṣa, Čaruḍeṣa, Cāruṛṣa, Cāruṛga and Bhdacāru. (Bhāgavata, Skandha 10). SUCCHĀYĀ. The wife of Siṣṭi, the son of Dhruvā. Two sons named Siṣṭi and Bhavya were born to Dhruvā by his wife Sambhū. Succhāyā, the wife of Siṣṭi gave birth to five sons who were nameless. They were Ripu, Ripuñjaya, Vipra, Vṛkala and Vṛkatējas. (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Aṁśa 1, Chapter 13).

SUCETAS. The son of Grītamadā who was born in the dynasty of Vītahavyā. A son named Varca was born to Sucetas. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 30, Verse 61).

ŚUGI I. A deva (god) who was born in Agniṇavān. This Śuci was the son of Agni Deva who was the eldest son of Brahmā, and his wife Śvāhā. Śuci had two brothers by name Pāvaka and Pavamāna. These brothers had fortyfive sons. They are also known as "Agni". Thus there are on the whole fortynine Agnis, including the father, three sons and their fortyfive children. (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Part I, Chapter 10).

ŚUCI II. Cākṣuṣa was a son of Manu. Ten sons were born to Manu by his wife, Nadvāla. They were, Kuru, Puru, Satadyumna, Tapasvi, Śucī, Agniṣoma, Atriṣātra, Sudyumna and Abhimanyu. (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Part I, Chapter 13).

ŚUCI III. There is a passage in Chapter 19 of Agni Purāṇa which says that Kaśyapa Prajāpati had six daughters by his wife Tāmā, who were, Kākā, Śyenī, Bhāsi, Gṛddhrikā, Śucī and Grivā and that different classes of birds took their source from them.

ŚUCI IV. A King of the Solar dynasty. From Bhāgavata, 9th Skanda we learn that he was the son of Śrakrūdymuna and the father of Vanadvāja.

ŚUCI V. In Mahābhārata, Sabbhā Parva, Chapter 8, Verse 14, there is a reference to a King Śucī who worships Yama, the son of Śūrya, in Yama's assembly. ŚUCI VI. The leader of a band of merchants. It was he who met and comforted Damayantī who lost her way in the forest after Nala left her. (Vana Parva, Chapter 64, Verse 127).

ŚUCI VII. One of the sons of Viśvāmitra. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 4, Verse 54).

ŚUCI VIII. A son of Bhṛgu Maharsi. (Mahābhārata, Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 55, Verse 128).

ŚUCI IX. A Maharsi born in the family of Āṅgiras. By a curse of Vasiṣṭha, this Maharsi was born as a mortal, as the son of King Vījitāśva. (Bhāgavata, 4th Skandha).

ŚUCI. The son of Śuddha and the grandson of Anenas. Trikalpava was the son of Śuci. (Bhāgavata, 4th Skandha).

ŚUCI (NEEDLE). Iron needle is Purānicly important. There is a story connecting the iron-needle of Bhārata and Vībhiṣaṇa as follows:—

Having killed Rāvana, Śrī Rāma anointed Vībhiṣaṇa as the King of Lāṅkā and returned to Ayodhya. During the reign of Vībhiṣaṇa, Lāṅkā reached the highest stage of prosperity. Among the five metals, only gold was seen in Lāṅkā. At this stage Vībhiṣaṇa got an iron needle from Bhārata. He kept it as a rare and valuable treasure, in his palace.

Vībhiṣaṇa who was an ardent devotee of Śrī Rāma used to cross the sea, come to Rāmeśvara-temple and offer flower at the feet of Śrī Rāma, every day. Flower was brought in a big golden pot. Once Vībhiṣaṇa placed the golden pot in the courtyard of the temple and went in with the flower. After the worship, Vībhiṣaṇa came out and taking the pot on his head returned to Lāṅkā. Being immersed in the thought of Śrī Rāma, Vībhiṣaṇa did not look inside the pot. After reaching the palace he looked into the pot and saw a Brahmin sleeping in it. He was very pleased to see the Brahmin. So after welcoming him with hospitality, he brought the box in which he had kept the most precious treasure and placed it before the Brahmin who returned with the box to Bhārata. He eagerly opened the box and saw only an iron needle in it. The consternation of the Brahmin need only be imagined.

SUCIVRATA. A King of ancient times. (M.B. Adi Parva, Chapter 1, Verse 256).

SUDAKSINI I. The son of King Pañḍraka. Śrī-Kṛṣṇa killed Pañḍraka in battle and his head, cut off by Śrī Kṛṣṇa, fell in the country of Kāśī. Sudakṣina who learned about the death of his father, went to Kāśī and recognized the head by the ear-rings. Sudakṣina made up his mind to kill Śrī Kṛṣṇa somehow or other and began to do penance in Kāśī before Śiva. Pleased with his penance Śiva appeared before him and advised him to create a wicked fairy from the fire of sorcery. Accordingly Sudakṣina prepared a fire of sorcery, from which a wicked fairy came out and ran towards Śrī Kṛṣṇa. Śrī Kṛṣṇa sent his weapon the Discus which cut off the head of the wicked fairy and from there the Discus flew to Kāśī and turned Sudakṣina to ashes, and returned to Dwārakā. (Bhāgavata, Skandha 10).

SUDAKSINI II. A king of Kāmboja (Kabul). The following information is taken from Mahābhārata about this king.

(i) Sudakṣina had been present at the Svaayamvara marriage of Draupadi. (Adi Parva, Chapter 185, Verse 15).

(ii) He came with an aksauhini of army to help Duryodhana against the Pāṇḍavas in the battle of Bharata. (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 19, Verse 21).

(iii) Sudakṣina was a valiant fighter in the army of the Kauravas. (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 160, Verse 1).

(iv) On the first day of the battle of Bhārata, there was a combat between Śrutakarmā and Sudakṣina. (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 45, Verse 66).

(v) There was another combat between Abhimanyu and Sudakṣina. (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 45, Verse 66).

(vi) Arjuna killed Sudakṣina in the battle of Bhārata. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 92, Verse 61).

(vii) The younger brother of Sudakṣina confronted Arjuna to avenge the death of his brother and was killed by Arjuna. (M.B. Karna Parva, Chapter 56, Verse 110).

SUDAKSINI III. A warrior who fought on the side of the Pāṇḍavas. Droṇācarya shot him down from the chariot with an arrow. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 21, Verse 56).

SUDAKSINI. The wife of Dilipa. (See under Dilipa).

SUDAMA I. A minister of king Janaka. (Vālmiki Rāmāyaṇa, Bālañcāndha, Sarga 70).

SUDAMA II. A king of Daśartha. This king had two daughters of whom one was married by Bīhma, the king of Vidarbha, and the other by Virābhū king of Cedi. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 96, Verse 14).

SUDAMA III. A country of North India. Mention is made in Mahābhārata, Sabhā Parva, Chapter 27, Verse 11, that this country was captured by Arjuna.

SUDAMA IV. An attendant of Subrahmnaya. (M.B. Salya Parva, Chapter 46, Verse 10).

SUDAMA V. A cowherd. This Sudāma was reborn as an asura, because of the curse of Devī Rādhā. (For further details see under Tulasī, para 5).

SUDAMA VI. A warrior who took the side of the Pāṇḍavas and fought against the Kauravas. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 23, Verse 41).

SUDAMA VII. The watchet of the garden of Kaṁsa. It is stated in Bhāgavata, Skandha 10, that this Sudāma adorned Śrī Kṛṣṇa and Balabhadra Rāma with flower garlands.

SUDAMA VIII. The real name of Kucela who was the friend of Śrī Kṛṣṇa in boyhood. Though his name occurs everywhere in Bhāgavata, as Kucela, his real name is Sudāma. (See under Kucela).

SUDAMA IX. A river famous in the Purāṇas. It is mentioned in Vālmiki Rāmāyaṇa, Ayodhyākānda, Sarga 71, that Bharata, the brother of Śrī Rāma, crossed this river while he was returning from Kekaya.

SUDANYIKA. See under Śūryaprabha.

SUDARŚANA I. A king of ancient India. He was a contemporary of Śrī Kṛṣṇa. This king who was esteemed even by the gods, was once captured and made a prisoner by another king named Nagnajit. Śrī Kṛṣṇa defeated Nagnajit and all the other Kings and made this king free. This story occurs in Mahābhārata, Udyoga Parva, Chapter 48, Verse 75.

SUDARŚANA II. A king who took the side of the Kauravas and fought against the Pāṇḍavas in Kuruksetra. This king was killed by Sātyaki. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 118, Verse 14).

SUDARŚANA III. A king of Mālava. This king joined the side of the Pāṇḍavas in the battle of Bhārata and was killed by Aśvatthamā. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 200, Verse 13).
SUDARŚANA IV

SUDARŚANA IV. A son of Dhṛtarāṣṭra. In the battle of Bhāratas, he attacked Bhimaśeṇa and was killed by him. (M.B. Sālīya Parva, Chapter 27, Verse 31).

SUDARŚANA V. Son of Dhruvasandhi, king of Kosala. Manorāma was the mother of Sūdarśana. (For further details see under Dhruvasandhi).

SUDARŚANA VI. One of the five sons of Bharata. Bharata, the son of Rṣabha, had married Pañcājani, the daughter of Viṇ śvarūpa. Five sons named Sumati, Rāṣṭrabhī, Sūdarśana, Āvarana and Dhūrmaketu were born to Bharata, who divided Bhāratas among his five sons and went to Sāla-grāma and did penance there and died. (Bhāgavata, Skanda 5).

SUDARŚANA VII. The son born to god Fire by his wife Sudar'ana. (Sudar'ana was the daughter of Duryodhana (Nila) of the dynasty of Ikṣvāku. For the story of her marriage see under Sudar'ana). Sudar'ana, the son of Fire, married Oghvātī the daughter of Oghvān. That story is given below:-

Oghvān had two children a daughter named Oghvātī and a son named Ogharatha. Oghvān gave his daughter in marriage to Sūdarśana who was wise and learned. The couple lived in Kurukṣetra. Once Sūdarśana said to Oghvātī thus:—“You should honour guests in all ways. If it is the desire of a guest, you should not draw back from giving even your body. Whether I am present here or not a guest should not be insulted.” Oghvātī promised to obey the order of her husband to the letter. Sūdarśana had been trying to become victorious over Mṛtyu (Death) and so Death had been waiting to find out some vulnerable point in Sūdarśana’s life. While Sūdarśana had gone to cut firewood, a brahmin entered the hermitage and said to Oghvātī:—“If you do observe the duties of a house-holder show hospitality to me.” Hearing this, Oghvātī welcomed the brahmin and performed the usual hospitality and asked him “What shall I do for you?” “Give yourself to me”, was the answer. Seeing that the guest was not contented with the usual hospitalities and remembering the words of her husband, Oghvātī gave herself to the guest. Both of them entered the interior of the hermitage. At this moment Sudar’ana returned with firewood, and looked for Oghvātī and called her aloud, several times. He got no reply. Then the Brahmin who was lying inside called out:—“Hei! Son of Fire! A guest has come. Your wife showed all kinds of hospitality. But I was not contented with them. Now she is offering herself to me.”

These words did not seem to make any change in Sudar’ana. Dharmadeva was much pleased, as Sudarśana had come out victorious in all these tests. He came out and appeared in his own form and blessed Sudarśana. Due to the blessing of Dharmadeva, half of the body of Oghvātī flowed as the river Oghvātī and the other half was dissolved in the soul of her husband, Sudarśana thus earned victory over Mṛtyu and obtained prosperity.

SUDARŚANA VIII. A Vidyādharā. Because of the curse of Aṅgiras, this Vidyādharā was changed into a mountain snake. That story occurs as follows in Bhāgavata, Skanda 9.

While Sūdarśana was playing about in the world of Gods with some Gandharva damsels, Aṅgiras and some other hermits came by that way. Sūdarśana ridiculed them. Aṅgiras became angry and changed him to a mountain snake by a curse. Sūdarśana prayed for liberation from the curse. Aṅgiras said that in Devī parayuga, Mahāviṣṇu would incarnate as Śrī Kṛṣṇa and when Kṛṣṇa trod upon him, he would regain his original form.”

Sūdarśana became a big snake and began life in Āmbāḍi. Once the people of Āmbāḍi went to Devī forest and worshipped Maheśvara. They spent the night on the banks of the river Kālindī. In the night the snake mentioned above, caught hold of the leg of Nandagopa. Seeing the snake swallowing Nandagopa the rest of them crowded there and struck at the snake with burning faggots. But it was in vain. Finally Śrī Kṛṣṇa came, and gave the snake a thrash. Instantly Sūdarśana got his old form. He went to the world of gods.

SUDARŚANA IX. A brahmin sinner who lived in the Tretāyuga. The moment he touched the water in which Viṣṇu washed his feet, he obtained remission of his sins and entered Vaikuṇṭha. This story which is given under, occurs in Padma Purāṇa, Brahma Khaṇḍa, Chapter 17.

There lived a brahmin sinner in Tretāyuga. He used to commit sins such as eating food on the eleventh lunar day, ridiculing conventional fast and vow, etc. When he died, the men of Yama took his soul to the world of Yama. At his order Sūdarśana was laid in horrible excrements for the period of hundred Manvantaras. When he was released he was born on earth as a hog. Because he ate food on Harivāsara (a fast-day) he suffered hell for a long time. His next birth was that of a crow and lived on excrements. Once the crow drank the water which fell on the steeps while washing the feet of Viṣṇu. The crow obtained remission of all its sins. On the same day it was caught in the net of a forestman and died. Then a divine chariot drawn by swans came and took the crow to the world of Viṣṇu.

SUDARŚANA X. The son of Dirghabhaṭṭa who was born in the family of Manu. He conquered all the kingdoms and ruled as an emperor. The famous hermit Vasiṣṭha was his priest.

Once Devi Mahākāli appeared to him in a dream and said to him:—“Very soon a flood will occur in the world. So go to the Himalayas with your wife and the priest Vasiṣṭha and stay there in a cave.” According to the instruction of Devi, Sūdarśana took everybody with him and went to the Himalayas.

The prophecy of Devi came true. The earth was filled with water. This deluge lasted for ten years. After that the earth resumed its original form and Sūdarśana returned to Ayodhya. (Bhaviṣya Purāṇa, Pratisarga Parva, I, 1).

It is mentioned in Kālikā Purāṇa that Sūdarśana had broken off a piece of a forest region of Himalaya and taken it to his country and founded on it the city called Khāḍjavīnagarā and that after a short period king Vijaya of the Bhairava dynasty killed king Sudarśana and became the ruler of the city. (Kālikā Purāṇa, 92).

SUDARŚANA XI. A wife of God Fire. This Sudarśanā was the daughter of Duryodhana, the son of Durjaya of the Ikṣvāku dynasty. The mother of Sudarśanā was Narmadā. It is said that so beautiful a woman as Sudarśanā had never been born. The God Fire was once fascinated by the beauty of Sudarśanā who had been instructed to serve him, and wished to accept her as his wife. So he informed her of his desire. Being of a noble race, she said that a virgin ought to be given away by her parents. The God Fire approached the father of Sudarṣanā and informed him of every thing. When he knew that the person who made the request was the God Fire, the king gave his daughter Sudarṣanā as wife to the God. (Duryodhana had another name Nila). In the Purāṇas there is another statement also that Nila was the ruler of Māheśmatī. (See under Duryodhana II and Agni Para 8).

SUDARṢANA XII. An island. This is another name of Jambūdvipa. Once Sañjaya talked to Dhṛtarāṣṭra about this dvīpa (Island). (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 5).

SUDARṢANA XIII. A tree in the Jambū island. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 7 that this tree was eleven thousand yojanas high.

SUDARṢANA XIV. (The Discus Sudarṣana-weapon).

1) General information. The weapon of Mahāviṣṇu. Two stories are seen about the origin of this weapon.

(i) The sun married Sañjā the daughter of Viṣvakarmā. Sañjā complained to her father that she could not bear the radiance of the Sun. Viṣvakarmā put the Sun in a turning machine and turned him and decreased his radiance. Out of the dust of the Sun produced by this process, Viṣvakarmā made the discus-weapon, the arial chariot Puspaka, the Trident of Śiva, and the Sakti (lance) of Subrahmanyā. Of these weapons the discus-weapon Sudarsana was given to Mahāviṣṇu. This is one story. (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Aniṣa 3, Chapter 2).

(ii) During the burning of the forest Khandava, Indra showered rain against the fire. According to the second story, the God Fire gave the discus weapon Sudarṣana to Śrī Kṛṣṇa and the Gāndiva to Arjuna to fight against Indra. (See the word Khandavadvadā). Besides these two stories, several statements occur in various Purāṇas, about this weapon Sudarṣana. As Sudarṣana was in existence even before the incarnation of Śrī Kṛṣṇa, the story that Viṣvakarmā made it, ought to be given prominence. Very often Mahāviṣṇu used to destroy enemies by this Sudarṣana. Though Mahāviṣṇu had taken several incarnations, only Śrī Kṛṣṇa is mentioned in the Purāṇas as having used this weapon Sudarsana very often.

2) The power of Sudarṣana. Sudarṣana flies up to the ranks of the enemies, burning like fire. Once Mahāviṣṇu sent the weapon Sudarṣana towards the asuras. Then the havoc and destruction caused by this weapon, is described as follows:

The moment he thought of Sudarṣana, to destroy the power of the enemy, it made its appearance like the Sun in the Solar region. It was a fearful sight. Emitting light and radiance from the blazing fire, the Sudarṣana rested on the hand of Viṣṇu; turning round with a tremendous speed. Viṣṇu threw it at the enemies with his powerful hand like that of the trunk of an elephant, with a view to cleave the city of the enemies into pieces. That weapon which was burning in great flames like a great fire spreading radiance, flew into the midst of the enemy's army and instantly every one near it fell dead. Thus it flew about among the asuras and burnt them to ashes. Then turning round and round in the air it drank the blood shed on the earth. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 19).

SUDARṢANA XV. Indra had a chariot named Sudarṣana. (Mahābhārata, Virāṭa Parva, Chapter 56, Verse 3).

SUDĀSA I. A King of Kosala. This Sudāsa was a King who ought to be remembered every morning and evening. (Mahābhārata, Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 165, Verse 57).

SUDĀSA II. An Āryan King named Sudās is stated in Ṛgveda. It is mentioned in Ṛgveda Maṇḍala 1, Anuvaka 11, Sūkta 63, that Viśvāmitra saved this King from a danger. (See under Dīgarāja).

SUDĀSA III. A King of Ayodhya. He was the son of Sarvakāma and the father of Kalmāśapāda. (Īśāvakī, Skandha 9; Viṣṇu Purāṇa, 4, 4, 30).

SUDATTĀ. One of the prominent wives of Śrī Kṛṣṇa. The palace Ketumān in Dvārakā, was given to this wife. (Mahābhārata, Dākṣīṇāyta Pāṭha, Sabhā Parva, Chapter 38).

SUDDHA. A King of the Bhrigu dynasty. Īśāvakī, 9th Skandha mentions that he was the son of Anenas and Śuci's father.

SUDEṢṇA I. The wife of Virāṭa, the King of Matsya. 1) General information. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Virāṭa Parva, Chapter 9, Verse 6, that this Sudesna, the daughter of the King of Kekeya, had the name Citrā also.

2) Other details.

(i) During the pseudonymity, Pāñcāli lived with Sudesna in the guise of Sairandhri. (M.B. Virāṭa Parva, Chapter 9).

(ii) Sudēṣṇā agreed to the request of Kēcaka to get Sairandhri for him, as he was fascinated by her beauty. (M.B. Virāṭa Parva, Chapter 14, Verse 6).

(iii) Sudesna sent Kēcaka to the house of Sairandhri. (M.B. Virāṭa Parva, Chapter 15).

(iv) Draupadī consoled Sudesna who was miserable at the death of Kēcaka. (M.B. Virāṭa Parva, Chapter 16, Verse 48).

(v) Sudeṣṇā asked Draupadī to go away from the palace. (M.B. Virāṭa Parva, Chapter 24, Verse 3).

(vi) In connection with the marriage of her daughter Uttara, Sudeṣṇā went to Upaplāvya with Draupadī. (M.B. Virāṭa Parva, Chapter 72, Verse 30).

SUDEṢṇA II. The wife of the King Bali. Five sons named Aṃga, Vaṅga, Kāḷiṅga, Pundra and Suhma were born to him, who was the hero of Dirghatamas by this queen Sudesna. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 98: 30; Īśāvakī, Skandha 9; Harivarṇa 1, 39).

SUDEṢṇA I. A son born to Śrī Kṛṣṇa by Rukmiṇī. (See under Rukmiṇī).

SUDEṢṇA II. A country in India, very famous, in the Purāṇas. (Mahābhārata, Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 9, Verse 4).

SUDEVA I. A brahmin who was a favourite of the King of Vidarbha. It was this brahmin who was sent by the King of Vidarbha to search for Damayanti. (See under Damayanti).

SUDEVA II. A captain of the army of King Ambariṣa. He was calm and fearless. Sudeva met with a heroic death in a battle and attained heaven. Indra gave him a suitable place. Later Ambariṣa died and came to heaven. There he saw his captain Sudeva and was amazed. He asked Indra how it was that Sudeva was given a place in heaven. Indra replied that to fight fearlessly in the battle-field and meet with heroic death, was a yajña (sacrifice) and that due to this yajña Sudeva attained heaven. The King asked, when this took place. Indra continued: — "Once Ambaraśa sent Sudeva to subdue the asuras and giants. Sudeva entered the battlefield and looked at the vast army of the enemy. Finding that it was impossible to defeat the army of giants, he sat down and meditated on Śiva, who appeared before him and encouraged him. A fierce battle followed in which Sudeva annihilated the army of the giants completely and he himself met with a heroic death. That is how he obtained heaven. (M.B. Dākyāṇāyapāthā, Śanti Parva, Chapter 98).

SUDEVA III. The son of Haryāśa, the King of Kāśi. He was quite valiant and radiant. After the death of his father he was anointed as King of Kāśi. As soon as he became King, the sons of King Vitahavya attacked Sudeva and captured him. After this Divodāsa became the King of Kāśi. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 30, Verse 13).

SUDEVA IV. A famous King. Nābāgā married Suprabhā the daughter of this King Sudeva. The following is a story taken from Mārkandeya Purāṇa stating how this Sudeva who was a Kṣatriya by birth, became a Vaśya by the curse of hermit Pramati.

Once Nala, the friend of Sudeva, and the relative of Dhūmārka, after having drunk too much liquor, tried to rape the wife of the hermit Pramati. All this happened while King Sudeva was standing silently near Nala. Pramati requested King Sudeva repeatedly to save his wife. Sudeva replied: "The Kṣatriya who could help the needy, could save your wife also. But I am a Vaśya." This arrogance of the King made the hermit angry. "May you become a Vaśya," The hermit cursed the King. Sudeva repented and requested for liberation from the curse. "When a Kṣatriya steals away your daughter you will recover the lost feelings of Kṣatriya." The hermit gave this liberation from the curse. Because of this curse Nābāgā stole away Suprabhā the daughter of Sudeva and Sudeva got back the lost feelings of Kṣatriya.

SUDEVA I. A daughter of the King of Āṅga named Ariha. The King Rkṣa was her son. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 95, Verse 24).

SUDEVA II. A princess born in the dynasty of King Dāśārha. Vikunṭha, a King of the Pūru dynasty married Sudevā. The King Ajamidha was her son. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 95, Verse 36).

SUDEVA III. The wife of Iksvāku who was the son of Manu. This Sudevā was the daughter of Devarāta the King of Kāśi. Iksvāku and Sudevā are said to be the reincarnations of Viśnū and Devī Lākṣmī respectively. While the couple were walking about in the forest, they saw a she-hog. That hog was the cursed form of a Brahmin woman named Sudevā. Sudevā, the wife of Iksvāku gave the merits she had earned in one year by her good deeds to Sudevā the she-hog and liberated her from her curse. This story occurs in Padma Purāṇa Bhūmikhaṇḍa, Chapter 42. The story is given below: Once King Iksvāku and his wife Sudevā were hunting on the banks of the Gāndā. Then a big hog came there with his wife and children. The hog was afraid of Iksvāku. So he said to his wife: — "Look! beloved! Iksvāku the valiant, the son of Manu, is come for hunting. I am going to fight with him." His wife said: "How did you get this bravery to fight with the king; you who always try to evade the forest-men?" "It is not bravery, my love. It is because I could go to heaven if I fight with the king valiantly and meet with heroic death", replied the hog. The wife tried her utmost to dissuade her husband from his attempt. The children also tried to stop him. They could not change his mind. So all of them decided to help him as much as they could in his fight. They got ready for a fight against Iksvāku and his army.

The king’s army saw the preparations of the hogs and their resolute stand. Struck with fear, they informed Iksvāku about it. The king ordered the noble hog to be caught. Iksvāku and his wife mounted on horse and followed the army. All the hounds ran towards the hogs barking. The army sent a volley of arrows at the hogs. The hog and his wife stopped the arrows. The army could not defeat the hogs. At last the king himself killed the hog with a club. While the king was looking on, that noble hog was changed to a noble Gandharva with four hands and divine clothes and ornaments. Leaving his old body of hog on the earth he rose up into the sky like the Sun and went to heaven. Seeing this sight Sudevā was struck with fear. She got down from the chariot and called the wife of the hog towards her. The wife of the hog, wounded all over, came to the queen Sudevā. Sudevā asked her about the previous history of her dead husband. The hog's wife said: "Lady! If you feel interested I shall tell you about the previous life of my dead husband and myself."

"My dead husband was a Gandharva named Raṅkāvidyādhara, in the previous birth. Once he sat in the shade of a tree near the hermitage of Pulastya and began to sing with accompaniment. As the singing caused disturbance to his solitude the hermit Pulastya came and requested the Gandharva to shift to some other place. Raṅkāvidyādhara did not like to comply with the request of the hermit. At last Pulastya removed his hermitage to another place. Raṅkāvidyādhara walked in search of Pulastya. Finally the Gandharva saw Pulastya. Seeing that he was alone, the Gandharva took the shape of a hog and entered the hermitage and began to wound with his tusk and to molest that radiant sage Pulastya. Thinking it to be a mere animal Pulastya suffered it for a long time. The hog continued its actions of molestation. It passed excrements in front of the sage, danced before him, played in front of him, fell down in the courtyard and rolled and did various other things. As it was an animal Pulastya forgave him. One day Raṅkāvidyādhara entered the hermitage as a hog, roared aloud, laughed aloud, cried aloud, sang aloud and in various other ways tried to change the mind of the hermit. Seeing all these, Pulastya began to think that it was not a hog. "A hog will not try to molest one continuously. I forgave him thinking him to be a mere animal. This must be that wicked Gandharva." Thus recognizing him Pulastya got angry and cursed him thus: "You tried to violate my patience in the shape of a hog. For you, great sinner; take the next birth as a hog." With grief the Gandharva ran to Indra and informed him of everything. Indra requested Pulastya to liberate the Gandharva from the curse. Accordingly Pulastya gave him remission that he would regain his original form when he was killed by the hands of the immensely good king Iksvāku." Sudevä was amazed on hearing this story of the dead hog, and asked her again, "You hog! You speak like a human being. How is it?"
The wife of the hog continued the story. "Lady! I also have taken rebirth as a hog. In my previous birth I was the daughter of a Brahmin named Vasudatta (Vasudeva) in the city of Śṛipura in Kaliyuga. They named me Sudevä (Vasudevā). Because of the unlimited caressing and fondling of my father I grew up as an arrogant girl. In the meanwhile a Brahmin youth named Śivāśarmā, who was well-versed in all the branches of knowledge, and whose parents were dead, came to my house. My father gave me to that Brahmin. I lived with him in my father's house. Being proud of the wealth and prosperity of my parents I did not care to render the services due to my husband. My husband who was a peaceful man bore everything. By and by I became wicked. At last because of my wickedness and immorality my husband left the country. My father hated me and expelled me from the house. My father feared that some calamity would happen to me as Kaṁsa was born to Padmāvatī, the wife of Ugrasena, by her illegal connection with persons other than her husband."
Hearing about the birth of Kaṁsa, Sudevä asked the she-hog to tell her about the circumstances which led to the illegal connections of Padmāvatī. The wife of the hog continued. "In days of old there was a king in Mathurāpuri named Ugrasena, who married Padmāvatī the daughter of king Satyaketu of Vidarbha. While the couple were living happily in Mathurāpuri Satyaketu wanted to see his daughter. He sent a messenger to Mathurāpuri and brought Padmāvatī to Vidarbha. She walked along the vicinity of the palace in which she was born, enjoying the beauty of the scenery. She walked on and arrived on the mountain called Puspavān, and sat on the bank of a lake. At that time a Gandharva named Godila (Dramila) came there. He fell in love with her. He took the shape of Ugrasena and came near her and talked with her. Thīking that her husband had come from Mathurā to see her she embraced him. After a while she understood that the visitor was not her husband. She began to curse him. The visitor admitted that he was Godila an attendant of Vaśravaṇa. Godila went on his way. But she had become pregnant by that time. Her parents tried in various ways to destroy the child in her womb. One day the infant lying in her womb told her thus: "Mother! you do not know who I am. I am the rebirth of a powerful asura named Kālanemi. In ancient days Viśṇu killed me in a battle between the gods and asuras. I have entered into your womb for revenge. Mother! you need not take the trouble to destroy me." Saying so, the infant stopped speaking. After ten years Padmāvatī gave birth to the mighty and strong Kaṁsa. He was killed by Śrī Kṛṣṇa and he attained heaven.
Sudevä was struck with wonder at the story of Kaṁsa. She asked the she-hog to continue her own story. She continued her own story. "I have said that my father expelled me. Being shameless I walked away from there soon. Nobody helped me. Those who saw me scolded me. Days passed. Afflicted by a horrible disease, and travelling in this manner, I came to a big house. I entered the courtyard and begged for alms. It was the house of my husband Śivāśarmā. When I abandoned him he married another woman named Maṅgalā and was leading a prosperous life. Maṅgalā gave me food. Śivāśarmā asked me who I was. I told him my story. He remembered me, his former wife. Maṅgalā also felt compassion for me. They gave me gold ornaments and made me stay there. But my conscience pricked me. Thus burning internally I died.
My soul went to hell. After the suffering of a very long period, I took birth again as a Jackal. Then I became a dog, and then a snake. After that I passed through the births of a hen, a cat and a rat. Thus Brahmin had put me in the wombs of all kinds of animals. Now I have taken the birth of a she-hog. Lady! Your husband Ikṣvāku is the incarnation of Viśṇu in portion and yourself, that of Lakṣmī in portion. If you would give me the merits you have earned for one day by your good deeds, I could leave off all these mean births and attain heaven."
The eyes of Sudevä were full when she heard the story of the hog. She gave to the she-hog the merits she had earned by good deeds for one year. The hog was changed to a divine woman of youth and beauty. Immediately a divine chariot came down from heaven and took her to heaven, while everybody was looking on. Ikṣvāku and Sudevä returned to their palace much pleased at the redemption of the she-hog.

SUGOPTĀ. An eternal Viśvadeva (god concerned with offerings to the manes). (Mahābhārata, Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 91, Verse 37).

SUGRIVA I. Bāli and Sugriva were brothers. Their mother was Aruna who once put the guise of a woman. At that time he was called by the name Aruni. Bāli was the son born to Indra by Aruni and Sugriva was the son born to the Sun by Aruni. Both of them were brought up in the hermitage of Gautama. When the King of Kīśkindhā Rākṣarasājad died, Bāli was anointed the king of Kīśkindhā. Sugriva lived with Bāli, serving him. At this time Bāli engaged in a battle with the asura Dunḍubhi. Bāli chased Dunḍubhi into a cave. Placing Sugriva at the mouth of the cave, Bāli went in. By the magic and sorcery of Dunḍubhi, it appeared to Sugriva that Bāli was killed by Dunḍubhi. Sugriva returned to Kīśkindhā. Bāli who came out, followed Sugriva to kill him due to misunderstanding. Bāli chased Sugriva all over the world. It is mentioned in Vālmikī Rāmāyaṇa, Kīśkindhā Kāṇḍa, Sarga 46, that the knowledge of the lay-out of the various countries in the world that Sugriva got in this running, helped him later, in the search for Sītā.

At last Sugriva entered Rṣyamūkācāla. Bāli had been once cursed that if he entered this mountain his head would be broken into pieces. Hanūmān became the minister of Sugriva. It was during this period that Śrī Rāma and Lakṣmāṇa came by that way in search of Sītā. Sugriva and Śrī Rāma entered into a treaty. Bāli should be killed and Kīśkindhā should be given to Sugriva in place of which Rāma should be helped to find out Sītā and get her back.

Śrī Rāma killed Bāli and gave Kīśkindhā to Sugriva, who sent monkey-armies in all directions to find out Sītā. Hanūmān found out Sītā and returned to Śrī Rāma, who fought a great battle with Rāvaṇa, in which battle Sugriva took a prominent part. It was Kumbhakarṇa, who oppressed the monkey army much. When he caught Sugriva, Kumbhakarnā lost his ears and nose. Then he caught hold of the monkey warriors and Śrī Rāma cut off his hands with arrows. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 1). After the war, when Rāma and others returned to Ayodhya, Sugriva also accompanied them. After that Sugriva returned to Kīśkindhā. After a few years Candragupta, the second son of Sahasramukha Rāvaṇa, carried away the daughter of Sugriva. Hearing this, Śrī Rāma confronted Sahasramukha Rāvaṇa, who was killed by the arrow of Sītā.

Sugriva participated in the horse-sacrifice performed by Śrī Rāma. The control of the army was in the hands of Sugriva, the financial affairs, with Vibhiṣaṇa and central powers, with Lakṣmāṇa. When the sacrifice was completed, Sugriva returned to Kīśkindhā.

SUGRIVA II. An asura. This asura was the minister of Sumbha, an asura-chief. (Devi Bhāgavata).

Bhīmasena also conquered this country during his regional conquest of the east. (M.B. Sabhā Parva, Chapter 30, Verse 16).

SUHMA II. A country situated in the mountainous region of North India. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Sāhā Parva, Chapter 27, Verse 21, that Arjuna conquered this country during his regional conquest of the North.

SUHOTRA. See under Suhotra II.

SUHOTRA I. A son of the hermit Jamadagni. Five sons named Rūmāṇvān, Suhotra, Vasu, Viśvāvasu and Parasurāma were born to Jamadagni by his wife Reṇukā (Brahmanda Purāṇa, Chapter 58).

SUHOTRA II. A son of emperor Bharata. (For genealogy, see under Bharata I).

Five sons were born to Bharata, the son of Duṣyanta. They were Suhotra, Suhotā, Gaya, Garbha and Suketupu. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 278).

SUHOTRA III.
1. General information. A king of the Candra dynasty. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 94, Verse 24, that he was the grandson of emperor Bharata and the son of the elder brother of Bhūmanu. Puṣkārīṇī was the mother of this Suhotra.
2. Other details.
(i) This Suhotra got suzerainty over the entire earth. After this he conducted horse-sacrifice and several other sacrifices. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 94, Verse 25).
(ii) Suhotra married Sudvarnā, a princess of the Ikṣvāku dynasty. Three sons, Ajamīdha, Sumīdha and Purumīdha were born to them. (M. B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 94, Verse 30).
(iii) Suhotra was a generous king. (M. B. Droṇa-Parva, Chapter 56).
(iv) Being pleased at his hospitality, Indra showered a rain of gold in the country for a year. Rivers were full of golden water. Indra showered golden fishes also in these rivers. But the king divided all this gold among Brahmins. (M. B. Śānti Parva, Chapter 29, Verse 25).

SUHOTRA IV. Son of Sahadeva, one of the Pāṇḍavas. Sahadeva married Vijayā, daughter of Duyūtīmān, the king of Madra. The son Suhotra was born to them. (M. B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 95, Verse 80).

SUHOTRA V. A hermit. This hermit honoured Yudhiṣṭhīra to a great extent. (Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 26, Verse 24).

SUHOTRA VI. A king of the Kuru dynasty. Once this king obstructed the way of Śibi, born in the family of King Uṣīnara. He let Śibi go only after the intervention of Nārada, (See under Śibi).

SUHOTRA VII. A giant. This giant was one of those kings who had ruled over the entire earth and had to leave the place due to fate. (M. B. Sānti Parva, Chapter 277, Verse 51).

SUHU. A Yādava king who was the son of Ugrasena. (Bhāgavata, Skandha 9).

SUHVA. (SUHMA) A king of the Bharata dynasty. Suha was the son of Bali, and grandson of Sutapas. Bali had no direct sons. Being miserable due to the absence of sons, Bali approached the hermit Dirghaṭamas, by whom the queen gave birth to six sons. They were Aṅga, Vanga, Kalinga, Suha (or Suhma), Puṇḍra and Adjūpa. (Bhāgavata, Skandha 9).

SUJĀNÚ. A great saint. This hermit stopped Śrī Kṛṣṇa on his way to Hastināpura and conversed with him. (Mahābhārata, Dākṣīṇātyapātha, Udyoga Parva, Chapter 83).

SUJĀTA. One of the hundred sons of Ṛṣītarāṣṭa. He attacked Bhīmasena in the battle of Bhārata and Bhīmasena killed him. (M.B. Salya Parva, Chapter 26, Verse 51).

SUJAYASTHA. A woman who was the wife of Agnimitra and the father of Vasumitra. (Bhāgavata, Skandha 12).

SUKA I. (SUKADEVA). The son of Vyāsa.

1) Birth. The sage Vyāsa once wished to have a son. So he began to worship Siva for the purpose. His desire was to have a son who would combine in him the essential qualities of fire, earth, water, air and ether. He did tapas for a hundred years. Because of the austerity of his tapas, his locks of hair began to blaze like flames of fire. At last Siva appeared and blessed him to have a son according to his wish. After receiving his boon, Vyāsa returned to his āśrama. Soon after his arrival there, an Apsaras named Ghrātēci came there in the form of a parrot. On seeing her beauty Vyāsa had an involuntary emission of semen. Suka’s birth was from this semen. (For further details see Para 2, under Ghrātēci).

2) Sūka’s Boyhood. It was Siva who performed the Upānyasā (wearing the sacred thread) ceremony of Śuka. Since he was born out of the semen which was the result of the fascination for a parrot, the boy was named “Sūka”. He was a divine boy. Soon after his birth, he grew up into an exceptionally brilliant boy. He went to Brāhaspati and mastered all knowledge. After staying with Brāhaspati for some years, he returned to his father’s āśrama.

3) In Vyāsa’s hut. Vyāsa was very happy at the arrival of his son after completing his education. In due course he thought of getting his son married to a suitable girl and to prepare him for an ideal grhasṭāśrama. But Suka did not fall in with his father’s proposal. All the efforts of Vyāsa to persuade him were in vain. At last he told Suka that he was pleased with his stern resolve and allowed him to pursue his life as a Sannyāśi, if he wished for it.

From that time Sukadeva and Śūta, the disciple of Vyāsa began the study of Bhāgavata. But Suka did not find happiness in that study either. Vyāsa taught him spiritual philosophy. Even then Suka could not find mental satisfaction. So his father sent him to Mithilā. At that time there was none who equalled Janaka, the then King of Mithilā. Before sending him away, Vyāsa made his son promise that he would return to his āśrama, immediately after leaving Mithilā.

4) Sūka in Mithilā. Suka started his journey to Mithilā on foot. He passed through many lands and cities on his way. He visited many places inhabited by different classes of people like yogins, sages, mendicants, Vātikānasas, Śaktas, Pāṇḍavas, Sauras, Śivas, Vaiśāyas, etc. After taking two years to cross Mahāmeru and one year for crossing Himālaya he reached Mithilā. At the very sight of the land of Mithilā with its inhabitants living in luxury and prosperity, Sukadeva was filled with wonder.

One of the sentries at the palace gate who saw the dignified bearing and majestic figure of Suka, standing at the entrance, greeted him with joined palms and conducted him into the royal palace. From there, a minister took him to the interior of the palace, where a passage led him to a beautiful park full of flowering trees and swimming pools. After giving him a seat in the park the minister left the place. There, he was attended by women who were like celestial beauties. But Suka was not happy even in their company or attentions. He spent the whole night in deep meditation.

The next morning King Janaka visited Suka. After the exchange of customary greetings, Janaka enquired of him the object of his visit. Suka answered that he came there to learn from Janaka the way to salvation, as directed by his father.

On hearing this, Janaka said:—”After Upanayana, (investiture with the sacred thread) a Brāhmaṇa should study the Vedas. He should discharge his debts to the Devas and to his Piṭras by tapas, worship of the guru and Brahmacarya. After the study of the Vedas, after mastering the senses, he should give Gurudakṣina (fee to the teacher). Then the pupil may return home with the permission of the Guru (preceptor). After reaching home he should begin grhaṣṭāśrama. After the birth of children, he should follow Vānapraṣṭha-āśrama. In that āśrama, a Brāhmaṇa should kindle fire in his soul. He should then renounce the dual state, rise above all desire and remain in Brahmāśrama.”

After receiving Janaka’s advice, Suka returned to his father.

5) Domestic Life. Sukadeva married the beautiful Pīvari, daughter of the Piṭras and thus began his grhaṣṭāśrama in Vyāsa’s āśrama. He had four sons named Kṛṣṇa, Gauraprabha, Bhūri and Devaśruti and a daughter named Kirti, by Pīvari. Kirti was married by Aṇu, the son of King Vibhrāja. (Devi Bhāgavata, 1st Skandha).

6) Other details.

(i) Vyāsa composed Bhārata and taught it to Suka. (M.B. Chapter 1, Verse 104).

(ii) Sukadeva recited the Mahābhārata story containing 14 lakhs of stanzas to Gandharvas, Yaksas and Rakṣasas. (M.B. Adi Parva, Chapter 1, Verse 106; Svargaśo ṇa Parva, Chapter 5, Verse 55).

(iii) Sukadeva taught them the entire Vedas and the Mahābhārata story. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 63, Verse 89).

(iv) Suka attended Yudhīṣṭhīra’s assembly. (M.B. Sabhā Parva, Chapter 4, Verse 11).

7) The End. While Sukadeva was thus leading his family life, teaching the Veda and reading the Purāṇas, Nārada happened to pay a visit to him. His conversation with Nārada drew Sukadeva nearer to the path of Mokṣa. He left his father, Veda Vyāsa and his own family, went to the peak of Kailāsa and stayed there doing tapas to Paramaśiva. At last he became a perfect Siddha and rising up to the Heavens shone there as a second sun. Devasris began to praise Sukadeva.

His father Vyāsa was in deep grief at his disappearance and left his āśrama in search of Suka. After wandering in many places he came to Kailāsa where Suka had performed tapas and called him. Siva who saw him utterly tired and weak took pity on him and comforted him in the following words: “Did you not pray to me for a son who would combine in himself the essences of the Pāñcabhūtas? As a result of the tapas you have done and by my blessing, such a glorious son was born to you. Suka has attained the highest position which is inaccessible to those who have not conquered their senses and difficult to attain even by the gods. Why do you worry about Suka? The glory acquired by your eminent son will continue undiminished as long as the mountains and oceans exist. I give you my blessing that an image exactly like your son will always accompany you from today.” Just then, an image which closely resembled his son appeared before Vyāsa who was filled with rapture.

It is believed that even today if any one calls Siva at the place where Siva spoke to Vyāsa in answer to his call, Siva would respond to the call. (M.B. Śānti Parva, Chapters 332 and 333; Devī Bhāgavata, 1st Skandha).

SUKA II. A messenger of Rāvana. This Suka had a friend named Sāraṇa. These two persons were expert spies who used to gather secret and important pieces of information from the strongholds of Rāvana’s friends and enemies and passed them on to Rāvana.

Soon after Śrī Rāma entered Lāṅkā, Rāvana sent Suka and Sāraṇa to Śrī Rāma’s camp. After taking a distant view of the surroundings, they entered the camp of Śrī Rāma in the form of monkeys. Taking care not to come within the observation of Vibhiṣāna, they went about the military camps, gathering secret information. Just then they were met by Jāmbavān and Hanūmān. After closely observing them for a considerable time, they understood that they were enemy spies. The monkey-heroes promptly seized them and produced them before Sugrīva. Confused and frightened under a shower of questions they sought the protection of Śrī Rāma. While Śrī Rāma was interrogating them, Vibhiṣāna happened to come there. At his sight, Suka and Sāraṇa were alarmed. Grasping the whole situation in an instant, Vibhiṣāna kicked both of them when they assumed their former shapes as Rākṣasas. The monkey-leaders sprang at them. The Rākṣasas begged for pardon and prayed for Śrī Rāma’s protection. Śrī Rāma forgave them and set them free. (Vālmiki Rāma-yāna, Yuddha Kāṇḍa; Kamba Rāmāyaṇa, Yuddha Kāṇḍa).

SUKA III. A king of the Lunar dynasty. (Bhāgavata, 9th Skandha).

SUKA IV. A king of the Śaryāti dynasty. He was the son of Pṛṣata. He had conquered all countries in the world and after performing many yāgas, he renounced his kingdom and attained Mokṣa by doing tapas on Satadārga mountain. (Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Dāksīṇātya Pātha, Chapter 123).

SUKA V. Son of Subhala, king of Gāndhāra. He was slain by Irāvān in the course of the Bhārata Yuddha. (Mahābhārata, Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 90, Verse 26).

SUKA VI. Son of the monkey Sarabha. Rksa was the son of Suka by Vyāghri. (Brahmāṇḍa Purāṇa, 3, 8, 208).

SUKA VII. A Maharsi who was the contemporary of Anuha of Daksīṇa Pāñcēla and of king Brahmaddata. This sage lived before the time of the other Suka who was the son of Vyāsa.

This sage Suka had six sons, named Bhūrīravas, Śambhu, Prabhu, Kṛṣṇa, Saura (Sauraprabha) and Devasrutam by his two wives Pivāri and Ekaśārga. (Brahmāṇḍa Purāṇa, 3-8-93: Vāyu Purāṇa, 70-84; Devī Bhāgavata, 1-14; Nārada, 1-58).

SUKALĀ. A woman who loved and honoured her husband.

SUKAKSHA. A mountain. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Sabha Parva, Chapter 38, that this mountain, which is famous in the Purāṇas, stands on the western side of Dvārakā.

SUKAMALĀ. A Yākṣa. This Yākṣa was the son born to Manivara by Devajāni. (Brahmāṇḍa Purāṇa, 3, 7, 129).

SUKANĀBHĀ. A Rākṣasa on the side of Rāvana. (Vālmiki Rāma-yāna, Sundara Kāṇḍa, Sarga 6).

SUKANDAKA. A country in ancient India. (Mahābhārata Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 9, Verse 53).

SUKANYĀ I. The wife of the hermit Cyavana. See under Cyavana, Para 3.

SUKANYĀ II. The wife of the hermit Mātāriśvā. The hermit Maṅkaṇaka was the son born to Mātāriśvā by Sukanya. (See under Maṅkaṇaka).

SUKARA. A country celebrated in the Purāṇas. Kṛti, King of Sukara had presented thousands of Elephants at Yudhīṣṭhīra’s Rājasūya yāga. (M.B. Śabhā Parva, Chapter 52, Verse 25).

SUKARA. A hell. (See under Kāla, the section ‘Hell’).

SUKARAMUKHA. A hell. (See under Kāla, the section ‘Hell’).

SUKAMALĀ. One of the two followers given to Subrahmanya by Vidyātā. Suvrata was the other follower. (M.B. Śalya Parva, Chapter 45, Verse 42).

SUKARMA II. One of the teacher priests of Sāmaveda. This Sukarma, the son of Sutvā, divided the Sāmaveda into a thousand branches. (See under Guruparamparā).

SUKARMA III. A Brāhmaṇa who had earned merits of good deeds by serving his parents. (For further details see under Pippalāda 1).

SUKASANGITTI. A Gandharva. (For further details see under Pramohini).

SUKESA (SUKESI).

1) General information. A rākṣasa (giant) who was the son of Vidyutkeśa and Sālakaṭajīka. When Brahmā asked the Subjects to look after his creation those who said ‘Rākṣaṁahē’ became Rākṣasas (giants) and those who said ‘Yakṣāṁahē’, the Yakṣas (a clan of semi gods). Once two brothers named Hetī and Praḥeti were born. in the clan of Rākṣasas. Praheti remained unmarried and entered the life of penance. Heti married Bhayā the sister of Kāla. A son named Vidyutkeśa was born to the couple. Vidyutkeśa married Sālakatākaṇḍā, the daughter of Sandhyā. Sālakatākaṇḍā delivered a son. But wishing to enjoy the company of her husband, she abandoned the son and lived with her husband. The child which was as bright as the rising Sun, putting its folded fist in its mouth, cried aloud. Paramāśiva and Pārvatī who were travelling along the sky mounted on the bull, heard the cry of the infant and looked at the spot from which the cry arose. On seeing the infant, Pārvatī took pity on it. Sīva blessed the child, which instantly grew as old as its mother. Sīva gave the Rākṣasas prince immortality and a city which could travel through the sky. Pārvatī said that Rākṣasas women would, in future deliver the moment they became pregnant and that the child would grow equal to its mother in age, as soon as it was born. Sukēśa was the son of Vidyutkeśa and Sālakatākaṇḍā. Sukēśa was delighted at the boon he got, and travelled wherever he pleased, in his city. Sukēśa married Devavati the daughter of Grāmanī a Gandharva. Mālī, Sumālī and Mālayāvān were the sons of this couple. (Uttara Rāmāyāṇa).

2) The city of Sukēsa fall on the ground. Sukēsa pleased Sīva by penance. Sīva made him invincible and gave him a city which travelled through the sky. Because of these boons, the Rākṣasas became righteous and pious. He lived in the city with other Rākṣasas. Once Sukēsa went to the forest Māgadhā and visited the hermits there. He asked them about the means to attain prosperity in this world and the other worlds. The hermits gave him long exhortations. They told him about the various hells given to sinners. Thus Sukēsa became righteous-minded and saintly. He returned to his city and called together all the other Rākṣasas and spoke to them about what he had learned from the hermits. He said: “The hermits taught me the means to attain heaven. They are Non-killing, Truth, non-stealing, cleanliness, control of all outward going energies, liberality, kindness, forgiveness, abstinence, good usages etc. So it is my order that all of you observe these good things.” The Rākṣasas were pleased at the words of Sukēsa. They began to lead a righteous life. In this way they got wealth and prosperity. Their radiance increased to such an extent that the Sun and the moon and the stars found it difficult to continue their travels. Thus the city of the Rākṣasas shone as the sun in the day and as the moon in the night. The progress of the Sun in the day became indiscernible. Due to its brightness the Rākṣasas city seemed to be the moon and thinking that it was night, the lotus flowers folded in the day and bloomed in the night. Havoc was caused in the earth as well as in the world of the gods. The sun became unpopular. So he tried to find out the cause. At last he found out the cause. He became angry. He looked with fury at the city of the Rākṣasas. Hit by the look, the city lost its merits and began to sink down to the earth.

When the city fell down Sukēsa called Sīva and cried aloud. Sīva looked round to see what happened to his devotee. He understood that the sun was the culprit. Sīva looked at the sun with furious eyes. Instantly the sun was dropped from the Solar region to the air. The hermits saw the Sun coming slowly to the earth. They called out loudly. “If you want to well in falling, go and fall in Hariśketra.” The sun called out, “What is Hariśketra?” “Hariśketra is Vāraṇasi from Yuga‘ayi to Keśavārdaṇā”, the hermits replied. Hearing this the Sun fell in Vāraṇasi. Then to lessen the heat the sun dipped and splashed in Asī tirtha and Varuṇa tirtha.

Brahmā knew this, and informed Sīva of it. Sīva came to Vāraṇasi and took the sun by his hands and gave him the name ‘Lōla’ and sent him back in the chariot. After that Brahmā went to Sukēsa and sent his city with the Rākṣasas in it, back to the sky, and the Sun was fixed in the sky as before. (Vāmana Purāṇa, Chapter 15)

SUKI I (SUKESA). See under Sukēsa.

SUKI II. The daughter of the king of Gandhāra. This Sukēsa was the wife of Śrī Kṛṣṇa. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Sabhā Parva, Chapter 38 that Śrī Kṛṣṇa gave her a palace, the doors of which shone as the gold of Jambūnāda.

SUKI III. A celestial maid of Alakāpuri. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Anuśasana Parva, Chapter 19, Verse 45, that she performed a dance in honour of the visit of Aśtāvakra, in the palace of Kubera.

SUKI IV. The daughter of Ketuvīrya the king of Magadhā. She was married to Marutta (the third). (Markandeya Purāṇa, 128).

SUKEśA. A king of the Bhṛgu family. He was the son of Sūnīta and the father of Dharmaketu. (Bhāgavata, Skandha 9).

SUKETANA. A king of the Bhṛgu family. He was the son of Sūnīta and the father of Dharmaketu. (Bhāgavata, Skandha 9).

SUKETU I. A king of the Solar dynasty. It is stated in Bhāgavata, Skandha 9 that this king was the son of Nandivardhana and the father of Devarāta.

SUKETU II. A king of the Pūru dynasty. He became famous under the name Viratha. He was one of the five sons of Bharata. The five sons were Suhotra, Suhotā, Gayā, Garbha and Suketu. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 278).

SUKETU III. A king of ancient India. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Adī Parva, Chapter 185, Verse 9, that this Suketu and his son Sūnīmā were present at the Śvayamivara marriage of Draupadi.

SUKETU IV. A son of Śūpāla. He was killed in the battle of Bhārata by Droṇa. (M.B. Karṇa Parva, Chapter 6, Verse 33).

SUKETU V. A mighty king who stood on the side of the Pāṇḍavas and fought against the Kauravas in the Bhārata-battle. This king who was the son of Citraketu, was killed by the arrow of the teacher Krpa. (M.B. Karṇa Parva, Chapter 54, Verse 21).

SUKETU VI. The father of Tātākā. It is stated in Kamba Rāmāyāṇa, Bālākanda, that this Suketu was the son of the Gandharva King Surākṣaka. (See under Tātākā for further details).

SUK. A daughter of Kaśyapa Prajāpati. Five daughters named Krauvaci, Bhāsi, Śyenī, Dītrāṣṭri and Sukī were born to Kaśyapa by his wife Tāmārā. Krauvaci gave birth to owls. Bhāsas were born to Bhāsi and eagles and kites were born to Śyenī. Dītrāṣṭri gave birth to swans and Cakravākas. Sukī gave birth to Nāṇa and Vīnaṇa was the daughter of Nāṇa. (Vālmiki Rāmāyāṇa, Aranyakāṇḍa, Sarga 14).

SUKEśA. A warrior who fought on the side of the Pāṇḍavas. He was a native of Pāṇeśa country.
Mahābhārata, Kārṇa Parva, Chapter 36, Verse 45, mentions that he was slain by Kārṇa during the Bhārata battle.

SUKRA (SUKRĀCĀRYA) I. Preceptor of the Asuras.

1) Birth. Views differ as to whether Sukra was the son or grandson of Bhṛgu. The Purāṇas state that Pulomā was the wife of Bhṛgu. Sukra has another name, Kāvya. Kāvya means the son of Kavi. Some authorities say that Kavi was Bhṛgu's son, while others think that Kavi was Bhṛgu himself. Sukra's mother is referred to as "Kāvyaṃatā" in many places. Sukra is referred to as the strongest of the seven sons born to Bhṛgu and Pulomā. In the light of these references it is reasonable to consider Sukra as the son of the sage Bhṛgu. "Kavi" must be supposed to be another name of Bhṛgu. Usanas was another name for Sukra.

2) Love Story. Once the sage Bhṛgu lived in the valley of Mandara mountain, performing austere tapas. Sukra who was then a boy, used to attend on his father. One day when Bhṛgu was absorbed in "Nirvikalpasāmādhi" (deep meditation) the lonely Sukra was appreciating the beauty of the sky above him. There was no one else by his side. At that time he happened to see an exceptionally beautiful Apsāra woman passing across the sky. His heart was filled with delight at the sight. All his thoughts were centred on her and he sat absorbed in her bewitching charm. In his imagination he followed Indra and reached Indraloka. Indra greeted him with honour. After that Sukra, attended by the heavenly beings went about sight-seeing in Heaven. There he unexpectedly came across the Apsāra beauty whom he had seen earlier, in the midst of several other women. They fell in love at first sight. To fulfil his desire Sukra enveloped the whole place in darkness. The other women left the place. The apsāra beauty approached Sukra and both of them entered a hut formed by the thick foliage of creeping plants and indulged in sensual pleasures. Since Sukra spent a period of eight Caturyugas like this in her company, he became weak in his virtue and descended to the earth. Then he became conscious of his physical being. His depraved soul was stopped at the moon. It reached the earth through mist and grew up as paddy plants. A Brāhmaṇa who was a native of Daśārāṇa land ate the rice which was cooked from the ears of those paddy plants. Sukra's soul in the shape of Sukra entered the womb of the Brāhmaṇa's wife and in due course took his birth. Because of his close association with Munis, that boy grew up like a sage and spent a period of one Manvantara, leading an austere life in the valley of the Meru mountain. At that time his Apsāra woman had been born as a female deer, as the result of a curse. By their connection in the previous birth, the Brāhmaṇa fell in love with that female deer and begot a human child by his union with her. With that the austerities of his life were at an end. All his thoughts were now directed towards the future glory of his son and he ignored even his spiritual duties. Not long after, he died of snake bite. Later, he was born as the son of the king of Madra and ruled the country for many years. After that he took birth in many other wombs and at last was born as the son of a Mahārasi living on the bank of the river Gaṅgā. Sukra's body which was by the side of Bhṛgu dropped to the earth after being exposed to the wind and sun for a long time. But owing to Bhṛgu's power of tapas and the holiness of the āśrama, birds and animals did not eat the body. After 1,000 divyavatāras, sage Bhṛgu opened his eyes from his samādhi but he did not find his son near him. A famished and worn out body was lying before him. Within the wrinkles of the skin, small birds were nesting and frogs took refuge in the hollow of the stomach. Enraged at the premature death of his son, he was about to curse Yama, the god of Death. Coming to know of this Dharmaśāya (Yama) appeared before him and said:— "We honour and adore you as a great tapasī. You should not ruin your tapas, I have devoted numerous Brahmāndas. I have already swallowed Rudras and Viṣṇudevas many times. All of you are my food. It is ordained by Fate. Even Brahmā is not indestructible at the end of a Kalpa. Knowing all these facts, why do you think of cursing me? Your son fell into this state because of his own act. While you were in a state of Samādhi your son's mind left its body and went up to Heaven. There he spent many years indulging in sensual pleasures in the company of the celestial beauty Viṣṇu. Then he was born as a Brāhmaṇa in Daśārāṇa country. In his next birth he became the King of Kosalā. After that passing through many births in succession he is now performing tapas on the bank of the river Samaṅgā as the son of a Brāhmaṇa, under the name, Viṣṇudeva. Open your inner eye and see for yourself."

After saying this Dharmaśāya revived the body of Sukra who rose up and did obeisance to his father. (Jñāna-vāśīṣṭha, Sthitiprakaraṇam).

3) Domestic Life. It is seen that Sukra had several wives and children. In Devī Bhāgavata there is a story of Jayanti, daughter of Indra who was Sukra's wife for about ten years. (See under Jayanti II). Priyavrata, the brother of Uttānapāda had a daughter named Uṛjjasvati by his wife Surūpā. In Devī Bhāgavata, 8th Skandha it is stated that Sukraćārya married Uṛjjasvati and he had a daughter Devayāni by her. Mahābhārata, Adi Parva, Chapter 65 mentions that Sukra was the acārya (preceptor) of the Asuras and his four sons were the priests of the Asuras. Sukra had a daughter named "Arā". (See under Arā). Besides, Sukra had another wife named Sataparvā.

But no child was born to Sataparvā. Devī, wife of Varuṇa's elder brother, was a daughter of Sukra. Uṛjjasvati was the most famous among Sukra's wives.

4) Reived his mother. See under Kāvyaṃatā.

5) Jāmadagni was restored to life. See the 8th para under Jāmadagni.

6) Sukra cursed Daṇḍa. See under Arā.

7) Cursed Yayāti. See the 4th Para under Devayāni.

8) How Sukra lost his eye. Sukraćārya lost one of his eyes during the time of Mahābali, the Asura King. Mahāviṣṇu incarnated as Vāmanā and begged three feet of earth from Mahābali. Since Sukra tried to obstruct it, Viṣṇu put out one of Sukra's eyes with the point of a darbha grass. (For more details see 3rd Para under Mahābali).

9) Siva swallowed Sukra. Once Sukra invaded Kubera and plundered all his wealth. The distressed Kubera informed Siva about it. Siva at once started up with his weapon, shouting "Where is he?" Sukra appeared on the top of Siva's trident. Siva caught hold of him and swallowed him. Sukra who moved about in Siva's stomach found the excessive heat there, unbearable and soon became exhausted. In his helpless state he began to worship Siva for his mercy. At last Siva permitted him to escape through his penis and Sukra thus came out. (M.B. Sānti Parva, Chapter 290).

10) Other details.

(i) Once Sukrācārya had adorned the office of Education Minister of Mahiṣāsura. At that time Cikṣura was the War Minister, Tāmra was Finance Minister, Asiloma was the Prime Minister, Viḍāla was the Foreign Minister, Udarka was the Military Commander and Sukra was the Education Minister. (Devī Bhāgavata, 5th Skandha).

(ii) Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 51 states that Sukra should be installed in temples with his Kamaṇḍalu (a vessel for carrying water) and wearing his garland.

(iii) At the time of the war between Devas and Asuras, Sukra taught Surasā a mantra to destroy everything. (Skanda Purāṇa, Asura Kāṇḍa).

(iv) Sukra was Prahlāda’s Guru (preceptor). (Kamba Rāmāyaṇa, Yuddha Parva, Chapter 11, Verse 62).

(v) Sukra had prohibited drinking. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 76, Verse 57).

(vi) He had shot in Indra’s assembly. (M.B. Chapter 7, Verse 22, Sābhā Parva).

(vii) Sukra exists in Brahmā’s assembly in the form of a planet. (M.B. Sābhā Parva, Chapter 11, Verse 29).

(viii) Sukra resides with other Asuras on the top of the Meru mountain. All precious stones are in the possession of Sukra. Even Kubera (the god of wealth) lives by borrowing one-fourth of Sukra’s wealth. (M.B. Bhiṣma Parva, Chapter 6, Verse 22).

(x) Sukra was among those who visited Bhuṣma as he lay on the bed of arrows. (M.B. Sānti Parva, Chapter 47, Verse 8).

(xi) Once Sukrācārya was the priest of Emperor Pṛthu. (M.B. Sānti Parva, Chapter 59, Verse 110).

(xii) On another occasion Sukra sent Indra to Prahlāda to obtain prosperity. (M.B. Sānti Parva, Chapter 124, Verse 27).

(xiii) By his power of Yoga Sukra once grabbed all the wealth of Kubera. (M.B. Sānti Parva, Chapter 289, Verse 9).

(xiv) He got the name “Sukra” because he came out through “Śivaliṅgā” (Siva’s penis) and thereby became a son of Pārvatī. (M.B. Sānti Parva, Chapter 289, Verse 32).

(xv) Sukra learnt Śiva’s Sahasranāma (Thousand names) from the sage Taṇḍi and taught it to Gautama. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 17, Verse 177).

(xvi) Mahābhārata, Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 85, Verse 129, mentions that Bṛhgu had seven sons-Cyavana, Vajrāśīra, Sucī, Auvra, Sukra, Savana and Vībhu. (xvii) Once in answer to a question of Mahābali, Sukra referred to the importance of Puṣpadāna (gift of flowers). (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 98).

(xviii) In his old age Sukra observed Vānaprastha and attained Heaven. (M.B. Sānti Parva, Chapter 244, Verse 17).

(xix) In Mahābhārata, several other names like Bhrāgava, Bhrāgavādyāda, Bhṛgusreṣṭha, Bhṛgūdvāha, Bhṛgukulodvaha, Kaviputra, Kāśya and Uśanas are given for Sukra.

SUKRA II. A son of Vasiṣṭha. Seven sons were born to Vasiṣṭha by his wife Urjā; they were, Kajas, Gotra, Urḍhvaśāhu, Savana, Anagha, Sutapas and Sukra. All these seven persons were the Saptarṣis of the third Manvantaram (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Part 1, Chapter 10).

In Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 20 the names of the seven sons of Vasiṣṭha and Urjā are given as Rajas, Gātra, Urḍhvaśāhu, Savana, Alaghu, Sukra and Sutapas.

SUKRA III. A king who belonged to the dynasty of Emperor Pṛthu. Two sons, Antardhāna and Vādi were born to Pṛthu. Antardhāna had a son named Havirdhāna by wife Sikhaṇḍini. Havirdhāna married Dihiṣāṇa who was born in Aṅgikula. Six sons were born to them. They were, Pracīnabharis, Sukra, Gaya, Kṛṣṇa, Vraja and Ajina. (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Part 1, Chapter 14).

SUKRATU. A king in ancient India. When once Saṁjaya talked in praise of the ancient Kings of fame in India, this King Sukratau also was mentioned. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 1, 235).

SUKRṢA. A liberal hermit. A story about this hermit occurs in Māraṇḍeya Purāṇa.

Once Indra wanted to test Sukṛṣa. So he came in the guise of a bird and requested for human flesh. Then the hermit called his sons and asked them to give their flesh to the bird. They were not prepared to do so. Sukṛṣa got angry and cursed his sons that they would be born as birds. Accordingly the sons of the hermit took birth in the Garuda family under the names Dronaḥputra, Pinākāsa, Vibodha, Supta and Sumukha. As a remission of the curse, the hermit said that even as birds they would be having wisdom and knowledge. After this, to keep his word, Sukṛṣa got ready to cut his own flesh for the bird. Then Indra appeared in his own form and blessed the hermit.

SUKṢAṬRA. A heroic warrior who fought in the Kurukṣetra on the side of the Pāḍavas. He was the son of the King of Kosala. (M.B. Drona Parva, Chapter 23, Verse 57).

SUKṢMA. A notorious Dānava, who was born to Prajāpati Kaśyapa by his wife Danu. The King Jayaḍratha, was the rebirth of this Dānava. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 67, Verse 18).

SUKṢMAPRAKRTI. The cause which is indestructible, not clear and having always goodness as its form is Sukṣmaprakṛti. That unspeakable nature has no base. Sukṣmaprakṛti is immovable and indestructible. There is no sound or form or touch in it. This nature which has no beginning or end, which has only three attributes is the root cause of the universe. This entire universe was pervaded by this power from the beginning of the great deluge to the beginning of creation. Then there was no night or day, no earth or Sky, no light or darkness. Then there was only Brahman the union of Prakṛti and Puruṣa which could not be perceived by sense organs or intelligence. (See under Prakṛti).

SUKṢMAṢAṚIRA. See under Punarjanma.

SUKṬIMĀN. A mountain which was subdued by Bhīmasena in the course of his conquest of the eastern country. (M.B. Sābhā Parva, Chapter 30, Verse 5).

SUKṬIMATI I. A river which used to flow by the side of Uparicaravasu’s capital city. There is a story about this river. Once the Kolāhala mountain fell in love with this river and kept it within himself. Uparicaravasu who came to know of this, gave a kick to the mountain. The kick produced a hole in the mountain and the river emerged through that hole. Sukumati had a son and a daughter by Kolihala mountain. The river presented them to the King. The King appointed the son as his military commander. Girikā, the daughter of the river became the King's wife. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 63, Verse 34).

SUKTIMITI II. The capital city of Dhūṣṭaketu, King of Cedi. (Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 22, Verse 50).

SUKUMĀRĀ I. A Pulinda King. The name of the capital of this King was also Sukumārā. It is stated in Mahābhārata, Sabhā Parva, Chapter 29, Verse 10, that King Sukumārā was the son of King Sumitra. It is stated in some other Purāṇas that Suciṭra was the father of Sukumārā and that during his regional conquest of the east Bhīmasena had defeated both. On another occasion Sahadeva, who had gone for the regional conquest of the south, also defeated both Sukumārā and his father. (M.B. Sabhā Parva, Chapter 31, Verse 4).

When the battle of Bāhrāta was about to begin, Sukumārā, the King of Pulinda joined the side of the Pāṇḍavas. It is stated in Mahābhārata, Udyoga Parva, Chapter 171, Verse 15, that King Sukumārā became one of the prominent chariot-fighters of the Pāṇḍava army.

SUKUMĀRĀ II. A nāga (serpent) who was born in the family of Taksaka. This serpent was burnt to death in the sacrificial fire of Janamejaya. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 57, Verse 9).

SUKUMĀRĀ III. A King of the Puru dynasty. The father of this King was Vībhu, the son of Varsaketa. Two sons named Anarta and Sukumārā were born to Vībhu. The King Satyaketa was the son of Sukumārā. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 278).

SUKUMĀRĀ IV. A Sanskrit poet. There is a story about the devotion of Sukumārā to his teacher. Though Sukumārā was a dutiful student his teacher used to scold him always. Consequently Sukumārā harboured malice in his heart against his teacher. One night Sukumārā got on the upper attic of the house of the teacher with a big stone. His aim was to drop the stone on the head of the teacher. But that night the conversation of the teacher and his wife was about Sukumārā. The wife asked the teacher why he was scolding his disciple so often, when he was so dutiful and righteous. The teacher said that he loved him most and that the chastisement was meant to make him better and better. When Sukumārā heard this his heart was broken. With tears in his eyes, he got down with the stone and disappeared in darkness.

Next morning Sukumārā had no peace of mind. He approached the teacher. He asked the teacher "What is the punishment destined for him who had tried to kill his teacher?" The teacher replied that he should die a slow death in the fire made by the husk of paddy. Instantly Sukumārā made a pit and stood in it and filled the pit with husk up to his neck and set fire to the pile. When the teacher knew that the culprit was Sukumārā, he was filled with grief. He tried his best to dissuade his beloved disciple from his attempt. But it was in vain. While he was slowly burning in the fire he composed and sang the great poem 'Śrī Kṛṣṇa Vilāsa'. The poet was not able to complete the twelfth Sarga of Śrī Kṛṣṇa Vilāsa.

The sixty-sixth stanza was the last one he sang. Śrī Kṛṣṇa was showing Satyabhāmā, the various countries and describing the prominence of each, when they had reached the earth after obtaining the Pārījāta flowers from the world of the gods. After having described the kingdoms of Pāṇḍya and Cola, the poet was beginning to describe the natural beauty of 'Saptakośa' (the seven Kośa countries). The story says that when he had sung the last line of that stanza his tongue was burnt and he could not proceed with the rest of the poem.

SUKUMĀRĀ V. The son of King Bhavya who was the ruler of Śāka Island. (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 12, Verse 26).

SUKUMĀRĀ VI. An ancient place. This place was near the mountain Jaladhārāgiri in the Śāka Island. (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 11, Stanza 21).

SUKUMĀRĀ VII. The capital city of the Pulindas. (See under Sukumārā III).

SUKUMĀRĪ I. A river in the Śāka Island. This river is famous in the Purāṇas. (Mahābhārata, Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 11, Verse 3).

SUKUMĀRĪ II. Daughter of King Sṛpjaya. This Sukumārī was a wife of Nārada. (See under Parvarta, Parā 2).

SUKUNDALA. One of the hundred sons of Dhrītarāṣṭra. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 67, Verse 98).

SUKUSUMĀ. A female attendant of Subrahmaṇya. (M.B. Śalya Parva, Chapter 46, Verse 24).

SUKUṬA. An ancient country in India, very famous in the Purāṇas. The people of this country were called the Sukūtas. (M.B. Sabhā Parva, Chapter 14, Verse 16).

SULABHĀ. A female ascetic (Sannyāsīni). She acquired several powers (Siddhis) by tapas. She had the power of giving up her body and receiving new bodies. Once she went to Mithilā and held a learned discussion with King Janaka. She went to Mithilā as a beggar woman. By her yogic powers she entered the mind of Janaka. She and Janaka were thus in the same body when they carried on the discussion. After remaining in Janaka’s body for a day, she left the palace. (M.B. Śānti Parva, Chapter 320).

She detected Damayantī conversing with the brahmin named Subhā, who came to Cedi in search of the latter and reported about their meeting to the queen mother. The name of the father of Sunandā and Subhā was Virabāhu. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapters 63, 68 and 69).

SUNARTAKA NĀȚA. The name Śiva assumed when he appeared before Pārvatī, in disguise. Pārvatī was engaged in tapas then. (Śiva-Stotraśataka, 34).

SUNĀSSAKHA. Indra. Once Indra disguised himself as a Sannyāsī and travelled in the company of a dog. At that time, he made an attempt to steal lotus flower from Brahmasaras in Kauśīkī tirtha. Indra struck down at a single blow, Yātudhānī, the woman guard of the saras, who opposed him. From this time when Indra went about in the company of the dog, he got the name “Sunassakha”. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 94).

SUNASŚEPHA (DEVARĀTA). The story of a Brāhma youth who was to be offered as human sacrifice and who was saved by Vīśvāmitra, is famous in the Purāṇas. The name of the Brāhma youth was Sunasśepha. But even in the Purāṇas there are two versions of this story. In one of them, Sunasśepha is referred to as the son of Rciikamuni. In the other, it was Hariścandra who performed the yāga and Sunasśepha who was brought for sacrifice, was the son of a Brāhma named Ajīgarta. After Vīśvāmitra saved the boy, he got another name, “Devarāta”. (For details of the two versions, see under Ambarīṣa and the 4th Para under Vīśvāmitra).

Sunasśepha later became a Mahārṣi. He composed Rgveda, 1st Manḍala, 1st Aṣṭaka. Besides in Rgveda, 1st Manḍala, 6th Anuvāka, 30th Sūkta it is stated that Indra had given a golden chariot to Sunasśepha.

SUNAYA II. A region famous in the Purāṇas. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 9, Verse 64).

SUNDA. An asura. He had a brother named Upasunda, and their father was Niśumbha alias Jharjha. Sunda and Upasunda were very cruel asuras. The two brothers performed tapas on the Vindhyā mountain with the object of conquering the three worlds. All attempts made by Devas to break up their penance failed and ultimately Brahmā appeared before them. They secured from Brahmā a boon to the effect that they would not be killed by anyone else but only mutually by them. Swollen-headed by the boon the brothers conquered the three worlds and none could kill them. Ultimately the Devas sent Tilottamā, the celestial damsel to them and she made them quarrel with each other. Both of them who fell in love with Tilottamā and wanted her as wife fought with each other and got killed. (Adī Parva, Chapter 221, Verse 19). For details see under Upasunda and Tāṣṭakā.

SUPRATIṢṬHĀ. A female attendant of Subrahmaṇya. (Salāya Parva, Chapter 46, Verse 29).

SUPRAVRDHDA. A prince of Sauvira. He walked behind King Jayadrathā who came to abduct Pāṇiḍali, carrying the standard of the King. He was killed in battle by Arjuna. (Vana Parva, Chapter 271, Verse 27).

SUPRAYOGĀ. A river in India famous in the Purāṇas. This sacred river is considered to be the source of Agni (fire). (Vana Parva, Chapter 222, Verse 25).

SUPTAGHNA. One of the seven sons of Mālyavān the Rākṣasa, by his wife Sundari. (See under Sundari, Mālyavān and Māli).
SUPUṆJIKA. Son of Vipracitti by Sinhikā. He was killed by Paraśurāma. (Brahmāṇḍa Purāṇa, 3.6. 13-12).

SUPUṆYA. A river in India famous in the Purāṇas. (Bhūṣṇa Parva, Chapter 221, Verse 9).

ŚURA I. A King of the Lunar dynasty. He was the son of Viḍūratha and father of Śiṁ. (Bhāgavata, 9th Skandha).

ŚURA II. A son of Kārttavirya. Of the hundred sons of Kārttavirya, the most important were, Śūra, Śūrasena, Dhiṣṭa, Madhu and Jayadhvaja. (Brahmāṇḍa Purāṇa, Chapter 46).

ŚURA III. A King in ancient India. (Mahābhārata, Adi Parva, Chapter 1, Verse 232).

ŚURA IV. A son of the King named Iñna by his wife Rathantarī. This Śūra had four brothers named Duṣanta, Bhīma, Pravasu and Vasu. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 94, Verse 17).

ŚURA V. A prince of Sauvīra land. (Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 265, Verse 10). This Śūra was slain by Arjuna at the time of Draupadi's marriage. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 291, Verse 27).

ŚURA VI. A Yādava King. He was the father of Vasudeva and grandfather of Śrī Kṛṣṇa. By his first wife, Māriśa, he had ten sons and four daughters. The sons were, Vasudeva, Devabhāga, Devasravas, Anaka, Śrījaya, Saṃamaka, Kaṁka, Śaṁika, Vatsaka and Vṛka. The names of the daughters were, Prthī, Śrutadeva (Śrutaveda), Śrutāśravā and Rājādhidevi. The eldest of these, Prthī, was given as an adopted daughter to Kuntibhoja. (Harivarṣa, 2-34; 17-28; M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 43; Verse 3. Chapter 104, Verse 1; Bhāgavata, 9th Skandha). In Vāyu Purāṇa it is stated that he had three more wives besides Māriśa, and from them Devas and mortals were born. (See under Śūrasena I).

ŚURA VII. Father of Daśaratha's wife, Sumitrā. He was invited to the Putrakāmeṣṭi Yāga performed by Daśaratha. (Vālmiki Rāmāyana, Bāla Kāṇḍa, Sarga 13, Verse 26).

SURABHI. The cow of the Devas. (For details see under Kāmadhenu and Saurabhī).

SURABHI I. A cow born from the 'Huṅkāra' (the sound 'hum') of Brahmā. As the cow grew up, milk began dripping down on earth from its udder and gradually it formed into the Kṣirasāgara (ocean of milk). Four daughters, Surūpā, Harīśkika, Subhādṛā and Sarvakāmadhuk were born to Surabhi and they are considered to be protectors of the four regions. Surabhi lives in the seventh world beneath the earth i.e. Rasātala. (Udyoga Parva, Chapter 100).

SURABHI MĀN. An Agni (fire). (Vana Parva, Chapter 221, Verse 18).

SURABHIPATṬANA. An urban area of olden days in South India. During the Mahābhārata days Sahadeva deputed an envoy to this place and brought it under his control. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 31, Verse 68).

SURABHU. A sister of Kaṁsa. Ugrasena, the Yādava King had 80 sons including Karisa and five daughters Kamsā, Māriśa, Kaṁka, Surabhu and Rāstrapālīka. (Bhāgavata, Skandha 9).

SURĀDEVĪ (VĀRUṆI). A daughter of Varuna born of Devī, his brother's wife. She was the apple of the eye to the Devas. She is the presiding Devatā over liquor. She lives in the court of Brahmā worshipping him. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 11, Verse 42; Ādi Parva, Chapter 18, Verse 35 and Chapter 66, Verse 52).

SURAHANTĀ. A son of Tapā, the Pāñcchajanyāgni who is one of the Agnis who cause hindrances to Yajñas. (Vana Parva, Chapter 220, Verse 13).

SURAJA. An asura brought by Kāśya-prajāpati by his wife Pradhā. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 65, Verse 50). Surajā gave a dance performance at the birthday celebrations of Arjuna. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 122, Verse 63).

SURAKSAKA. A Gandharva King. He was the grand-father of Tātakā (See under Tātakā).

SCRAPADMA. An asura hero. This asura invadedDevakota with a huge army. Skanda Purāṇa mentions that in the battle that followed, Indra, who was defeated, fled to the place called Śiyāli in Tanjore District in South India and did tapas to Siva.

SURAPRAVIRA. Son of Tapā, the Pāñcchajanyāgni, one of the Agnis which cause hindrances to yajñas. (Vana Parva, Chapter 220, Verse 13).

SURĀI. A King in ancient India. He was invited by the Pāṇḍavas to participate in the great war. (Udyoga Parva, Chapter 4, Verse 15).

SURĀSA I. Mother of nāgas (serpents).

1) Birth. Ten daughters were born to Kāsyapaprajāpati by his wife Krodhavāsī, daughter of Dakṣa including Surāsa. From Surāsa were born all the nāgas. (Vālmiki Rāmāyaṇa, Aranyakaṇḍa, Canto 14). Nāgas and Uragas are two sects of serpents. From Surāsa were born Nāgas and from Kradrū, Uragas. (Vālmiki Rāmāyaṇa, Aranyakaṇḍa, Canto 14, Verse 28).

2) Obstructed the passage of Hanūmān. To test whether Hanūmān, who jumped into Lāṅkā to seek out Sītā, possessed power enough for the purpose, Devagandharvas backoned Surāsa to them and told her as follows: "You mother of nāgas, do please assume a terrible form like a big mountain and appear before Hanūmān and obstruct his passage. As soon as she heard the injunction, she jumped before Hanūmān and attempted to devour him. In spite of Hanūmān's earnest pleadings she stood before him with her mouth opened wide. Hanūmān then, by his power of illusion, grew ten yojanas in size. Then Surāsa opened her mouth twenty yojanas wide. Hanūmān then grew thirty yojanas in size and Surāsa opened her mouth forty yojanas wide. In this competition ultimately when Surāsa opened her mouth hundred yojanas wide, Hanūmān reduced his size to that of a finger, entered Surāsa's mouth and came out through her ear. Surāsa was pleased and blessed Hanūmān. (Vālmiki Rāmāyaṇa, Sundara Kāṇḍa, Canto 1).

3) Other information.

(i) Surāsa lives in the court of Brahmā worshipping him. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 11, Verse 39).

(ii) Rohini, mother of Balabhadrarāma, was an incarnation of Surāsa. (Devi Bhāgavata, Skandha 4).

SURĀSA II. A deva woman who danced at the birthday celebration of Arjuna. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 222, Verse 63).

SURĀSENA I. A King of Yaduvānīśa.

1) General. Śūrasena's kingdom was Mathurāpurī. This country was originally ruled by Kings of the Solar... dynasty. Devi Bhāgavata, 4th Skandha explains how the Yādava Kings came to rule over Mathurā. There was a region called Madhuvanam in the Kālindī river valley. Madhu, the Asura, who lived in Madhuvanam had a son named Lavaṇa. Lavaṇa who was a tyrant and an oppressor of the gods, was killed by Satrughna who established his rule there. In course of time, the place came to be known as “Madhurā”. After Satrughna's time his two sons ruled over the country. Thus the Solar dynasty came to an end and Mathurā purī came under the rule of Yadus. The first King of Yaduvāniśa was Sūrasena. Vasudeva, father of Śrī Kṛṣṇa was the son of this Sūrasena. After the death of his father, since Vasudeva took up the occupation of tending cows, Ugrasena became King there. Kāṭiva was the son of this Ugrasena.

2. Other details.

(i) Sūrasena's daughter Kuntī was adopted and brought up by the king named Kuntibhoja. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Refer Chapters 67, 109 and 110).

(ii) Devamīđha, father of Sūrasena had another name, “Citrraratha”. (M. B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 147, Verse 29).

ŚURASENA II. A son of Kārttavīrya. In Brahmāṇḍa Purāṇa, Chapter 86, it is mentioned that this Sūrasena killed Jamadagni. (See under Śura II)

ŚURASENA III. “Sūrasena was the old name for the region now known as Mathurāmāndala or Vrajamāndala. The natives of this place were called “Sūrasenas”. The following pieces of information are given about the Sūrasenas in the Mahābhārata :

(i) The Sūrasenas who were afraid of Jarāsandha, fled to the southern lands. (M.B. Bhāṣa Parva, Chapter 14, Verse 26).

(ii) In the course of his southern campaign, Sahadeva conquered the Sūrasenas. (M.B. Bhāṣa Parva, Chapter 31, Verse 1).

(iii) The Sūrasenas offered presents at Yudhiṣṭhira's Rājasūya. (M.B. Bhāṣa Parva, Chapter 52, Verse 13).

(iv) It was between the two countries, South Yākṛlo-mam and Sūrasenam that the Pāṇḍavas travelled from the land of Pāṇcāla to Matsuṣya-da. (M.B. Vīrā Parva Chapter 5, Verse 4).

(v) Sūrasenas were the body-guards of Bhīṣma during the Bhārata Yuddha. (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 18, Verse 12).

(vi) The Sūrasena forces once stopped Arjuna on the way. (M.B. Drona Parva, Chapter 91, Verse 37).

(vii) Sūrasena attacked Arjuna and Sātyaki in Bhārata battle. (M.B. Drona Parva, Chapter 141, Verse 9).

(viii) Yudhiṣṭhira soaked the earth with blood by killing the Sūrasenas at Kurukṣetra. (M.B. Drona Parva Chapter 157, Verse 29).

(ix) Bhīmasenā butchered the Kṣatriyas of Sūrasena by hundreds. (M.B. Drona Parva, Chapter 169, Verse 4).

(x) Kṛpācārya, Kṛtavarmā and Śakuni from the Pāṇḍava side fought against the Sūrasenas. (M.B. Karna Parva, Chapter 47, Verse 16).

ŚURASENA IV. A king who fought against the Pāṇḍavas from the Kaurava side in the Bhārata Yuddha. He stood by Duryodhana in the “Krauṇcavyūha” formed by Bhīṣma. (M. B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 75 Verse 18).

ŚURASENA V. A king of the Somavānsa of Pratīṣṭhānapura. Sūrasena, who was childless, tried to propitiate the gods in many ways to obtain a son. In the end he got a son in the form of a serpent. But to keep it a secret, he performed the usual ceremonies connected with his son's Upanayana, marriage etc. in the usual manner. At last by the mercy of Gautamidevi Sūrasena's son obtained human form. (Brahmāṇḍa Purāṇa, 111).

ŚURASENAPURA. The city of Mathurā.

ŚURASENI. Wife of Pravīra, the son of King Puru. A son named Manasyu was born to Pravīra by Sūraseni. (M. B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 94, Verse 76).

SURĀŚTRAM. A kingdom of Purāṇic fame on the south-western part of ancient India. Ākṛti, king of this country, was once defeated by Sahadeva, one of the Pāṇḍavas. (Sābhā Parva, Chapter 61). Holy place like Camasodbheda, Prabhāsākṣetra, Piṇḍārakā etc. are situated in this area. (Vana Parva, Chapter 81, Verse 19).

SURĀŚTRAM. II A Kṣatriya dynasty. Ruṣaruddhika was a wicked King born in this dynasty. (Udyoga Parva, Chapter 74 Verse 14).

SURATĀ. A celestial damsel, daughter of Kaśyapaprajāpati by his wife Pradhā. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 65, Verse 50). She gave a dance performance at the birthday celebrations of Arjuna. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 122, Verse 63).

ŚURATARA. A king who killed the mighty Rākṣasa named Pātaccara. During the Bhārata Yuddha, Pātaccara had taken his stand on the Kaurava side. (M.B. Drona Parva, Chapter 22, Verse 38).

SURATHA I. A king in ancient India. (See under Saṃdāhi Chetṭiyār).

SURATHA II. A king of the Puru dynasty. Suratha was one of the sons of Janu, the other sons being Śrutasena, Ugrasena and Bhīmasena. (Agni Prūṇa, Chapter 278).

SURATHA III. One of the two sons of Janamejaya, the other one being Mahiṃa. Suratha had a son named Viḍūratha. (Agni Prūṇa, Chapter 278).

SURATHA IV. Husband of Citrāṅgadā, daughter of Viśvakarmā. See under Viśvakarmā, Para 2.

SURATHA V. A king born from an aspect of asura called Krodhavaṣa. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 67, Verse 62).

SURATHA VI. Father of King Koṭikāsyā of Śibideśa. (Vana Parva, Chapter 265, Verse 6).

SURATHA VII. A king of Trigarta. He was a dependant of Jayadratha. In the battle that followed Jayadratha's abduction of Draupadi, Sūratha was killed. (Vana Parva, Chapter 271, Verse 18).

SURATHA VIII. A warrior who fought against the Pāṇḍavas in the great war. (Drona Parva, Chapter 18, Verse 20).

SURATHA IX. A son of Drupada. He was killed by Aśvathāmā in the great war. (Drona Parva, Chapter 156, Verse 180).

SURATHA X. A Pāṇcāla mahāratha who fought on the Pāṇḍava side in the great war. He was killed in battle by Aśvathāmā. (Śalya Parva, Chapter 14, Verse 57).

SURATHA XI. Son of Jayadratha by his wife Dussālā. Jayadratha was killed by Arjuna. When Suratha got the news that Arjuna, leading the yājñic horse had reached Sindhuśā, he ended his life in great fright.
(Ādvamedha Parva, Chapter 78, Verse 28).

SURATHA XII. A king who ruled over Kuṇḍalana-gari. He captured Śrī Rāma’s yājñīc horse and also took Handumā to Sugiśva etc. prisoners. At last Śrī Rāma himself appeared on the scene, defeated Suratha and released the captives: (Padma Purāṇa, Pātāla Khaṇḍa, 49, 52).

SURATHA, Mother of Emperor Śibi. (Vana Parva, Chapter 197 Verse 25).

SURATHĀKĀRA. A particular region in the Kuṭa Island.
(Bhiṣma Parva, Chapter 12, Verse 13).

SURĀVAN. Name of the horse attached to the chariot given to Agastyā by the mahārāsi called Ilvala. (See under Agastyā).

SURAVITHI. A famous orbit of stars in Indraloka. (Vana Parva, Chapter 43, Verse 12).

SUREN. A tributary of the river Sarasvatī flowing through Rāsbha island. (Śalya Parva, Chapter 38, Verse 26).

SURESA I. A son of Tala, the Pāñcajanya-gī, one of the fifteen Agnis who cause hindrances to yājñās. (Vana Parva. Chapter 220, Verse 13).

SUREŚVARA. One of the eleven Rudras. (Śānti Parva Chapter 208, Verse 19).

SURIKANĀ. A female attendant of Subrahmaṇya (Śalya Parva, Chapter 46, Verse 29).

SURIKIS. A son of Vasūṭha by Arundhatī. (Bhāgavata, Skandha 4).

SURODA. One of the seven seas, filled with Madya (wine). (Bhiṣma Parva, Chapter 12, Verse 2).

SUROMAN. A serpent belonging to the family of Taksaka. He was burnt at the Sarpatatra of Janamejaya. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 57, Verse 10).

SŪRPĀNĀKHĀ. Rāvana’s sister.

1) Viśravas, son of Bраhmā and Kaikāsi daughter of Sumāl lived in the forest called Slesmataka. Once Kaikāsi had a sexual union with Viśravas at an untimely hour. As a result of this union, Kaikāsi gave birth to four children at intervals of one Yāma each. These children were, Rāvana, Kumbhakarna, Vibhīṣaṇa and Sūrpanakha. (Kamba Rāmāyana, Bāla Kāṇḍa).

2) Domestic Life. Sūrpanakhā was married to the Rāksaṇa, Vidyuṣjīva. The son who was born to the couple was named Śambhubhūmāra.

The Kālakeyas were the brothers of Vidyuṣjīva. At the time of Rāvana’s return after his triumphal march, a battle took place between him and the Kālakeyas. The Kālakeyas fell under the sword of Rāvana. Enraged at the death of his brothers, Vidyuṣjīva encountered Rāvana. In the battle that followed, Vidyuṣjīva was killed. On hearing about her husband’s death, Sūrpanakha went to Rāvana weeping and lamenting. Moved to pity at the sight of her tears, Rāvana said:—“Dear Sister! You may travel through the three worlds and accept any man you like as your husband. Is there any one who would not wish to become my relative? Go and marry a husband suited to you. If any one turns down your proposal, just inform me. I shall come and make him your husband.” Sūrpanakha was pleased. She at once started going round the three worlds with Khara, Dūṣana and Triśiras. (Uttara Rāmāyaṇa; Kambārāmāyaṇa, Aranya Kāṇḍa).

3) Before Laksmaṇa. Śrīpanakha’s son, Śambhubhūmāra was performing tapas to Śiva in Dandakārāṇya. It was at this time that Śrī Rāma and Laksmaṇa arrived in the forest, accompanied by Śītā. They reached the place called Pañcavaṭī in Dandakārāṇya. Śrī Rāma wished to set up his hermitage in the middle of the five “vāya” trees in Pañcavaṭī.

At the very sight of Śītā, Śambhubhūmāra fell in love with her. He stood there in the form of a tree. While building the hermitage, Laksmaṇa felled that tree and thus Śambhubhūmāra was killed. (See under Śambhubhūmāra).

The widowed Śrūpanakhā, in her search for a suitable husband happened to reach and settle down at the southern border of Daṇḍakārāṇya. She had failed in her search so far.

It was at this stage that she came to know of Śrī Rāma and his party. She disguised herself as Lālitā and entered Śrī Rāma’s āśrama. The sight of Śrī Rāma made her a victim to carnal passion. She submitted her desire to him, but he turned down her prayer. The disappointed Śrūpanakhā left the āśrama at once. But she appeared again in front of Śītā. Feeling that so long as Śītā was alive, Śrī Rāma would not be prepared to court her, Śrūpanakhā rushed furiously at Śītā. Laksmaṇa who was watching the whole scene, suddenly rushed to the spot and pushed her out of the āśrama. He cut off her ears, nose and breasts. Śrūpanakhā, bleeding profusely from her mutilation, hastened to her brother Rāvan to inform him of the calamity. In obedience to Rāvan’s command, Khara, Dūṣana and others who came and encountered Rāma and Laksmaṇa, were also slain in the battle. (Kamba Rāmāyana, Aranya Kāṇḍa).

SŪRĪPĀRAKA. Another name for Kerala. In Brahmāṇḍa Purāṇa, Chapter 99, we read that Parasūrāma threw a “Śūrpa” winnowing basket from Gokara southwards and the ocean up to the spot where the Śūrpa fell, became dry land. Since the land was formed by throwing the Śūrpa, it came to be called “Śūrāraka”. References to Śūrāraka in the Mahābhārata, are given below:-

(i) In the course of his triumph of the southern lands, Sahadeva conquered “Śūrāraka”. (M.B. Sahābha Parva, Chapter 31, Verse 65).

(ii) There is a sacred bath here, known as “Śūrāraka tīrtha”. By bathing here, one would obtain golden rāsis. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 85, Verse 43).

(iii) In Śūrāraka Kṣetra, there is a sacrificial platform originally used by Jamadagni. Close by, there are two holy places called “Pāśaṇa tīrtha” and “Candra tīrtha”. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 88, Verse 12).

(iv) Yudhiṣṭhīra once happened to visit this sacred place. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 118, Verse 8).

(v) Śūrāraka is the land formed by the withdrawal of the ocean. It is also called “Aparāntabhu”i”. (Śānti Parva, Chapter 49, Verse 66).

(vi) Mahābhārata, Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 25, Verse 50 states that by bathing in the water of Śūrāraka Kṣetra and observing a fast for a fortnight, one would be born as a prince in the next birth.

SURUGA. A son of Gurūda. (Udyoga Parva, Chapter 101, Verse 9).
SURUCI. A wife of Uttanapada. Svayambhuva Manu had two sons called Priyavrata and Uttanapada. Uttanapada married Suruci and Suniti. A son called Utama was born to Suruci and to Suniti was born Dhruva.

SURUPA. A daughter of Vivasvaka. Priyavrata, son of Svayambhuva Manu married Surupa and Barhisati. The beautiful daughters of Vivasvaka. Surupa had ten sons. They had a younger sister called Urjasvati.

(Devi Bhagavata, Skanda 8).

SURYA I. The god who gives light to the worlds.

1) Birth. It is said that the Sun was born to Kasyya by his wife Aditi. Mahavisnu begot Bhrmaha and Bhrmaha begot Marici. Prajapati Kaasya was born from Marici. Several sons were born to Kaasya by Aditi the daughter of Daksa. They are known by the names Adityas, Vasus, Rudras and so on. Of these, Adityas are twelwe in number. (Aditya means the son of Aditi). There is a difference of opinion as to who these twelve Adityas are. According to Agni Purana, Chapter 51, the twelve Adityas are Varuna, Surya (the Sun), Sahasrani, Dhatri, Tapana, Savitri, Gabhasti, Rav, Parjanya, Vasata, Mitra and Visnu. (See under Devadasiadityas). But in Mahabharata, Adi Parva, Chapter 65, Stanza 15, it is stated that the twelve Adityas are Dhati, Aryamah, Mitra, Sukra, Varuna, Atri, Bhaga, Vivasvam, Pusa, Savitri Vasata andVisnu.

Very often these names are used as synonyms of the Sun. So it is better to assume that there are several Adityas and that it is the sun who gives light and heat to the worlds. Vivasvan is this sun because it is said that from this Vivasvan the Manu Vivasvata was born and from this Vivasvata, Ikavaku, the first king of the Solar dynasty, was born.

2) The chariot of the Sun. The Sun rises in the east and sets in the west, in consequence of which days and nights occur. The Puranic assumption is that the sun travels in a very big chariot. The chariot of the Sun is nine thousand yojanas long. The wheel is fixed to this. The great wheel of time with three centres, five tyres and six spokes, is fixed on that indestructible year. It has seven horses, which are the seven Vedic metres, called by the names Gayatri, Brhati, Usniki, Jagati, Trijubh, Anustubh and Paanti. Another axle used for the chariot of the Sun is forty-five thousand five hundred yojanas long. The length of each half of the Yoke is proportionate to the length of the axle. The short axle of the chariot with the small half of the yoke is fixed on Dhruva. The wheel fixed on the other axle rests on the mount Manasottara.

Separate Adityas, hermits Gandharvas, celestial maids, Yaksas, serpents and giants sit, in the chariot of the Sun every month. In the month of Caitra, which is also called Madhumasa, the seven officers of the month who travel daily in the chariot, are the Aditya Dhatri, the celestial maid Kastushatla, the hermit Pulasta, the serpent Vasuki, the Yaksas Rathabhir, the gaint Hetri, and the Gandharva Tumburu. In the month of Vaishaka also called Madhava, the Aditya Aryama, the hermit Pulaha, the Yaksas Rathaujis, the celestial maid Punjikasthalai, the giant Praheti, the serpent Kacavira and the Gandharva Nara da sit in the chariot. In the month of Jyeshta, the Aditya Mitra, the hermit Atri, the serpent Taaksha, giant Paurushya, the celest-Rudra will be pervaded by Sāman. So the sound of Sāman will be unpalatable. Thus this Vaiṣṇavite power which is having the attribute of purity (Sattva) and Vedas, pervades mainly the sun though it remains on the seven groups also. Being the seat of this power, the Sun blazes with his rays and destroys the darkness in all the worlds.

Such a Sun is praised by the hermits. The Gandharvas sing in front of the Sun. The celestial maids dance before him. The giants guard him, the serpents prepare his chariot, the Yakṣas hold the bridge and the Bāhlakṣyas stand around him. Viṣṇu who is having the figure of the Sun pervaded by the power of the Vedas, never rises or sets. The seven groups are separate from that Viṣṇu. As the figures of those who approach, are reflected in a mirror fixed on a post, that power of Viṣṇu, without separating itself from that chariot, pervades them who come every month in turn. (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Aniśa 2, Chapter 11).

4) The direction of the sun. The Sun starts from the east and goes to the western ocean. The directions east and west originate from this rising and setting. As a matter of fact when the sun rises in the east it is bright in places behind it. But it does not shine in the palace of Brahmā on the top of Mahāmeru. The rays of the sun which enter the palace are driven back by the radiance of the palace. The Mountain Meru is north to all islands and countries. So on one side of that mount it is always day and on the other side it is always night. When the Sun sets his light enters fire. So at night the light of fire goes far. In the same way, at day time, the light of fire enters the sun. So the sun shines more. Thus because the light of the sun and fire enter each other the day and the night wax when the sun shines on the southern and northern hemispheres. The dark nights and bright days enter water gradually. The water seems a little red, in day time because darkness has entered it in the night. After sunset the water seems a little white because the day has entered the water.

Thus when the sun passes through the middle of the island Puṣkara, the change of the Sun to one thirtieth portion of the earth is called 'Mauhūrtikagati' (covering the distance in a mūhūrtā- 48 minutes). The sun, like a fly sitting on the circumference of the wheel of a potter travels round the earth inclining a portion of a thirtieth of the earth, and making day and night. In the beginning of the transit to the Tropic of Cancer, the sun passes into the zodiac of Makara, and then to Kumbha and Mina. After having completed the three zodiacs, the sun makes the day and night equal and enters Visuva. At the end of travelling in the Northern hemisphere the sun enters the zodiac of Karkāṭaka and transit to the south begins. (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Aniśa 2, Chapter 8).

5) The Sun in the clutches of the giants. The Sun is being attacked daily by a kind of giants called the Mandehas.

6) Family life. The Sun married Saṁjñā, the daughter of Viśvakarmā. Three children Manu, Yama and Yamī were born to him by Saṁjñā. By Chāyā, the maid of Saṁjñā, three children, Śanaśicara, Manu and Tapati were born to the Sun. Atvinikūmāras and Revanta were born by Saṁjñā to the sun who took the form of a horse. (See under Saṁjñā and Chāyā).

On several occasions other sons such as Sugrīva, Kālinī Karna and so on were born to the Sun. (For details see under those entries).

7) The rising delayed. A story stating that the rising of the sun was delayed because of the curse of Śilavati, is stated in Mahābhārata. (See under Śilavati).

8) The Sun and the Syamantaka. Once the King Satrājīt did penance and got the jewel Syamantaka from the Sun. (For detailed story see under Prasena).

9) The Sun and Rāhu. Once the Sun and the moon pointed out Rāhu who had come to partake of the Amṛta (Ambrosia) in stealth and Mahaviṣṇu cut off his head. (For detailed story see under Amṛta, Para. 4).

10) The Sun the teacher of Hanumān. The Sun is the teacher of Hanumān. (See under Hanumān).

11) The Sun and Rāvaṇa. Once Rāvaṇa happened to reach the Solar region, while he was conducting regional conquest. That night he rested on Mahāmeru, and then got into his plane Puṣpakama, ready for fight in the morning. Seeing the Sun rising up, Rāvaṇa called his minister Prahasta and said to him, "Minister, go and convey my words to the Sun. 'Rāvaṇa has come to fight. Either get down and fight or admit defeat.' Prahasta walked towards the sun and told the words of the King to the two gate-keepers Piṅgalī and Daṇḍī. The Sun was informed of this by Daṇḍī. The Sun told Daṇḍī thus: 'Daṇḍī, I don't mind whether I defeat or I am defeated by Rāvaṇa. The thing is, that I have no time.' Daṇḍī informed Rāvaṇa of this. Rāvaṇa went away shouting that he had defeated the Sun.

12) Fight with Śiva. See under Śiva Para 7, Sub para 7.

13) Other details.

(i) Once Pāncāli worshipped the Sun. The Sun created an unseen giant for her protection. (M.B. Virāṭa Parva, Chapter 15, Verse 19).

(ii) Pāncāli did penance before the Sun and procured the 'Ākṣayapatra' (the pot that never became empty). (See under Ākṣayapatra).

(iii) The Sun destroys the ungrateful asuras (demons). (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 108, Verse 16).

(iv) There is a story connecting the Sun and the South. In days of old the Sun performed a sacrifice according to the Vedas, and to Kaśyapa who was the ministerial priest, he gave the South as daksinā (offering). So the south got the name 'Dakṣīṇa'. (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 109, Verse 1).

(v) The west is the place where the Sun pours his rays after the end of the day. (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 110, Verse 2).

(vi) When Karna and Arjuna confronted each other in the battle of Bhārata, the Sun boasted to Indra that Karna would come out victorious. (M.B. Karna Parva, Chapter 87, Stanza 57).

(vii) The Sun gave Subrahmaṇya two attendants named Subhrāja and Bhāsvara. (Śalya Parva, Chapter 45, Verse 31).

(viii) Once Śiva anointed the Sun as the King of all the planets. (M.B. Śanti Parva, Chapter 112, Stanza 31).
(ix) The Sun once gave Yajnavalkya the boon that he would get knowledge of the Vedas. (M.B. Śānti Parva, Chapter 318, Verse 6).

(x) The story of one who had attained the region of the Sun by 'Uchchavṛtti' (Living on the grains fallen on the field) is given in Mahābhārata, Śānti Parva, a few Chapters from 353, as follows:

There was a Brahmin in a place called Mahiṣapadma on the banks of the Ganges. He wandered here and there for knowledge of Vedas. Once a hermit met him and directed him towards a Nāga named Padmanābha. Padmanābha is the serpent which supports the chariot of the Sun. The Brahmin-hermit started in search of Padmanābha. At last he found out his house. But there was the wife of Padmanābha only. She said that her husband would return within a few days. Accordingly he remained on the banks of the Ganges without any food. Padmanābha returned and both of them met together. The hermit asked the nāga what he should do in order to get merged in God. The Nāga replied that he could become one with God by Uchchavṛtti. The Nāga continued, “The Sun is a god who had invoked into himself a saint who had lived only by the fallen grains in the field. The activities of that Sun are wonderful. The hermits and saints attach themselves to the rays of the Sun as birds attach themselves to the branches of trees. The great storms arising from the Sun spread wide in the sky. I saw once a person sitting inside that Sun who was a wonder of wonders. When that person as shining as the Sun came to him in the noon the Sun embraced him and seated him inside him. I asked him who he was. The Sun replied that he was a person who had attained heaven by Uchchavṛtti.”

(xii) The Sun gave the hermit Jamadagni an umbrella and slippers. (See under Cherippu).

(xiii) In olden days when a war between the Devas and the Asuras was drawing near, Rāhu wounded the Sun and the moon. Along with that the universe fell in darkness, and the asuras began to destroy the Devas. At this time according to the prayer of the gods the hermit Atri assumed the figure of the Moon and made the Sun as shining as of old. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 156, Stanza 2).

(xiv) The Synonyms of Sun according to the Amarakośa are given below:

SŪRYA II. An asura (demon). It is stated in Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 65, Verse 26, that this asura was the son born to Prajāpati Kaśyapa by his wife Kadrī. The King Darda was the rebirth of this asura.

SŪRYABHĀNU. A gate-keeper of Alakāpuri. A statement occurs in Uttara Rāmāyaṇa, that in the fight between Kubera and Rāvana, this gate-keeper helped Kubera.

SŪRYADATTĀ. A brother of King Virāṭa. It is stated in Mahābhārata, Virāṭa Parva, Chapter 31, Stanza 11, that this Sūryadatta was known by the name Śatānīka also. Sūryadatta also took part in the fight following the theft of the cattle of Virāṭa by Duryodhana and others. After killing the hundred warriors in the army of Trigarta, this Sūryadatta entered into the midst of the enemies and was killed by Drona in the battle of Bharata. (M.B. Karṇa Parva, Chapter 6, Verse 34).

SŪRYADHVĀJA. A King in Ancient India. He was present in the Svatara-vaṇa marriage of Draupadi. (M.B. Adi Parva, Chapter 183, Stanza 10).

SŪRYAGRAHĀṆA. To know in detail about the view of the Purāṇas regarding the Solar eclipse, see under Candra IV, Para 4.

SŪRYAKETU. A daitya (demon). Once this daitya conquered the world of the gods and expelled Indra. At that time Puraṇijaya was the King of Ayodhya, who was born in the Solar dynasty. Indra requested for his help. Puraṇijaya agreed to help Indra, on condition that Indra should stand as an ox and that he would sit on the hump of that ox and fight. Accordingly he sat on the 'Kakud' (hump) of the ox and fought in the battle, killed Sūryaketu, and reinstated Indra in his former position. Because he sat on the 'Kakud', Puranijaya got the name Kukutstha. The dynasty of the King came to be called by the name Kukutstha. (Kamba Rāmāyaṇa, Yuddhakandā).

SŪRYĀṆA. A King in ancient India. It is stated in Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 67, Stanza 57, that this King was born from a portion of the King Kṛtha.

SŪRYAMĀSA. A warrior who fought on the side of the Kauravas in the battle of Bharata Abhimanyu killed him. (M.B. Drona Parva, Chapter 48, Verse 15).

SŪRYANETRA. A bird born in the family of Garuḍa. Mention is made about this bird in Mahābhārata, Udyoga Parva, Chapter 101, Stanza 13.

SŪRYASĀVITRA. An eternal god of offerings to the manes. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 91, Stanza 34).

SŪRYASĪ. An eternal god concerned with offerings to the manes. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 91, Stanza 34).

SŪRYATIRIṬHA. An ancient holy place situated in Kuruksetra. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 83, Stanza 48, that by bathing here and worshipping the manes one may attain the performing of the sacrifice of Agniṭoma and go to the region of the Sun.

SŪRYAVAMŚA. An important dynasty of ancient Bharata. It is stated in Deviḥgāvata, Skanda 7, as follows about the origin of this Solar dynasty.

The Lord of creation Brahmadeva originated from the lotus in the navel of Viṣṇu. That Brahmadeva did penance for ten thousand years and pleased Parāśakti, the great goddess of power, and started creation. First of all he created seven mental sons. Of them Marici became expert in creation. Prajāpati Kaśyapa the son of Marici became a greater expert. The Sun is the son of Kaśyapa. Nine sons named Īsavīku, Nabhāga, Dhṛṣṭa, Śaryati, Nariśyanta, Prāṁśu, Nṛga, Diśta, Karuṣa and Prsadha were born to the Sun. Of these Ikṣvāku became King. This line of Kings born from the Sun is called Sūryavanśa (Solar dynasty). (See the Genealogy).

SŪRYAVARCA. A Deva Gandharva. It is stated in Mahābhārata, Adi Parva, Chapter 122, Stanza 55, that this Deva Gandharva born to Prajāpati Kaśyapa took part in the birth celebration of Arjuna.

SŪRJYAVARMA. A King of the country of Trigarta. This King had a brother called Ketuwārma. Sūryavārma and Ketuwārma fought with Arjuna when he was leading the sacrificial horse of Yudhishthira. Both the Trigartas were killed in that fight. (M.B. Aśvamedha Parva, Chapter 74).

SUSAMAN. A noble Brahmin born in Dhananjaya Gotra. He participated in the Rājasūya conducted by Yudhishthira. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 33, Verse 34).

SUSAHKULA. A famous urban area in North India. Arjuna once conquered this region. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 27, Verse 11).

SUSANTI I. A King of the Bharata dynasty. He was Sānti's son and father of Puruja. (Bhīṣma, Skandha 9).

SUSANTI II. Indra during the third Manvantara. (See under Manvantara).

SUSAMAṆ. King of Trigarta dēśa. The following information about him is gathered from Mahābhārata.

(i) Susarma, son of Vṛdhahāṃsa, was killed by Arjuna when he participated in Draupadi's wedding. (Adi Parva, Chapter 183, Verse 9).

(ii) Once he incited Duryodhana to attack Matsya, the Virāṭa King. Accordingly Duryodhana attacked the Virāṭa city and Susarma aided him in the battle. (Virāṭa Parva, Chapter 30).

(iii) In the battle that followed the lifting of the cows of the Virāṭa King by the Kauravas, Susarma took the Virāṭa King as captive. (Virāṭa Parva, Chapter 33, Verse 7).

(iv) In the battle that followed the above incident Bhīma caught Susarma as prisoner. (Virāṭa Parva, Chapter 33, Verse 25).

(v) At the instance of Yudhishthira Bhīma set Susarma free. (Virāṭa Parva, Chapter 33, Verse 58).

(vi) Susarma fought against the Pāṇḍavas and on the first day of the great war he fought a duel with Cekitāna. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 45, Verse 60).

(vii) Arjuna defeated Susarma. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 82, Verse 1).

(viii) He fought with Arjuna, Bhīma and Dhrṣṭadyumna. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 114; Droṇa Parva, Chapter 14).

(ix) He vowed that he would kill Arjuna. (Droṇa Parva, Chapter 17, Verse 11).

(x) When Droṇaṭārya was killed, he ran away from the battle-field. (Droṇa Parva, Chapter 193, Verse 18).

(xi) Arjuna killed Susarma. (Salya Parva, Chapter 27, Verse 45).

(xii) Names like Prasthalādhīpa, Rukmarathā, Traigarta and Trigarta are used as synonyms of Susarma.

SUSARMAN II. A Pāṇḍula warrior who fought on the Pāṇḍava side in the great war. He was harassed in various ways by Bhīma and was ultimately killed by Karna. (Karna Parva, Chapter 56, Verse 46).

SUSARMAṆ III. Last of the Kings of the Kaṇḍa dynasty. He was killed by his minister Bali. (Bhāgavata, Skandha 10).

SUSENA I. A nāga born in the Dhrṛtarāṣṭra dynasty. The nāga was burnt to death at the serpent yajña of Janamejaya. (Adi Parva, Chapter 57, Verse 16).

SUSENA II. One of the hundred sons of Dhrṛtarāṣṭra. He was killed by Bhīma in the great war. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 64, Verse 34).

SUSENA III. A king of the Pāru dynasty. He was the grandson of Avikṣit and son of Parikṣit. (Adi Parva, Chapter 94, Verse 52).

SUSENA IV. A son of Sage Jamadagni. The Sage asked Susena to kill his mother, but he did not obey his father. Jamadagni, therefore, cursed him and Parasurāma redeemed him from the curse. (Vana Parva, Chapter 116).

SUSENA V. Father in-law of Bāli, the monkey king. Susena, father of Tārā, deputed one thousand crore monkeys to search for Sītā. (Vana Parva, Chapter 283, Verse 2). Susena, an expert in the science of medicine and the art of warfare, was the son of the monkey called Dharma. (Valmiki Rāmāyaṇa).

In the Rāma-Rāvana war Susena fought the Rākṣasa forces and killed Vidyumālī. Lakṣmana swooned on being hit by the arrows of Rāvana who fought with reddened vigour following the death of Indrajit. Many monkeys also swooned. Then Susena, the medical expert, brought back to consciousness the swooned folk with the help of Viśāyakaṇṭha, Sauvarṇayakaṇṭha, Sañjīvani and other herbs.

Susena also attended the coronation ceremony of Śrī Rāma. (Valmiki Rāmāyaṇa, Yuddha Kaṇḍa, Chapters 101, 123, 154).

SUSENA VI. A son of Karna. He fought with Nakula in the great war. Uṭamaṇjus killed him in battle. (Karna Parva, Chapter 73, Verse 13).

SUSENA VII. Another son of Karna. Nakula killed him in the great war. (Salya Parva, Chapter 10, Verse 49).

SUSENA VIII. A king of the Bharata dynasty. He was the son of Dhrṣṭa and father of Sūnītha. (Bhāgavata, Skandha 9).

SUSENA IX. A king, who married Rāmbhā. (See under Rāmbhā, Para 5).

SUSILĀ I. A daughter of the Gandharva named Susila. (See under Pramohini).

SUSILĀ II. A brahmin who got rich due to the observance of Navaratri-penance. He led a very hard life with many sons and was naturally thinking of means of making money and a noble brahmin taught him about the greatness Navaratri. Accordingly Susila observed for nine years the Navaratri-penance and at last Devi appeared before him and made him rich. (Devi Bhāgavata, Skandha 3).

SUSILĀ I. A Gandharva lady. (See under Pramohini).

SUSILĀ II. A cow, the sister of Surabhi. She was the cow used in connection with sacrificial offerings made in the ārāna of the sage Jamadagni. Jamadagni once got his wife Renukā killed by Parasurāma. Though he brought her back to life as desired by Parasurāma, Jamadagni felt deep sorrow for having got his wife killed. So, he went to Goloka and pleased Surabhi by his pence and she gave him Susila, her sister. Jamadagni gave the cow (Susila) to Renukā. It was this Susila which later on Karttavīryajuna took away by force. (See under Jamadagni, Para 8). (Brahmāṇḍa Purāṇa, Chapter 61).

ŚUṢKĀ. A Mahārṣi who lived in the Gokaraṇa temple. When Bhagiratha brought Gaṅgā from heaven to the earth, sea water began to rise and the temples situated near the sea were submerged. At that time Śuṣka went along with other Mahārṣis to visit Paranārāma at the Māheṇḍra mountain. In response to Śuṣka's prayer, Paranārāma raised the submerged temples including the Gokaraṇa temple, above the water.

ŚUṢKA. An asura. In Ṛgveda we find that once Indra bound the magician Śuṣka in chains and put him in prison.

SUṢOBHANĀ. A Maṇḍūka princess. King Parikṣit of Iksvāku dynasty married her and three sons Sala, Dala and Bala, were born to the couple. (See under Parikṣit II).

SUṢRAVAŚ I A Vidarbha princess. King Jayatena of the Puru dynasty married her and a son called Arvācina was born to them. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 95, Verse 17).

SUṢRAVAŚ II. A king of the Ṛgveda period. When enemies encircled him he prayed to Indra who helped him by diving away the 10,099 enemy warriors. (Ṛgveda, Maṇḍalā 1, Anuvāka 10, Śuṣka 53).

SUṢRAVAŚ III. A spy of the Devas. He once informed Sarvasati secretly about the penance by the Sage Kātyāyana. Sarvasati appeared before the Sage and told him that he would get from Sage Sarvasata the knowledge he wanted. Accordingly Kātyāyana ended his penance and went to Sage Sarvasata.

SUṢRUTA. Reputed master of the science of Surgery, Suṣruta was the grandson of King Gāḍhī and son of Viśvāmitra. (Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 4, Verse 55). He is the author of Suṣrutasaṃhitā, one of the famous texts on Āyurveda.

SUṢTHALĀ. A place of Purāṇic fame in ancient India. The people who lived here were called Suthalas. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 14, Verse 16).

SUṢVARĀ. A Gandharva woman. (See under Pramohini).

SUṢYĀMĀ. An aparā woman. She was the wife of Rādhivaṇa, son of Arṣiṣeṇa. The couple had a daughter called Vṛddhā. (Brahmāṇḍa Purāṇa).

SŪṬA I

1) General information. A hermit who recounted the Purāṇas to other hermits at Naimiśa forest. He was a disciple of Vyāsa. Vyāsa composed the Purāṇas and taught them to his son, hermit Śuṅka who was a man of abstinance and who was not born of womb. At this time Vyāsa had another disciple named Sūṭa. It is stated in Devi Bhāgavata, Skandha 9, that this Sūṭa who was a felloeclipse of Śuṅka, who had learned all the Purāṇas directly from the teacher Vyāsa, and who was capable saying stories so convincingly, was the son of the hermit Lomahārṣa.

2) In Naimiśaḥranya. Sūṭa who had learned the Purāṇas directly form Vyāsa, happened to reach Naimiśaḥranya once. (See under Naimiśaḥranya). Naimiśaḥranya is the abode of hermits in the Kali- age. In days of old, hermits, who were miserable because of the evils of Kali-yuga, which was fast approaching, gathered here at the end of Dvāpara-yuga. They went to the world of Brahmā to consult about the means and ways of preventing the evils of Kali-yuga. Having heard their complaints Brahmā brought a wheel of the figure of mind and placing it before the hermits told them thus: “You follow this wheel. The place where this wheel falls down will be a place of purity, which will not be affected by the evils of Kali-age. There you can live in peace, without being affected by the evils of Kali-age till the coming of the Sātya-yuga.” Saying these words Brahmā set the wheel rolling in front of them. The hermits followed it. The wheel rolled on till it reached the earth, fell down and was crumpled to powder in a particular place. That place became famous later under the name Naimiśaṛanya. Sūṭa came to this place.

As soon as they saw Sūṭa, the hermits such as Śaunaka and others who were living there welcomed Sūṭa with hospitality and told him thus: “Oh! hermit, you are the disciple of Vyāsa. You have learned the eighteen Purāṇas from Vyāsa. We are eager to hear them. So please recite to us the Purāṇas, the hearing of which will remit all sins and secure heaven.”

According to this request Sūṭa recited the eighteen Purāṇas to the gathering of the hermits. It is in the form of the teaching of Sūṭa to Śaunaka and the others, i.e. in the form of a dialogue between Sūṭa and Śaunaka, that the people got the Purāṇas. (Devī Bhāgavata, Skandha I).

3) Sūṭa was beheaded. In Bhāgavata, Skandha 10, there occurs a story, stating how Balabhadradāma cut off the head of Sūṭa as the battle of Kurukṣetra had started when Sūṭa had been reciting the eighteen Purāṇas in Naimiśaṛanya and how his head was fixed in its place again and he was brought to life. (For further details see under Balabhadradāma, Parā 6).

4) Other details. Sūṭa was one of the hermits who visited Bhiṣma on his bed of arrows during the battle of Bhārata. (MB, Śrīṇa Parva, Chapter 47 Verse 12).

SŪṬA II. One of Viśvāmitra's sons who were expounders of the Vedas. (Mahābhārata, Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 4, Verse 57.)

SUTAPA II. A Prajāpati who lived in days of yore. A son named Prśnigārha was born to this Prajāpati by his wife Prśiṇi. That son was a partial incarnation of Mahāviṃśu. (For further details see under Aditi Para 7).

SUTAPA III. A son of Vasiṣṭha. Seven sons named Rājas, Gotra, Uṛdhvabāhu, Śavana, Anagha, Sutapa and Śukra, were born by his wife Uṛjjā. All the seven of them were the Saptarṣis (seven hermits) of the third Manvantara. (See under Manvantara).

SUTAPA IV. Father of the hermit Upamanyu. (Brahmāṇḍa Purāṇa, Chapter 18).

SUTAPA V. A hermit of the family of Bhrigu. (See under Ugratapas).
SUTAPAS VI

SUTAPAS VI. A hermit who was born in the dynasty of Bharadvája. This hermit had two wives. A son named Kalyānamitra was born by Piśācanjukā, one of the two wives.

The glamour of the second wife of Sutapas attracted the sun, who raped her once and from this, the son Aśvinisuta was born. On seeing that his wife was a harlot, Sutapas abandoned her with her son. Afterwards, at the instance of Śrī Kṛṣṇa, the hermit received his wife and her son back. (Brahmaśaivarta: 1: 11)

SUTAPAS VII. A hermit. This hermit once approached the princess Utpalāvati and requested her for coition with him. The princess refused. Then he cursed her, to become an animal. Utpalāvati begged for liberation from the curse. Sutapas felt pity for her and blessed her thus:—“A son named Lola will be born to you. He will become the Manu of Tāmasa Manvantara.” (Mārkaṇḍeya Purāṇa, Chapter 17).

SUTĀRA. A Gandharva damsel who had been cursed. (Further details see under Pramohini).

SUTASOMA. The son born to Bhīmasena by his wife Draupadī. The information regarding this Sutasoma, taken from Mahābhārata, is given below:

(i) Sutasoma took birth from a portion of the Viśvadevas. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 67, Verse 127).

(ii) It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Droṇa Parva, Chapter 23, Verse 28, that this prince was given the name Sutasoma, because he was born by the blessings of Candra (Moon).

(iii) Sutasoma had a combat with Viṅkarna on the first day of the battle of Bhārata. (M.B. Bhīma Parva, Chapter 45, Verse 58).

(iv) He rescued Srutakarmā from the hold of Durmukha in the battle of Bhārata. (M.B. Bhīma Parva, Chapter 79, Verse 39).

(v) Sutasoma fought with Viśvātāti. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 25, Verse 24).

(vi) Sutasoma fought with Śakuni and was defeated. (M.B. Karṇa Parva, Chapter 25, Verse 18).

(vii) There was a severe fight between Sutasoma and Aśvathāmā. (M.B. Karṇa Parva, Chapter 55, Verse 14).

(viii) Mention is made in Mahābhārata, Saupāti Parva, Chapter 8, Verse 55, that in the battle of Bhārata, Aśvathāmā entered the camp of the Pāṇḍava army in the night and killed Sutasoma. SUTEJANA. A King who was a friend of Yudhiṣṭhira. (Bhārata, Droṇa Parva, Chapter 158, Verse 40).

SUTĪRTHA. An ancient holy place in Kuruksetra. It is stated in Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 83, Verse 54, that the Devas and the manes would come to this place, and that if offerings to the manes are given at this place, one would get the merits of performing horse sacrifice.

SUTIKŚNA. A hermit. While Śrī Rāma and Laksmana were living in the forest with Sītā, they visited the hermitage of Sūtikṣna and others. Once Indra came to the hermitage of Sutikṣna and invited him to the world of gods. It was at this time that Śrī Rāma came to the hermitage with Sītā and Laksmana. When they were nearing the hermitage, Indra said “I shall see Rāma later when he has completed his great task.” Saying thus, Indra went away from the hermitage. Śrī Rāma and his wife and brother asked the hermit, where in the forest, they were to live. The hermit told them that they could live in that hermitage itself.

This hermit was the brother and disciple of Agastya. Once Sutikṣna changed a wicked and cruel man named Duspanya to a good and righteous man by sprinkling holy water of Gaṅgā on him. (See under Duspanya). (Vālmiki Rāmāyaṇa, Aranyā Kāṇḍa, Sarga 7).

SUVAR'NA (M). A unit of measurement in ancient India

SUVAR'YĀBHA. A King, grandson of Svārocīya Manu and son of Śaṅkhapāda. The father once advised the son on the various aspects of Sātvatadharmā. (Śanti Parva, Chapter 348, Verse 38).

SUVAR'YAGU'DA. A prominent son of Garuḍa. (Udyoga Parva, Chapter 101, Verse 9).

SUVAR'NASIRAS. A Sage of very olden days. His father's name was Pitaglavarman. He lived in western India spending his days in singing Sāmaveda. (Udyoga Parva, Chapter 110, Verse 12).

SUVAR'NASTHIVI. Son of King Śrījaya. While sages Nārada and Parvata were living in that King's palace the following incident took place.

Śrījaya expressed his sorrow over having no issues to Nārada who then blessed him to have a son called Suvarnaśthivī. The King began performing Yajñas from that day onwards and his queen conceived and in due time delivered a child who was named Suvarnaśthivī and he became an ascetic even as a boy. Indra got alarmed by the penance of Suvarnaśthivī and tried to frighten him by assuming the forms of various cruel beasts. He also sent his Vijāryudha against the ascetic, but all to no purpose.

The boy became four or five years old when one day while strolling in the company of his mother on the banks of the Gaṅgā, a tiger jumped upon him. This tiger of illusion had been sent by Indra and the tiger killed the boy. His mother wept aloud and people in the palace gathered around her. Śrījaya wept bitterly. Ultimately Nārada appeared, consoled the King and with the permission of Indra brought the boy back to life. (Śanti Parva, Chapter 31; also see under Śrījaya)

SUVAR'NATIRTHA. A very ancient holy spot in India. Before creation Mahāvīraṇa once did penance here to please Rudra who appeared before him and granted him boons. That is the great importance of the place. He who worships Śiva here will derive benefits equal to those of conducting an Āśvamedha yajña and also will attain the status of Gaṇapati. (Vana Parva, Chapter 94, Verse 18).

SUVAR'NAVARMAN. A King of Kāśi. King Janamejaya had married his daughter Vapuṣṭamā. (See under Janamejaya).

SUYAṢĀ II. Consort of King Divodāsa of Kāṭi. (For details see under Nikumbha).
SVABHOJANA (M). A naraka (Hell). (For further details, see the section on Naraka, under Kāla, Yama).

SVADHÄDEVI. Wife of the Manes. There is a story, as given below, in Devī Bhāgavata, Skandha 9, about the birth of this goddess.

At the beginning of creation Brahmā created seven groups of Manes of whom four were embodied and three were lustrous ones. The deities called the Manes are the Agniśvātās, the Barhiṣadās, the Somapās, Yama, Anala, Soma and Arīyan. The Śrāddhas (oblations offered to the manes) were stipulated as the food of these manes. It was ordered that the Brahmin who does not make offerings to the manes, will be as mean and despicable as the Brahmin, who has not learned the Vedas, who has not eaten meals presented to an idol in temples, and who has not worshipped Deī (goddess), and that he would not be eligible to perform any religious ceremonies. Thus Brahmā meant Śrāddha as food for the manes. But the portion of the rice balls offered by the Brahmins stipulated as the food of the manes, seldom reached them. At last the manes complained to Brahmā. Then Brahmā created a woman of beauty, youth, knowledge and power to grant boons, and of good character, from a portion of pure nature. She was named Svadhā, and was given to the manes as wife. Then Brahmins were ordered to give offerings to the manes only with the spell (Mantra) of Svadhā. When the Brahmins began to do as they were ordered, the manes also began to get food, and they became contented.

Two daughters named Menā and Dhārīṇi were born to the manes by Svadhādevī. It is mentioned in Visū Purāṇa, Amśa 1, Chapter 10, that both of the daughters were expounders of Vedas, full of knowledge and the seat of all good qualities.

SVĀHĀ. A daughter of Brhaspati. This Svāhā who was always angry had a son named Kāma. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 219, Verse 22).

SVĀHĀDEVĪ.

1) General information. Wife of god Agni (fire). There is a story about the birth of this goddess, as given below, in Devī Bhāgavata, Skandha 9.

In the beginning of creation sufficient arrangements had not been made for food to be supplied to the Devas (gods). They were in misery. At last the devas reached Satyaloka and requested Brahmā to make some arrangements for their food. Brahmā pacified them by saying that he would make available to them, the ‘havis’ offered by Brahmins as food. Then Brahmā meditated on the Mūla-Prakṛti. A particle of Mūla-Prakṛti appeared before Brahmā and asked him what boon he required. Brahmā said thus:—Oh Goddess! The gods are miserable due to lack of food. The fire is not powerful enough to digest the ‘havis’ offered by Brahmins in the fire so as to convert them as food for the gods. The fire would become powerful to digest the havis only if your esteemed self would reside in fire as the power of digestion. Only the havis offered with the mantra, (spell) ending with the holy name of your glorious self could be digested by fire and taken to the gods as food, and they could accept it as food. So it is my request that your gracious self would become the power that dwells in fire as the figure of wealth and prosperity, adored by men and gods.”

But that goddess said that her desire was to get Śri Kṛṣṇa as her husband. She did penance to Śri Kṛṣṇa, who appeared and said: “Devī! you will take birth as the daughter of King Nagnajit in Varāha Kalpa (a world-age) and then you will become my wife. Now you have to become the wife of Agni under the name Śvāhādevī and become the power of digestion, and part of the spell (mantra). You and Agni will be worshipped together by all. From that day onwards Śvāhādevī became the wife of Fire. It is mentioned in Rgveda, Mantra 1, Chapter 10, that three sons Pāvaka; Pavamāna and Śuci, were born to the couple. (See under Devī).

2) Other details.

(i) It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Sabha Parva, Chapter 11, Verse 42, that Śvāhādevī remains in the court of Brahmā, glorifying him.

(ii) Once Śvāhādevi appeared among the wives of hermits. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 225, Verse 7).

(iii) When Subrahmanya was appointed as captain of the army, Śvāhādevi also was present. (Mahābhārata, Salya Parva, Chapter 45, Verse 13).

SVAITREYA. Son of Śvitrā. There is a story in Rgveda, 1st Mandala, 7th Anuvāka, 33rd Sūkta that Śvaitreya once hid himself under water for fear of enemies.

SVAKSA. A region in India, very famous in the Purāṇas. (Mahābhārata, Bhūma Parva, Chapter 9, Verse 45).

SVANA. Son of the Agni (fire) called Satya. It is said that this Agni is the agent which causes disease to living things. This agni got the name Svana because human beings produce Svana (pitiable cry) when they are afflicted by diseases. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 219, Verse 15).

SVANAYA. Son of King Bhāgavayava. The daughter of this King, who is praised in the Rgveda, was married by the hermit Kāśīvān. (For further details see under Kāśīvān I, Other details, Para 6).

SVAPHALKA. Father of Akrūra. Vṛṣṇi, a Yadava King had two sons Svaphalka and Gitarka. It was divinely ordained that there would not be epidemics and drought in the place where Svaphalka lived. Once there was no rain for a period of three years in the land of the King of Kāśi. So the King of Kāśi took Svaphalka with him to his country. With his arrival there was rainfall in the land and the King who was pleased at it gave his daughter Gândini in marriage to Svaphalka.

There is a story about the birth of Gândini also. Gândini remained in her mother’s womb for many years. At last the King of Kāśi called to the child in the womb and said, “Take birth at once; why do you remain there so long?” The child replied, “I shall come out if you allow me to offer a cow as gift every day.” The King allowed it and the child was born. She was named “Gândini.” She used to offer the gift of cows to Brahmānas daily. After she married Svaphalka, several sons including Akrūra were born to her, (Harivarṣīsa, Chapter 34, Bhāgavata, 10th Skandha).

SVAPNA (DREAM).

1) General information. One of the four states of mind.

2) Result of Svapna. The Indians believe that there are two kinds of dreams and that they have the power to suggest things going to happen in future. So Indian sages have classified dreams as good dreams and bad dreams.
Bad dreams,—
Seeing the following in dream is bad.
(1) Grass and trees have grown all over the body except the navel. (2) The dust of bronze was sprinkled on the head. (3) The head was completely shaved. (4) One (the dreamer) had worn dirty clothes. (5) He (the dreamer) had worn dirty clothes. (6) He had applied oil on the body. (7) He was smeared with mud. (8) He had fallen from a higher level to a lower level. (9) He had married. (10) He had sung songs. (11) He had hummed himself by playing a lute etc. (12) He had got on a swing. (13) He had obtained lotus flower and metals. (14) He had killed serpents. (15) He had climbed on trees with red flowers or on the back of low caste people, hog, dog, ass, or camel. (16) He had eaten flesh of birds or sesame oil or oil-cake. (17) He had entered the womb of his mother. (18) He had got on a funeral Pyre. (19) The flag post of Indra had been broken down. (20) The Sun and the Moon had fallen down. (21) The gods, Brahmins, Kings or teachers have been angry. (22) Stars or planets have fallen. (23) He had engaged himself in dance or playing musical instruments or singing. (24) He had played musical instruments except the lute (Vīnā). (25) He had been carried down by the current of a river. (26) He had taken bath in muddy water or cowdung water or Ink. (27) He had embraced virgins. (28) He had engaged in pederasty. (29) Limbs of the body were damaged. (30) He had vomited and passed excrements. (31) He had gone to the south. (32) He had caught disease. (33) Fruits have been destroyed. (34) Cleavages occurred in minerals. (35) The house was covered with dust. (36) He had swept the house clean. (37) He had played with devils or cruel animals or monkeys or low caste people. (38) He had suffered molestation and hurts from enemies. (39) He had worn hermit's coloured cloth or played with coloured clothes. (40) He drank oil and got immersed in water. (41) He has worn blood-coloured garland and cosmetics.

If the dreams mentioned above are seen it should not be mentioned to anybody. After the dream, either he should sleep again or take bath. To counteract the effects of bad dreams, do one of the following such as offering sesame as oblation in fire; worshipping Viṣṇu or Śiva, or the Sun or Gaṇeśvara; singing hymns of praise; reciting sūktas (verses) such as Pūraṣaūkta etc. The dreams seen in the first watch of the night will come into effect within one year; dreams seen in the second watch of the night will take effect within six months; those seen in the third watch of the night will take effect within three months and those seen in the fourth watch of the night will take effect within half a month and those seen at dawn will be realized within ten days. If a bad dream and a good dream are seen in one night, the last one will take effect. So it is better not to sleep any more in the night after seeing a good dream.

B. Good dreams. Seeing that—
(1) he has climbed on a mountain or the upper storey of a building, or on the back of an elephant, or horse, or bull or on the top of trees having white flowers, or in the sky. (2) grass has grown in the loins. (3) several heads have grown. (4) hair is turned grey or adorned with white flowers. (5) one is wearing white cloth. (6) he has caught the Moon, or the Sun or the stars and patted them. (7) one has embraced the flag of Indra or hoisted the flag of Indra. (8) held the earth and fountain. (9) one has attacked the enemies. (10) he has won a controversy, or gambling or a battle. (11) he has eaten raw flesh or pudding. (12) one has bathed in blood. (13) one has drunk Sūrā (liquor) or blood or milk. (14) one has handled weapons. (15) the sky is clear. (16) drank the milk of cow, buffalolioness, elephant or mare, by mouth as their calves do. (17) one got blessings from the gods, or Brahmins, or teachers. (18) one is anointed with water in the horn of cow or water oozed from the lunar region, or anointed as the ruler of a kingdom. (19) the head is wounded or he himself was dead. (20) houses etc. have caught fire. (21) one received the emblems of kings. (22) he has played the instrument lute. (23) a king or elephant or horse or gold or an ox or a cow comes before. If at the end of the dream he is seen as having climbed on the back of an ox or an elephant or on the top of a house or a mountain or a tree, or as having smeared ghee or excrement on the body or gone to a prohibited woman, or seen white cloth, clear water, tree with fruits, or a clear sky, it forebodes good future. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 229.

SVĀRĀSTRA. A country in India famous in the Purāṇas. Mention is made about this country in Mahābhārata, Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 9, Verse 48.

SVARAVEDI. A celestial maid. (For further details see under Pramōhini).

SVARBHĀNAVI. The daughter of Svarbhānu. Ayus, the son of Purūravas married Svarbhānavi. Five sons beginning with Nahuṣa were born to the couple. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 75, Verse 26).

SVARBHĀNU I. A Dānava (asura) born to Kaśyapa-prajapati by his wife Danu. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 67, Verse 12 that Ugra-sena the father of Kaṁsa was the rebirth of this Dānava.

SVARBHĀNU II. An son born to Śrī Kṛṣṇa by Satya-bhāmā. (Bṛhagavata, Skandha 10).

SVARGADVĀRA. An ancient holy bath, situated in Kurukṣetra. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 83, Verse 167, that one could attain heaven by bathing in this holy firtha.

SVARGAMĀRGATIRTHA. A holy place. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 25, Verse 61, that those who bathe in this holy place will attain the world of Brahma.

SVARGAROHANA PARVA. An important section in Mahābhārata. (See under Bhārata).

SVARGATIRTHA. A holy place. This place is in the forest Naimisa. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 25, Verse 33, that he who lives in this place for a month and gives offerings to the manes, will obtain the fruits of performing Purūṣamedha yajña (A sacrifice).

SVARṆĀ. A celestial woman. By the blessings of Krauṇḍa a daughter named Vṛndā was born to Svarṇā. There were none who were not fascinated by her beauty. Once Śukra asked Svarṇā, and obtained Vṛndā, for the asura named Jalandhara. (Padma Purāṇa, Uttara Kaṇḍa, Chapter 4).

SVARṆABINDU. A warrior of Subrahmanya. (Mahābhārata, Śalya Parva, Chapter 45).

SVARṆAGRĪVA. A warrior of Subrahmanya. (Mahābhārata, Śalya Parva, Chapter 45).

SVARṆAROMA. A king of the Solar dynasty. It is stated in Bhāgavata, Skandaḥa 9, that this king was the son of Mahāroma and the father of Prasūthamomā. (Mārkandeya Purāṇa, 61).

SVAROCISA. A Manu. See under Manvantara.

SVĀRUPA. An asura. This asura remains in the palace of Varuṇa and serves him. (Sabha Parva, Chapter 9, Verse 14).

SVASAA. A daughter of Dakṣaprajāpati. Dharmadeva married her. Anila, the Vasu, was born as their son. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 66, Verse 17).

SVASTIKĀ I. A nāga (serpent) who lived in Girivraja. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Sabha Parva, Chapter 9, Verse 9, that this serpent lives in the palace of Varuṇa.

SVASTIKĀ II. A warrior of Subrahmanya. (M.B. Śalya Parva, Chapter 45, Verse 65).

SVASTIMATI. An attendant of Subrahmanya. (M.B. Śalya Parva, Chapter 46, Verse 12).

SVASTIPURATIRTHA. An ancient holy place in Kurukṣetra. Those who visit this holy place will obtain the fruits of giving thousand cows as alms. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 83, Verse 174).

SVASTYĀTREYA. An ancient hermit. Mention is made in Mahābhārata, Śanti Parva, Chapter 208, Verse 28 that this hermit had lived in South India.

SVASVA. A king praised in the Rgveda. With a view to obtain a son, he worshipped the Sun and the Sun himself took birth as his son. The son grew up and became king. Once there arose a fight between this king and hermit Etaśa, in which fight Indra saved the hermit. (Rgveda, Mandala 1, Anuvāka 11, Sūkta 61).

SVATI. A grandson of Cākuṣa Manu. Ten sons were born to Cākuṣa Manu, by his wife Naḍvalā. Svāti was the son of his son Ĉūry by his wife Āgneyi. Svāti had five brothers named Āiga, Sumanas, Kratu, Aṅgiras and Gaya. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 18).

SVAVATKA (SVAPHLAKA). Father of Akrūra. (See under Śvaphalka)

ŚVĀVILLOMĀPAHA. A holy place situated in Kurukṣetra. (Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 83, Verse 61).

SVAYAMBHŪ. A teacher—priest. This teacher was the first one who had given precedence to the ceremonial rites of Śrāddha (offering to the manes). (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 191).

SVAYAMBHUUVA MANU. Son of Brahmā and the first of the Manus.

1) Birth. Svāyambhūva Manu was born as the mental son, and Saṭārūpā as the mental daughter, of Brahmā. Svāyambhūva did penance and acquired boons for ruling over the subjects. He married Saṭārūpā herself. Brahmā appointed him as the first Manu to rule over the subjects. Two sons named Priyavrata and Uttanapāda and two daughters named Prasūti and Akūti, were born to Svāyambhūva by his wife Saṭārūpā. Of the two daughters Prasūti was given to Prajāpati Dākṣa and Akūti to Prajāpati Ruci as wives. A son named Yajña and a daughter named Dakaṣṇī were born to Ruci by Akūti. The children were twins. It is believed that Svāyambhūva and Saṭārūpā are the first human beings. A story as given below, occurs in Mātsya Purāṇa. Brahmā took birth as a man somewhere in Kaśmīra. Brahmā who took birth as man, created Saṭārūpā from his own body, without any decrease in its radiance. Svāyambhūva (Brahmā) appreciated the beauty of Saṭārūpā. He grew amorous. But Brahmā was ashamed of his feeling, as Saṭārūpā being half of his body, was his daughter. Being subjected to love and shame at the same time Svāyambhūva stood there, looking at Saṭārūpā. To avoid the look of Brahmā, Saṭārūpā moved to one side. Brahmā had no courage to turn his face to that side. So another face sprang up on that side for him. Saṭārūpā turned to four sides and Brahmā thus got four faces. His amour subsided. When the desire subsided, a man originated from Brahmā. That man is Svāyambhūva. (For further details see under Manvantara).

SVAYANJATA. A son born to a man by his own wife. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 119 Verse 33).

SVAYAMPRABHĀ. A daughter of Maya, an asura. Two daughters named Svayamprabhā and Somaprabhā were born to Mayaśura. From birth Svayamprabhā became a celibate. Nalaṅkābara the son of Vaṭārvaṇa married Somaprabhā. Svayamprabhā, the celibate, became the maid of Rambhā. (For the rest of the story, see under Rāma Parva 25). (Kathāsaritāgara, Madanamaheukālambaka, Tāraṅga 3).

SVAYAMVARA I. A sub-section of Ādi Parva in Mahābhārata. This sub-section comprises Chapters 183 to 191 of Ādi Parva.

SVAYAMVARA II. A Kṣatriya custom of princesses selecting their husbands themselves. There are three kinds of Svayamvaras. These three types are stipulated for Kings only. The first type is Iĉchāsvayamvara, the second one is Savayavasthāsvayamvara and the third is Sauryaśulaksvayamvara. No condition is attached to Ichchāsvayamvara. Anybody may be chosen as husband according to the wish of the bride. Damayanti Svayamvara is an example of this. In the second it will be stipulated that the bridegroom will have to possess certain qualifications. In Śītāsvayamvara Śī Rāma drew the bow of Tryambaka, and married Śītā. This is an example of the second type of Svayamvara. The third type is meant for adventurous heroes. Arjuna's marrying Subhadra is an example of the third type of Svayamvara. (Devī Bhāgavata, Sandha 3).

SVEDAJA. An asura (demon). (See under Raktaja).

SVETAS. A King in ancient India. By his moral and spiritual power he was able to restore his dead son to life. He did not eat meat. Mahâbhârata, Anuśasana Parva, Chapter 159 mentions that he was one of the few Kings who deserve to be remembered with reverence at dawn and dusk. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 1, Verse 233; Śānti Parva, Chapter 153, Verse 68; Anuśasana Parva, Chapter 115, Verse 63).

ŚVETAKI. A King. He was mostly occupied in perform-

2) Pride perishes. Under his father’s training Śvetaketu became a great scholar. With the increase in his scholarship, he became very proud. The father who understood this called him to his side and asked him:—“By studying all about what you can see, hear and understand, have you learnt anything about what you cannot see, hear or understand?” Śvetaketu admitted that he did not know. Then Uddālaka explained to him the mystery of Paramâtma (universal soul) which is without beginning or end. (Chândogyopanisad).

3) Śvetaketu in Pâñcâla. After completing his education under his father, Śvetaketu went to Pâñcâla. There, in the royal assembly Jaivali, the Pravâhana King asked him the following questions:—“Where do people go from this world? How do they return? Where do Devayâna and Pitrâyâna meet? From where do they diverge? Why is Pitṛloka imperfect? What is the fifth yajñabali?”

Śvetaketu answered that he did not know because his father had not taught him these things. Then he went to his father Āruni and told him about his failure to answer these questions. The father admitted that he too did not know them and suggested that they should ask Pravâhana himself. Since Śvetaketu refused to go with him to see the King, Uddālaka himself went to Pravâhana. The King enlightened him on the above topics and sent him back. (Chândogyopanisad 1.8).

4) Ācārya of Yajñī Rules. In Kauśitaki Brâhmaṇa, Śvetaketu is described as the Ācārya of the rules of Yajñī. He has laid down definite rules and procedures for priests officiating in Yajñas. Besides, he has suggested the different customs and practices to be observed by Brahmacârins and tapasvins. In the treatises dealing with Dharmaśâstra before his time, food of sweet taste was denied to Brahmacârins. But Śvetaketu has pointed out that it was an entirely wrong doctrine. (Gopātha Brâhmaṇa, 1.33; Śāṅkhâyâna Brâhmaṇa, 1.33).

Once an ācārya named Jāṭukâraṇya became the priest of the Kings of Kâśi, Kosalâ and Videha. Śvetaketu who was angry at this complained bitterly about this to his father. Then Uddālaka reminded his son that priests should yearn for wisdom instead of being attracted by worldly pleasures.

5) Author of Kâmaśûra. It is more or less clear that it was Śvetaketu who abridged the original work on Kâmaśûra by Nandi, into 500 chapters. This abridgement of Śvetaketu was again abridged after some years by Bâbhravyâ. It was after abridging it again and adding Dattakâcârya’s “Vaiṣika” and Suvâranâbhaś “Sâmprayogika” etc., that Vâtsâyana composed his famous treatise “Kâmaśûra”. Really speaking, the basis of Vâtsâyana’s “Kâmaśûra” was the works of Bâbhravyâ and Śvetaketu on Kâmaśûra.

It has been observed that the first person who raised his voice against the evils of drinking and adultery by the Brâhmaṇa community was Śvetaketu. There is a story in the Mahâbhârata about the fact which prompted him to bring marriage within the framework of law. Śvetaketu was Uddâlaka’s son, born to his wife by one of his disciples. (M.B. Śânti Parva, Chapter 35, Verse 22). Once his mother was abducted by a Brâhmaṇa. This incident inspired him to make stringent laws insisting on monogamy for men and women.
ing Yajñas. Mahābhārata gives the following details about this yajña lover:

(i) Svetakī performed numerous Yajñas. He was a King who was deeply absorbed in Yajñas. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 222).

(ii) Once the Yajña he performed was so prolonged that the Rtviks were utterly tired and left the Yajña in the middle. After that the King had to bring in other Rtviks to complete it. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 223, Verse 21).

(iii) He worshipped Siva and propitiated him to get a blessing to enable him to perform many Yajñas. Siva advised him that he should do "ahūti" (homa or sacrifice) in Agni continuously for twelve years. Accepting this advice, the king invited Durvāsas to make arrangements for the Yajña. Appointing Durvāsas as Rtvik, Svetakī continued the Yajña for a hundred years. (For more information see under Khāṇḍavadāhā).

SVETAPARNA. King of the city of Bhadrāvati, which was situated to the east of Hastināpura. In Jalini Aśvamedha Parva, Chapter 10, Verse 15, it is stated that Bhima after a fight captured and took him with the beautiful horse of this King for the purpose of Yudhīthāra’s Aśvamedha Yajña.

SVETARAŚMI. An elephant. A Gandharva happened to be born as a white elephant in the Kaliṅga country, as a result of a curse. Svetaraśmi is the name of that elephant. The King Ratnadhipa mounted that elephant and did many exploits.

King Ratnadhipa was the ruler of the island Ratnakūṭa. He was a prominent Vaiśṇava. He did tapas to Viśnu with the object of conquering the whole earth and to get all princesses as his wives. Mahāviśnu appeared before him and said:—“A Gandharva has been born in the land of Kaliṅga by a curse as a white elephant. His name is Svetaraśmi. As directed by me, he will come to you. You may ride him and he will take you through the air across the sky. All the Kings against whom you fight, will be defeated and they will offer their daughters to you as tribute.”

Next day, the elephant Svetaraśmi descended before him through the air. As advised by Mahāviśnu Ratnadhipa mounted the elephant and conquered the whole world and secured numerous princesses. One day as the King was riding the elephant and travelling through the air, an eagle came and pecked at the forehead of the elephant. Ratnadhipa drove it away by a thrust with his spear. But the elephant fell down unconscious. Even after five days he did not rise. The King offered prayers to the "Lokāpālakas". He was about to cut off his own head and offer it as sacrifice to them. Just then he heard a mysterious voice saying:—“Do not be rash; Svetaraśmi will rise at the touch of a chaste woman.”

The King at once went to the palace and brought his chief queen who was kept closely guarded and asked her to touch the elephant. But he did not rise. Then he ordered all the rest of his wives in turn to touch the elephant. Still the elephant did not rise. When he found that none of his 80,000 wives was a “chaste woman”, the King was ashamed of himself. Then he brought every one of the women in his kingdom and made them touch the animal one by one. But it was all in vain. At this stage, when Ratnadhipa was very much depressed, a merchant named Harṣagupta from Tāmrālipi happened to come there. He was accompanied by his wife Śilavatī. She touched the elephant and immediately it stood up. Ratnadhipa was very much pleased and married Śilavatī’s sister Rājadattā. After offering many rich presents to Śilavatī and Harṣagupta Ratnadhipa took Rājadattā on the back of Svetaraśmi to a deserted island Catusālādvipa and left her there under the protection of several women attendants. The King spent his nights at Catusālādvipa and days in his own palace.

One day Rājadattā was remaining alone in her residence. The attendants had gone out to attend to various duties. At this time a man happened to arrive there from somewhere. He was Bhavanascena, the son of a Vaiśya. He reached the island with the help of a piece of wood which was floating in the sea after a shipwreck. Rājadattā who heard his story, was irresistibly attracted by him and she embraced him. Just then the King arrived on the scene. Consoling himself by thinking that this was also the will of Fate, he left off the Vaiśya youth.

The King returned to his palace and decided to spend the rest of his life by doing tapas in the forest, after giving away all his wealth and property to the poor. When he was about to mount Svetaraśmi, the animal suddenly transformed itself into a man of divine glory, dressed in gorgeous clothes and jewels. He spoke to the King as follows:—“I am a Gandharva. My name is Somaprabha. There is my elder brother Devaprabha who lives on the Malaya mountain. My brother had a wife named Rājavatī. Once all the three of us went to worship in a Viśnu temple at a place called Siddhāvāsā. At that time my sister-in-law sang a devotional song. A Siddha who was enchanted by her song was looking fixedly at her. Enraged at it, my brother asked the Siddha why he was staring at his wife with lustful eyes. The innocent Siddha was naturally provoked by the question and pronounced a curse that my brother and his wife would be born in human wombs and in that birth, he would see his wife having sexual union with a stranger. When I heard my brother being cursed I became very angry. I hurled a toy elephant which was in my hand at the time, at the Siddha. He then cursed me also to become a white elephant just like the toy with which I hit him. I am that younger brother and you are my elder brother. This Rājadattā, your queen was my sister-in-law Rājavatī. Our curse is now over.” As soon as he concluded, all the three of them renounced their earthly bodies and were restored to their original forms. (Kathāsārītāgara, Ratnaprabhālambaṅka, Tāraṅga 2).

SVETASIDHĀ. A warrior of Subrahmanyas. (Śalya Parva, Chapter 45, Verse 68).

SVETĀSVATARA. He was the author of the famous Upaniṣad known as "Svētāsvatara. Many spiritual and philosophical topics are discussed in this work divided into six chapters.

SVETAVĀHA. Another name for Arjuna. (See under Arjuna).

SVETAVAKTRA. A warrior of Subrahmanyas. (M.B. Śalya Parva, Chapter 45, Verse 73).

SVIṢṬAKRT I. Another name of Agni (Fire). It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 219, Verse 22, that this Agni was the sixth son of Brhaspati.

SVIṢṬAKRT II. The Agni (fire) called Vīvapati, who was the second son of Manu. Rohini the second daughter of Manu also is known by the name Sviṣṭakṛt. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 221, that the offering in fire, of the fat portions of the sacrificial animals, is carried out properly by the help of this fire.

SVITRAPUTRA. See under Śvaitreyya.

SVOTTHA. A King. (See under Saralomā.)

SYĀMA. One of the nine daughters of Meru, including Syāmā. They are called Navakanyās. They were married by the sons of Agnīdhra. (Bhāgavata, 5th Skandha).

SYĀMA. A mountain in Sākādvipa. It is as dark as clouds and very tall. (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 11, Verse 19).

SYĀMABĀLĀ. A heroine of great prosperity. (See under Bhadrāravā).

SYĀMAKA. A son of Śūra by Māriśā. (Bhāgavata, 9th Skandha).

SYAMANTAKA. A divine jewel. (For further details see under Prasena).

SYĀMĀŚRAMA. An ancient holy place. By bathing and living here for a fortnight one would obtain the power of “Antarīdhana” according to Mahābhārata, Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 25, Verse 30.

SYĀMĀYANA. One of the sons of Viśvāmitra. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 4, Verse 55).

SYANDIKĀ. A river in Kosala. This is very famous in the Purāṇas. It is mentioned in Vālmiki Rāmāyaṇa, Ayodhyā Kāṇḍa, Sarga 49, Verse 12, that Śrī Rāma, who had started for forest-life, crossed the river “Syandikā where peacocks and swans called.”

SYĀPARNA (S). A priestly community. They were the priests of King Viśvāntara. Once Viśvāntara decided to perform a Somayaṅga. Without allowing Syāparṇas to take part in that yāga, the King invited other priests for the purpose. At that time, Rāmahārgaveya, one of the Syāparṇas devised a new method concerning Somayaṅga and established his claim to priesthood. (Aitareya Brāhmaṇa, 7, 27).

SYĀVĀSA. Son of the sage Aranānas. (See under Aranānas).

SYENA I. A class of birds. A daughter named “Śyenī” was born to Kaśyapa Prajāpati by his wife Tāmrā. Śyenas were the sons of Śyenī. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 66, Verse 56).

SYENA II. An ancient sage. Mahābhārata, Sabhā Parva, Chapter 7, Verse 11, describes him as shining in Indra’s assembly.

SYENACITRA. A King in ancient India. This King had never eaten meat. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 115, Verse 63).

SYENAGĀMĪ. A military commander of Khara the Rākṣasa. In his battle with Śrī Rāma, Khara had twelve military commanders including Syenagāmī. (Vālmiki Rāmāyaṇa, Aranyā Kāṇḍa, Sarga 26).

SYENAJIT I. Son of Dala, a King of the Ikṣvāku dynasty. Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 192, Verse 63 mentions that he was the most beloved son of his father.

SYENAJIT II. Uncle of Bhīmasena. (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 141, Verse 27).

SYENI. See under Syena.

SYŪMĀRAŚMI. An ancient hermit. It is stated in Mahābhārata, Śanti Parva, Chapter 238, that this hermit got into the stomach of a cow and sitting there, talked with the hermit Kapila about the ways of Karma and renunciation. This hermit Śyūmaraśmi is as ancien as the Rgveda. A statement as follows, occurs in Rgveda, Mandala 1, Anuvāka 16, Sūktā 112, “Ye Aīvins who are the Leaders. Come here also with those protective weapons by which you gave protection to Atri, Śāṇiyu and Manu, and the arrows by shooting which you saved Śyūmaraśmi.”

TA (₹). This letter means a thief or the inner down of a bird. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 348).

TA (ץ). This letter means the act of singing. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 348).

TADITPRABHĀ. A female follower of Subrahmanya. (Verse 17, Chapter 46, Salya Parva).

TAJASA. A holy place. This is situated in Kurukṣetra. The importance of this place lies in the fact that it was at this place that all devas together crowned Subrahmanya as their Commander-in-chief. (Śloka 16, Chapter 33, Vana Parva).

TAITIKRIRI. A celebrated sage of the Taittirīya branch of sages. He attended the Yāga conducted by Uparicaravas. (Śānti Parva).

TAKṢA. A son born to Bharata of his wife Māṇḍavi. This prince along with his brother Puṣkara conquered Gāndhīrādesa and created Takṣaśīlānagarī there. (Uttarakāṇḍa, Vālmiki Rāmāyaṇa, and Vāyu Purāṇa).

TAKṢAKA I. A fierce serpent.

1) Genealogy and birth. Descending in order from Viśṇu—Brahmā—Marci—Kaśyapa—Takṣaka. Kaśyapamuni got of his wife Kadṛū serpents and Takṣaka was one of the serpent chiefs. (Śloka 5, Chapter 35, Ādi Parva). See also under Kadṛū.

2) Takṣaka and Parikṣit. In his boyhood Takṣaka went out from the family. The reason was a curse by his mother. Once Kadṛū and Vinatā, another wife of Kaśyapa, entered into a controversy regarding the colour of the hair of the tail of the horse Uccaiśravas. Kadṛū said, it was black and Vinatā said it was white. It was decided that she who lost the wager should become the servant of the other. That night Kadṛū called her children and asked them to go and hang on the tail of the horse so that it should appear black. Some of the righteous children opposed this deceitful attempt of their mother and refused to go. Kadṛū cursed them saying that they would be burnt to death at the Sarpasatra of Janamejaya. Kadṛū sent those children out from home and Takṣaka became their leader.

At that time Parikṣit (King of Bhārata) became the victim of a curse that he would die by the bite of Takṣaka within seven days. (To know more details regarding this curse of the sage see under Āṣīkā). The worried King in consultation with his ministers decided to take protective measures. At first he moved to a seven-storeyed palace and stayed on the seventh storey. Physicians of fame and those well-versed in mantras were posted at the palace. Brahmins were put on duty for prayers. The entire palace and precincts were guarded by huge elephants. Security arrangements were such that even wind found it impossible to enter the palace without permission. The King did all his daily routine activities in the palace itself.
At that time Kaśyapa [There is a version that it was Dhanvantari who was thus sent back by Takṣaka, 9th Skandha, Devī Bhāgavata] was the greatest of all physicians and māntrikas and, greedy that he was, he started to the palace of Parīkṣit thinking that it would be the best opportunity to obtain some money from the King. Takṣaka also was going to the palace in the guise of a brahmin. On the way Takṣaka met Kaśyapa and knowing well that the presence of the celebrated Kaśyapa at the palace would be an obstacle to the achievement of his mission, he approached Kaśyapa. They talked on the way and Kaśyapa said he was going to the palace to save the King from the bite of Takṣaka. Then Takṣaka, revealing his identity, said that it was impossible to save anybody from the result of his bite. Both then decided to test their skill then and there. A huge banyan tree with many branches spreading wide was standing nearby and Takṣaka gave it a bite. Within seconds the huge tree was charred to destruction; Kaśyapa then took some water and reciting a mantra poured the water over the ashes of the tree and then to the surprise of Takṣaka, the tree rose up and stood in its original form. On seeing that Takṣaka confessed that Kaśyapa was superior to him. Takṣaka then coaxed him to his side and giving him a huge amount as bribe bade him return home.

Six days went by and on the seventh day Takṣaka reached the palace of Parīkṣit. He found the palace well-guarded and watched. There was no way to go in. Takṣaka then called all his relatives and had them disguised as brahmans. He sent them in with fruits and roots, like people who had come to pay homage to the King. Takṣaka crept into one of the most attractive of the fruits as a tiny worm. The guards at the gate stopped them. The fake brahmans then said that they had come a long way from a far off tapovana and should be allowed to see the King. The information was carried to the King. The King said he would see the brahmans the next day but ordered their gifts to be brought to him. When the fruits and roots were brought to him, he gave a fruit each to the ministers, himself taking the most beautiful fruit of the lot. When he cut the fruit open he saw a worm with two black eyes and a red body sitting inside it and was a bit surprised. Then he addressed his ministers thus: "Oh, best of ministers, by your earnest and sincere endeavour nothing has happened to me till now. The Sun is going to set and the term of the curse is going to end. There is no need to be afraid of any poison now. But let not a curse of a sage go futile. Let this worm bite me and fulfill the curse." So saying the King took the worm and placed it on his neck. The worm changed itself into the fierce Takṣaka and bit the King and the King fell down dead. (12th Skandha, Devī Bhāgavata).

3) How Takṣaka became Indra’s friend. Once the son of a sage of great divine splendour named Uttāṅka was studying under a Guru named Veda. When his education was complete, the Guru asked him to bring as daksinā (fees) the ear-rings worn by the Kṣatriya wife of King Pausya. Indra made Takṣaka steal the ornament and created many obstacles on the way. (For details see under Uttāṅka). That incident made them mutual friends and gradually Takṣaka became an intimate friend of Indra.

From that day onwards Uttāṅka waited for an opportunity to take vengeance on Takṣaka. It was at that time that Janamejaya, son of Parīkṣit, became the king. Janamejaya was only eleven years old when he became king and he was not then aware of the details of the death of his father. Uttāṅka went to him and told him how Takṣaka killed his father. Janamejaya became furious and asked him how to wreak vengeance on him. Uttāṅka suggested the performance of a Sarpasatra to which all the serpents should be attracted by mantras and burnt to death there. The young king agreed and Uttāṅka with other rṣis commenced the Sarpasatra.

One by one all the serpents came and fell into the sacrificial fire but Takṣaka was not to be found. Where is Takṣaka? This question was heard from many lips. Takṣaka was specially invoked by Uttāṅka. Takṣaka could not bear the power of Uttāṅka and he ran and prostrated before Indra. Indra not only did give refuge but gave him half of his seat in the throne and Takṣaka sat on it fully confident of security. Uttāṅka was enraged, when after repeated calls by mantra, Takṣaka did not appear and so he sat in meditation for some time to know the cause. He then saw Takṣaka sitting on the throne of Indra and the sight threw him into fury and he invoked Takṣaka, Indra and the throne and all. Lo! In an instant Indra, Takṣaka, the throne and all started moving towards the sacrificial fire! Within seconds all would have been burnt to death but for the timely intervention of a brahmin boy named Āstika, son of the sage Jārata-kūru. (See under Āstika, Takṣaka escaped death that time).

Takṣaka by instruction from Indra was living in the forest of Khāṇḍavā and when that was burnt by Agni, it was Indra who saved Takṣaka from the fire. (See under Khāṇḍavadāhā).

4) Other details.

(i) A king called Candrāṅgada lived in the house of Takṣaka for some time. (See under Candrāṅgada).

(ii) Takṣaka in the guise of a brahmin named Kaśapa went to the sage Uttāṅka and stole the ornaments from him. (See under Uttāṅka).

(iii) Once the Earth was made into a cow and everybody milked from her what each wanted. The serpents milked poison from her and they then used Takṣaka as the call. (See under Pṛthu).

(iv) During the burning of the forest of Khāṇḍavā, Arjuna slew the wife of Takṣaka. (See under Khāṇḍavadāhā).

(v) When the soul of Balabhadrarāmā, after his death, reached Pātāla, Takṣaka received it with respect. (Sloka 15, Chapter 4, Mausala Parva).

(vi) Takṣaka lives in the court of Varuṇa worshipping him. (Sloka 8, Chapter 9, Sabhā Parva).

TAKṢAṆA II. The elder of the two sons of Laṅkamāṇa of his wife Urmilā. The other was Chattraketu. Following the instructions of Śrī Rāma, Laṅkamāṇa went to the east sea coast, defeated the forest tribe there. He then constructed a city there named Āgati and made Takṣaka the king there. He then went to the west sea-coast and destroying the barbarous tribe there constructed a city there called Candramati and made Chattraketu (? candraketu) the king. (Uttara Rāmāyaṇa).

TAKṢĀŚILA. A place of Purāṇic celebrity situated in the north-west of Bhārata. Even from ancient times this was an educational and cultural centre. From the descriptions of the Chinese traveller Huen Tsang it is found that Nalanda and Takaskilā were two great universities before Christ. The famous Sarpastrā of Janamejadiya was conducted at this place situated on the banks of the river Vitastā. The story of Mahābhārata was first told at this place and at the end of the narration Brahmins were given gifts.

Tāla. A hell. There are many hells under water including Tāla. (Chapter 6, Anśa 2, Viśu Purāṇa).

Tālacara. A place of human habitation in ancient Bhirata. (Sloka 26, Chapter 140, Udyoga Purāṇa).

Tāladhvaja. The phantom husband of Nārada. Once Nārada became a woman and a king called Tāladhvaja married her (Devī Purāṇa). It was to show how the mind is confused with illusion that Mahāviṣṇu made Nārada into a woman.

Once Nārada went to Mahāviṣṇu and asked him about the secret of life. Mahāviṣṇu said that there was nothing called life and life exists because of Māyā the illusion of the mind. Nārada insisted that he should see Māyā (illusion) and so Viṣṇu started from Vaikuntha with Nārada on the back of Garuḍa.

Crossing forests, rivers, cities, lakes, villages and mountains they reached Kanyakūbja. There they saw a beautiful lake. Garuḍa landed and Viṣṇu and Nārada got down. They walked along the shore of the lake for some time and then they sat beneath a tree for some time.

After some time Mahāviṣṇu asked Nārada to take a bath in the lake. Pleased at this command Nārada placed his violin and deer-hide on the shore and after first washing his face and feet and doing 'ācamana' with Kūsa grass in his hand stepped into the water for his bath. Mahāviṣṇu stood near the violin and deer-hide of Nārada and Nārada dipped himself in the water. What a surprise! Nārada was changed into a woman of great beauty. She had no memory of her previous birth and getting herself on to the shore she stood there watching the surroundings there. Then a king called Tāladhvaja came on horse-back that way. He addressed the beautiful woman as Saubhāgyasundari and started talking with her. Within hours they got married and Tāladhvaja took her to his palace and spent the honey-moon there happily. Twelve years went by and Saubhāgyasundari became pregnant. In due course she got a son named Viravāmā. After another two years she got another son named Sudharmā. Thus she delivered a son every two years for twenty-four years becoming the mother of twelve sons. After some time she bore eight more sons also. When all the twenty sons came of age they were married according to the custom and in due course those sons also got sons. Thus Tāladhvaja and Saubhāgyasundari became the heads of a large family of children and grand-children and lived happily. One day a king from a far-off place with a great army suddenly came and surrounded Kanyakūbja. In the fight that ensued most of the sons and grand-sons of Saubhāgyasundari were killed. The king fled from the battlefield and came to the palace. Saubhāgyasundari was in great distress and when the enemies left the battlefield she secretly went there to have a last look at her sons and grandsons lying dead.

She fell to the ground and wept bitterly. Then Mahāviṣṇu came there disguised as an old brahmin and talked to her. He gave her instructions on some truths about life. Saubhāgyasundari then called Tāladhvaja and they both went to the old lake and as instructed by the old brahmin Saubhāgyasundari took a dip in the water. Lo! she became the old Nārada.

When Nārada got up from the lake Mahāviṣṇu was still standing near his violin and deer-skin smiling at him. The sight of Viṣṇu gave him knowledge of all that had happened. He stood there recounting in his memory how he had requested Viṣṇu to show him Māyā and how he had taken a bath in that lake and how he had spent a long period of married life ending in misery and how Viṣṇu had come to her in the form of an old brahmin when she had cried to him in agony and how the old brahmin had taken her and Tāladhvaja to the lake again and how he had become his old self again. He stood there still pondering over these when Viṣṇu called him and said 'Come on Nārada, how slow you are. Finish your bath and come soon. What are you thinking about?' Tāladhvaja, however, was unmoved by any of these. He was puzzled to find a bearded Sanyāsī rising up from the place where his beautiful wife had dipped herself for a bath. He went to Nārada and asked 'Oh best of sages, where is my wife who has just dipped herself in this same place? From where do you come?' Even before waiting to hear a reply from him the King began to make a hue and cry about the loss of his wife. Then Mahāviṣṇu went to him and consoled him by saying with illustrations that 'human ties are only ephemeral' and asked him to take a bath in the lake. Tāladhvaja after his bath became disguised with life and after doing penance in the forests attained mokṣa. (6th Skandha, Devī Bhāgavata).

Tāladhvaja II. See under Sīnadhvaja.

Tālajangha. Jayadhvaja, fifth son of Kārttavirya, got a son named Tālajangha. The sons of this valiant man are called Tālajangha. There was once a great fight between Viṭihotra, the eldest of these sons, and Paraśūrama. (Chapter 88, Brahmanda Purāṇa).

Tālākara. An ancient place of habitation of Daksīna Bhārata. (Sloka 60, Chapter 31, Sābhā Parva).

Tālaketu. A demon. Śrī Kṛṣṇa captured this demon from the Mahendra mountain in the Iravati river and killed him at Haimanemipatha. (Sloka 3 4, Chapter 12, Vana Parva).

Tālakkulattu Bhāttātīri. He was a great writer and celebrated astrologer of Kerala. He was born in A.D. 1537 in a village called Ālattūr in a place called Tālakkulam, two miles to the south of Tīrur in South Malabar. He lived upto A.D. 1595. His great work is 'Daśādhyāyī' a book on astrology.

Tālavāna I. An ancient place of Dakṣīna Bhārata. This place was conquered by Sahadeva. (Sloka 61, Chapter 31, Sābhā Parva).

Tālavāna II. A garden on the side of the mountain of Lattāveṣṭa near Dvārakā. (Chapter 38, Sābhā Parva).

Tama. A King who was the son of Śravā the race of King Gṛtsumadha. (Sloka 63, Chapter 30, Anuśasana Parva).

Tamas I. A hell.

Tamas II. One of the three qualities of the soul. Sattva, Rajas and Tamas are the three qualities. It is through the union of these three qualities that the inner soul enters the life of all animate and inanimate objects. The attributes of Tamasa are greed, sleep, bravery, cruelty and disbelief in god, bad habits, begging and indifference. It is because of the action of tamoguna that one becomes a prey to lust. It is the worst result of tāmasic activities that people are born as inanimate objects, worms, insects, fishes, serpents, tortoises, cows and deer. As a better result of tāmasic activities people are born as elephants, horses, Śūdras, barbarous people, lions, tigers and hogs. It is the good result of tāmasic deeds that produce pilgrims, good castes, egoistic people, demons and devils. (Chapter 2, Manusmṛti).

TAMASA. A sacred river. People of Bharata were using the water of this river for drinking. (Sloka 3, Chapter 9, Bhīṣma Parva). The famous aśrama of Vālmiki was on the banks of this river. This place was the scene of the well-known episode of the Krauṇḍa birds and the famous curse of Vālmiki beginning with 'Ma nīśādā'. (Bāla Kāṇḍa, Sarga 2, Vālmiki Rāmāyana).

TAMASA. The fourth Manu. (See under Manvantara). Śvāyambhūva Manu, son of Brahma, was the first Manu. He had two sons of Purāṇic fame named Priyavrata and Uttānapāda. Of these Priyavrata married the beautiful and virtuous daughters of Viśvakārmā the Prājñāpāti. They were Sūrūpā and Barhiṣmatī. Of his first wife Sūrūpā, he got ten sons Agnidhra and others. The youngest child was a daughter named Uṛjjasvati. Of the sons, Kavi, Savana and Mahāvira became detached from worldly life and became learned in spiritual knowledge. Priyavrata got of his second wife Barhiṣmatī three sons named Uttama, Tāmasa and Raivata. They were very valiant and they gradually became chiefs of Manvantaras. (8th Skandha, Devī Bhāgavata).

TAMISRA. A hell. (See under Kāla).

TAMO NTAKRT. A soldier of Subrahmanya. (Sloka 58, Chapter 45, Salya Parva).

TAMRA. A demon, son of Murāsura. The demon Mura had seven children named Tāmra, Antarikṣa, Sravaṇa, Vasa, Vībhāsava, Nabhasvān and Aruṇa. Of these Tāmras was Mahishasura's minister for a long time. The Chief Minister of Mahishasura's minister was Asīloma; Defence Minister, Cīṣura; Foreign minister, Vīḍāla and Finance minister, Tāmra. Udāraka was the Commander-in-chief and Bāṣkala, Trinetra and Kālabandhaka were Cabinet Ministers. He was killed along with his father Mura, by Śrī Kṛṣṇa. (10th Skandha Bhāgavata and 5th Skandha, Devī Bhāgavata).

TANTU. A Brahmacādi son of Viśvāmitra. (Chapter 4, Anuśasana Parva).

TANU. An ancient sage. This sage lived in the palace of King Viraduyumna for a long time. (Chapters 127 and 128, Śaṅti Parva).

TAPA. A Deva of fire-like splendour. Born of the power of penance of five sages named Kaśyapa, Vaśisṭha, Prāṇaka, Cāyavana and Trīvarcas, this Deva has got a name Pāḍacajñana (born of five) also. He did severe penance (tapas) and got the name Tapa. His head is like fire, his hands like Sun, his skin and eyes are of golden hue and his waist, blue. (Sloka 4, Chapter 220, Vana Parva).

TAPANA. A soldier of the country of Pāṇcāla. He was killed by Karna in the Mahābhārata battle. (Sloka 15, Chapter 48, Karṇa Parva).

TAPASĀRAṆYA. A Sacred place crowded with sages. (Sloka 20, Chapter 87, Vana Parva).

TAPASVĪ. A son born to Cākṣuṣa Manu of Naḍivala. (Chapter 13, Aṅśa 1, Viṣṇu Purāṇa).

TAPATI. A daughter of Śūrya.

1) Genealogy. Descending in order from Viṣṇu are Brahma—Marici—Kaśyapa—Śūrya—Tapati.

2) Birth. Śūrya married Sanjīnā daughter of Viśvakārmā. He begot of Sanjīnā two children named Kālinḍi and Yama. At that time Śūrya (Sun) was not of the form as seen now. Sanjīnā, unable to bear the splendour of Śūrya who was of the shape of an egg entrusted her maid Chāyā with the work of serving her husband and left for a temple in the guise of a mare to do penance. Chāyā disguised as Sāṁjñā served Sūrya for a very long period. Sūrya begot of her two children, Śaṅkaśvara and Tapatī. Besides these, Sūrya had another daughter named Sāvīrī also. (Chapter 47, Bhaviṣya Purāṇa).

3) Marriage. There was a mighty king in the Lunar race called Rksa in the beginning of Kṛta Yuga. He had a son named Śaṁivarana. He was made king of his country by his father even while he was a boy. He was a pious and righteous man. Vasiṣṭha was his Guru and he taught Śaṁivarana the Vedas along with the Angas.

Once Śaṁivarana entrusting the administration of the state to Vasiṣṭha went to do penance in the forests. On his way he followed a deer for a long distance on horse-back and reached a deep forest named Vaiśrāja alone. There he saw a lotus pond full of blossomed lotuses and Kalhāra flowers. Celestial maidens were playing there without interruption. Among them he saw a very beautiful maiden. She was Tapatī daughter of Sūrya. Even at first sight they became lovers. The king looking at her lost his balance and fell from the horse. At once great and charming Gandharvas approached the king and sprinkling water on his face brought him back from swoon. Tapatī was also upset and the other nymphs took her to her father’s house and consoled her.

Śaṁivarana returned on horse-back to his residence the city of Pratiṣṭha. But the king neither slept nor ate any food. The sage Vasiṣṭha knew that all the ailments of the king were due to his love for Tapatī, daughter of Sūrya. So he flew up by his yogic powers and met Sūrya sitting in his chariot in all splendour. The sage described to Sūrya the love affair between Śaṁivarana and Tapatī and pleaded on behalf of the king for giving Tapatī to Śaṁivarana. Sūrya was pleased to hear that and sent Tapatī along with Vasiṣṭha to Śaṁivarana. Before long the marriage of Tapatī with Śaṁivarana was celebrated solemnly at Pratiṣṭhānagara. The celebrated emperor Kuru was the son born to Tapatī of Śaṁivarana. (Chapter 21, Vāyu Purāṇa).

4). How she got that name. Because she was the daughter of Sūrya who makes the sky hot (tapa) by his brilliance, she was called Tapatī. (Śloka 6, Chapter 171, Ādi Parva).

5). Tapatī becomes river Narmāḍa. Sūrya, father of Tapatī, blessed her and said she would thereafter flow west from the Vindhya as a river named Narmāḍa. The present holy river Narmāḍa is but Tapatīdevi transformed. (Chapter 47, Bhaviṣya Purāṇa).

TAPATYA. Kuru was the son born to king Śaṁivarana of his wife Tapatī. All the descendants of Kuru were known as Kauravas and because they were of the generation of Tapatī, they were known as Tapatyas also. The young Gandharva, Gītarath, who fought against Arjuna on the banks of the river, Gaṅgā addressed Arjuna as Tapatī. (Śloka 79, Chapter 169, Ādi Parva).

TAPOLOKA. The place of abode of Vairājas who could not be burnt by fire. This is above Dhruvapada by eleven crores of yojanas. (Chapter 7, Arīva 2, Viṣṇu Purāṇa).

TAPAKUMBHA. A hell. There are twentyeight hells according to Viṣṇu Purāṇa including Taptakumbha.

TAPAMŪRTI. A hell. (See the section Naraka under Kāla).

TĀRA. A monkey who was a devotee of Śrī Rāma. This big monkey was the son of Bhṛṣpati. Bhṛṣpati made this monkey greater in size and intellect than all other monkeys. This Tāra was the minister of Bali. (Śloka 10, Sarga 17, Bāla Kāṇḍa, Vālmiki Rāmāyana and Uttara Rāmāyana). In the Rāma-Rāvaṇa battle this monkey fought against the demon Nikharvaṭa. (Śloka 9, Chapter 285, Vana Parva).

TĀRA I. Wife of Bali, best of Vānaras (monkeys). There are two stories different from each other regarding the birth of Tāra. One version is that Tāra was born during the churning of the Milk-Ocean. Airavata, Uccāśravas, Kalpavrṣa, Cintāmaṇi, Kaustubha, Candra, Apsaras, Mahālakṣmi Tārā and Rūmā rose from the sea of Milk. (Yuddha Kāṇḍa, Kamba Rāmāyana). The second version is that Tāra was the daughter of Śuṣeṇa. Bali at the time of his death is said to have spoken thus of his wife Tāra “Tāra, daughter of Śuṣeṇa, is well learned and is capable of assessing a situation and suggesting the correct thing to be done at that time. If she says a thing is good, it is never otherwise.” (Chapter 22, Kīśkindhā Kāṇḍa, Vālmiki Rāmāyana). From this it can be understood that Tāra was the daughter of Śuṣeṇa and we get an idea of the character of Tāra also from this. (See under Bali).

TĀRA II. Wife of Bhṛṣpati. She was extremely beautiful. Once she fell in love with Candra (Moon) and leaving her husband started living with him. Candra was the disciple of Bhṛṣpati. The devas were angry when they found the wife of their preceptor staying with a disciple of his. Bhṛṣpati sent word to her to return home but she did not heed. At last the Devas decided to fight against Candra. Then they came to a compromise and Tāra was sent back to Bhṛṣpati. In due course Tāra delivered a son. He was Budha, father of Purūravas. There arose then a dispute between Candra and Bhṛṣpati regarding the fatherhood of the child. Then the Devas called Tāra and asked her to name the child’s father. Tāra said that the child was of Candra and so Budha was looked after at the house of Candra. (9th Skandha, Bhāgavata).

TĀRĀDATTĀ. Wife of Kaliṅgadatta, King of Takṣaśālī situated on the shores of the river Vītāstī. Once a celestial maiden named Surabhidattā came to be born as the daughter of Tārādattā due to a curse of Indra. She was then called Kaliṅgasenā. (See under Dharmadatta).

TĀRAKA (TĀRAKAŚURA) I. An asura chief (demoon). This demon even while he was very young did penance to propitiate Śiva and got a boon to the effect that none other than a son born to Śiva should be able to kill him. He became arrogant with the power of this boon and soon became a terror to the world. Then to kill Tārākāśura Subrahmanya was born as the son of Śiva. In the great battle between the devas and the asuras Tārāka was killed by Subrahmanya.

Tārākāśura was the father of Tārāksa, Kamalāksa and Vidyunnālīka. (See under Subrahmanya). (Śloka 5, Chapter 33, Karṇa Parva).
TĀRAKA II  Siva Purāṇa mentions about a Tāraka, son of the minister of Bhadrasena, a King of Kashmir. This Tāraka was the rebirth of a he-fowl. Bhadrasena had a son named Sudharmā. He was the rebirth of a monkey. There is a story regarding how this fowl and the monkey came to be born in Kashmir as above.

Once in the village of Nanda there was a prostitute named Mahānandā. Though she was a great devotee of Śiva she was living the life of a prostitute for her livelihood. She was having a monkey and a he-fowl as pets. She would adorn the necks of her pets with the rudrākṣa necklace (rosary) made of berry beads favourite of Śiva and when she sang songs in praise of Śiva those pets danced to the tune.

One day a Vaiśya came there. He had a diamond Śiva linga with him. Mahānandā felt a great fancy for that and so promised the Vaiśya that if he gave her the diamond linga she would remain a faithful wife to him for three days. The Vaiśya agreed and the diamond linga was kept in a very secure place. That night when both the Vaiśya and Mahānandā were sleeping tired after a hectic amorous sport, the house got fire and the diamond was burnt into pieces. The Vaiśya greatly grieved by the loss of the diamond jumped into the fire and committed suicide. Mahānandā faithful to the promise that she would remain his wife for three days started to jump into the fire and abandon her life. At once Śiva appeared before her in person and said thus: “Oh, Mahānandā, do not commit suicide. I came to you disguised as a Vaiśya to test your devotion. You can now ask of me any boon.”

With tears of joy running down her cheeks she said she wanted to live with Śiva. So Śiva carried her soul to Kaṭāla. Not only that, Śiva blessed the fowl and monkey and said they would be born as devotees of Śiva in their next birth and attain mokṣa at the end of their life on earth. Accordingly the monkey and the fowl were born in Kashmir as Sudharmā and Tāraka.

TĀRĀKṢA (TĀRĀKĀṢA). A son of the demon Tārākṣa. This demon was the lord of a golden city called Tripura. Śiva killed him during Tripurāradahana (burning of the Tripuras).  See under Tripurāradahana.  (Chapters 33, 34, Karṇa Parva).

TARAL. A place of habitation of ancient Bhārata. This place was conquered by Karṇa.  (Śloka 20, Chapter 8, Karṇa Parva).

TARANTUKA. A Yakṣa. This Yakṣa is installed on the boundary of Kurukṣetra. If one spends one night in this holy place one would get the benefit of giving away a thousand cows as gifts.  (Chapter 83, Vana Parva).

TARŚYA I. Garuḍa. See under Garuḍa.

TARŚYA II. A sage. He was a member of the court of Indra. He was known as Arīṣṭanemi also. He had no fear of death. He once discussed with Sarasvatidevi about the soul.  (Chapter 194, Vana Parva).

TARŚYA III. A Kṣatriya youth of the country of Tārśya. He came to the Rājasūya of Yuddhishthira and gave much wealth for the purpose.  (Śloka 13, Chapter 53, Sabhā Parva).

TARŚYA IV. A synonym of Śiva.  (Śloka 98, Chapter 17, Anuśāsana Parva).

TARUNAKA. A serpent born of the family of Dhṛtarāṣṭra. This serpent was burnt to death at the Sarpa-satra of Janamejaya.  (Śloka 19, Chapter 57, Ādi Parva).

TATAKĀ. A fierce demoness. It was because of a curse of the sage Agastya that Tātakā became a demoness. There was once a great Yakṣa named Suketu, a son of Surākṣa. He did penance to propitiate Brahmā to get a child and by the blessing of Brahmā Suketu got a daughter named Tātakā. Brahmā gave her the strength of a thousand elephants. Tātakā was by nature interested in cruel and violent deeds and doing deeds of magic. She made Sunda, son of Jharja, her husband. She got two sons named Mārica and Subāhu. They also became mighty ones great in deeds by magic.

Once Sunda attacked the āśrama of Agastya in a mood of intoxicated arrogance. Sunda was burnt to death in the fire of his fury. Tātakā coming to know of the death of her husband got angry and attacked the āśrama of Agastya with her sons. Agastya cursed them and made them into demons. Tātakā and her sons who immediately turned themselves into fierce-looking demons went first to Pātāla with Sumālī, father of the demon race and then went with Rāvana, King of the demons, to Lanākā and stayed there. With the help of Rāvana, Tātakā conquered the great deep forest near Kāruṣa and stayed there with her sons. None, devas, demons or men, dared to step into that forest. Even the Sun or Clouds avoided passing above that forest.

It was at that time that Śrī Rāma and Lakṣmaṇa came to that forest with Viśvāmitra. Tātakā attacked Śrī Rāma and Rāma killed her with one arrow. The heavy body of the demoness fell to the ground like a big mountain. Her soul then rose up as a beautiful Gandharva lady and Tātakā who was thus released from the curse praised Śrī Rāma and left the place. Chapters 24 to 26 of Bāla Kāṇḍa, Vālmiki Rāmāyana and Kamba Rāmāyaṇa).

TATAKAYANA. A Brahmavādi son of Viśvāmitra.  (Śloka 56, Chapter 4, Anuśāsana Parva).

TATASKA. The name of Śiśnadhivaja, King of Śirṣhala, in his previous birth.  (See under Śiśnadhivaja).

TEJASÇANDA. A deva who adorns the god Śūrya with a flower garland daily. The idol of Tejaścanda is also used to be installed in temples. The idol is figured as one with a huge face and holding a sword and a lotus in his hands.  (Chapter 51, Agni Purāṇa).

TEJASVATI I. A heroine in a story in Kathāsaritsāgara intended to show that all happenings either good or bad are but the workings of fate.

Tejasvati was the daughter of king Vikrāmasena of Ujjayini and was very beautiful. She never liked any male and so never wished to marry. One day while she was sitting upstairs in her palace, she happened to see a young man passing that way and surprisingly was attracted by him. She sent her companion to him and informed him of her liking for him. He did not like the idea first, but the clever persuasions of the maid made him agree to a clandestine meeting with the princess at a temple at night that day. Tejasvati anxiously waited for the night to come.

About that time a Rajput prince greatly grieved at the loss of his father and subsequent loss of his kingdom started on a tour to see an old friend of his father. That night, by sheer accident, he came and rested in the same temple where the rendezvous of the princess was fixed. When night fell the princess came to the temple and without the least suspicion went and embraced the solitary figure sitting in the temple. The prince did not show any surprise and responded fully. The princess then understood all details of her lover and took him to his father the next morning. Somadatta (that was the prince’s name) then told Vikramasena all his mishaps and Vikramasena got back all the lost kingdom of Somadatta and also gave his daughter in marriage to him. (’Taranga 4, Madana Mahācūkālambaka, Kathāsārīśākāra).

TEJASVATĪ II. The queen of Ādityasena a king of Ujjayini.

TEJASY. One of the five Indras. (See under Pāncāli).

TEJEYU. A prince born to Miśrakesī of Raundrāśva, son of Pūru. (Sloka 11, Chapter 94, Adi Parva).

TEJOVATI. The capital city of Agni. This is situated on the south-east corner of Mahāmeru. In the centre is Manovati, capital city of Brahmā. To the east of it is Amaravati, capital city of Indra. In the south-east corner is Tejovati. In the south is Samyamani, city of Yama. In the south-west is Kṛṣṇājani of Nṛśītī. In the west is Sraddhavati of Varuna. In the north west is Gāndhavati of Vāyu. In the north is Mahodayā of Kubera. In the north east corner is Yaśovati of Īśāna. (8th Skanda, Devi Bhāgavata).

THA (9) This letter means taking food. (Chapter 348, Agni Purāṇa).

THA (3) This letter means Candramandala (moon-disc), emptiness and Śiva. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 348).

THIṆṬHĀKARĀLA. A prodigal person who lived in Ujjayini. He used to defeat all in the game of dice. With the money so received from defeated persons he would buy wheat and go to the burial ground and after making bread with it would eat it dipped in ghee sitting before an oil light placed before an idol of Mahākāla (lord of the burial ground). He would then lie there itself and sleep.

One night he saw the idols in the Mahākāla temple twinkling. He jumped up and challenged the idols for a game of dice. The idols stood mute and Thiṅṭhākārāla taking their silence to be consent according to the rules of gambling fixed a wager and played. He won and then he said addressing the idols “I have defeated you. Give me the money due to me.” The idols stood silent and he, therefore, wrestled with them. Still the idols stood dumb. Then Thiṅṭhākārāla took his sword. Instantly the devas gave him the money due to him. Early morning he went away from there and spent the money lavishly. At night he came back again and challenged the idols for gambling as before. This became a daily routine and the devas felt themselves harassed. They, therefore, approached the goddess Cāmuṇḍī and she advised them to refrain from playing as there was no loss of honour if one refused to take a challenge to gamble.

That night also as usual Thiṅṭhākārāla came and challenged the idols for a game of dice. Then the idols said “We are not prepared to play.” Then he challenged Mahākāla himself to play. Mahākāla also refused to play. Then suddenly the mind of Thiṅṭhākārāla changed and he did penance to please Mahākāla. Mahākāla was pleased with him, appeared before him and blessed him.

Once a few nymphs came to bathe in the Mahākāli pond and as per the instructions of Mahākāla, Thiṅṭhākālā took away their robes while they were bathing. He demanded a nymph named Kalāvati in return for their robes and finding no other way they gave him Kalāvati.

Kalāvati thus became the wife of a Man due to a curse of Indra. Once she praised sexual enjoyment with men on earth and decreed the same with Devas. Indra heard it and he cursed her “Then let her become the wife of a man on earth and enjoy the pleasures there.” All this story Thiṅṭhākārāla learned from Kalāvati. She added she wanted to go to Devaloka the next day for a dance with Rambhā. Thiṅṭhākārāla consented and he also went to Devaloka and saw the dance, sitting along with the Devas.

When Rambhā’s dance was over, there was the dance of a goat. Seeing that Thiṅṭhākārāla said to himself: “Why, this is a goat I used to see daily in Ujjayini. How did it come here to dance?” When the dances were over and the people dispersed, Kalāvati took Thiṅṭhākārāla to the Mahākāla temple. Next day he met the same goat in Ujjayini and then he enquired “Hi, do that dance which you did yesterday before Indra in Devaloka. Let me see” The goat stood dumb thinking of how this man on earth came to know of the dances in Devaloka. Thiṅṭhākārāla once again compelled the goat to show its dance but when the goat still refused to dance, hethrashed it with a stick on its head and the goat immediately went to Devaloka and informed Indra about the incident. Indra felt sad when he saw blood oozing from the wound on its head. Indra by his divine powers then understood that Kalāvati was at the bottom of all this trouble and cursed her to remain as a doll on a pillar in the temple belonging to King Narasimha of Nagapura. Alambuṣa, mother of Kalāvati, who heard the curse begged for relief and Indra said she would get freed from the curse when the king himself demolished the temple and razed the place to the ground.

True to the curse, Kalāvati after giving all her ornaments to Thiṅṭhākārāla bid him good bye and went and remained as a doll on the temple-pillar at Nagapura. Deeply distressed at this mishap of his wife, Thiṅṭhākārāla dressed himself as an ascetic and went to Nagapura. There he purchased five earthen pots and filled them with the ornaments of Kalāvati. He buried four of the pots in the forests and the fifth in the bazaar near the temple. Then he built a hermitage on the shores of a near-by river and started living there. News soon spread that a great yogi had come to the city and the King went to see him. They talked for a while on religious and spiritual matters and the King was about to leave when they heard the howl of a jackal. The yogi smiled and the King asked him why he smiled. He refused to answer but the King insisted and then the yogi said “Oh King, the jackal says that in a forest to the east of the city under a silver plant is a treasure.” The King immediately ordered his men to go and dig at the place and when they did they got the treasure. The King offered the treasure to the yogi but he refused to accept it. Thiṅṭhākārāla then on three different occasions pointed out to the King the three other pots in the forests and the King got great confidence in the powers of the yogi. One day he went to the temple with the King and while they were walking around a crow crew and the yogi smiled. The King again asked him the reason and the yogi said that there was a treasure pot in the bazaar near-by. When they searched at the spot directed by the yogi the treasure was found.

On another day the King and the yogi went to the temple and as they walked about they saw the doll on one of the pillars crying. The King asked the yogi the reason for the doll crying thus. The yogi replied "Oh, King this temple is not located in a proper place. Further the deity here was not installed at an auspicious time. If this continues the King will come to ruin. That was why the doll cried." On hearing this the King ordered the temple to be completely demolished and the place made a plain ground. The order was carried out and Kalāvati got release from the curse. She went to heaven and told Indra all that had happened. Indra immediately sent Kalāvati to fetch Thīṃṭhākarāla to heaven and then both of them lived happily in heaven. (Tārāṅga 2, Viṣṇaṭīlalambaka, Kathāśārītisāgara).

Tilabhāra. A place situated in the north-east part of Bhārata. (Śloka 53, Chapter 9, Bhīṣma Parva).

Tilottamā. A prominent celestial maiden.

1) Birth. Tilottamā was born to Pradhā, wife of Kaśyapa, grand son of Brahmā and son of Maricī. Alamuṣa, Maṭṭhaśī, Viḍyutparṇa, Abruṇa, Rakṣita, Rambhā, Manorāmā, Subha, Kṛṣṇi, Suṇatā, Suṇājā and Suṇipīyā were all sisters of Tilottamā. (Chapter 63, Ādi Parva).

There is a story about the birth of Tilottamā. Two demons named Sundu and Upasunda obtained invincible powers by doing penance. To make these two brothers quarrel with each other, by directions from Brahmā, Viṣvakarma created Tilottamā. Viṣvakarma collected from all inanimate and animate objects parts of objects beautiful to look at and created the enchanting Tilottamā. Tilottamā was then made to come to the world through the womb of Kaśyapa's wife. Because she was made by the tilamā (small particle) of all the best (uttama) articles of the world she got the name of Tilottamā. (Chapter 215, Ādi Parva).

The good girl named Tilottamā was formerly created by Brahmā from small particles of diamonds. (Śloka 1, Chapter 141, Ānūṣāṇa Parva).

2) How Siva got four heads and Indra a thousand eyes.

When the two demon brothers Sundopasundas were creating great havoc in the world by their cruel and immoral deeds, it was Tilottamā who was deputed by Brahmā to create a split between the brothers. On the eve of her departure to the world she went to Devaloka to bid adieu. Brahmā stood facing south and Siva stood facing north and Tilottamā stood in the centre surrounded by the Devas. Tilottamā circled round the devas worshipping them. Siva was enamoured of her beauty and wanted to see her always and so a face on all the four sides of his head sprang up so that he could see her always as she circled round him. Indra was also enamoured of her and he found his two eyes insufficient to enjoy her beauty. So instantly a thousand eyes sprang up in the face of Indra. (Chapter 215, Ādi Parva).

3) How Tilottamā cursed Sahasrānīka. (See under Sahasrānīka).

4) Tilottamā and Sundopasundas. See under Sunda.

5) Other details.

Tilottamā partook in the Janmotsava (birthday festival) of Arjuna. (Śloka 62, Chapter 122, Mahābhārata).

Timidhvaja. A demon who was ruling in the state of Vaijayantapura. He was called Šambara also. This demon once attacked Devaloka. Indra was not able to kill him. So he sought the help of Daśaratha. Daśaratha went and fought against the demons. Daśaratha was made to faint in the battlefield by the magic of Timidhvaja and Kaikeyi who was there then, took him away and gave him all first aid. Pleased at this Daśaratha promised two boons for her and it was these boons that Kaikeyi demanded of Daśaratha on the advice of Mantharā at the time of the coronation of Śrī Rāma. (Sarga 9, Ayohyā Kīndha, Vālmiki Rāmāyaṇa).

Timingila. A King. Sahadeva defeated this King during his victory campaign in the south. (Śloka 69, Chapter 31, Sahā Parva).

Tiragraha. An ancient place situated on the north-east part of Bhārata. (Śloka 52, Chapter 9, Bhīṣma Parva).

Tirayāṭtam. A form of unrefined drama current in Kerala. This ancient art originally came into being to propitiate some gods. There are others of this kind like 'Muyiĉettu' 'Ṭiyāṭṭam' and 'Ayyappan Pāṭṭu' which all belong to a class of Ritualistic plays.

This folk drama is a colourful pageant devoted to gods. Its artistic value is worth noticing. This is known by different names like 'Ṭira', 'Ṭeyya' and 'Kāliyāṭṭam'. 'Ṭira' in ancient language means 'daiwardasana' (sight of gods) 'Ṭeyya' is the corrupt form of 'daiva'. Tirayāṭṭam is a visible amusement where actors appear dressed as gods. Because the actors dance in the dresses of gods, this is called devāṭṭam also. Teyyāṭṭam is the distorted form of devāṭṭam. Because this is both a Kali (play) and an āṭṭam (dance) this is called Kaliyāṭṭam also.

This is held in different parts of Malabar during the period of January to April. It is a programme of three days. The first programme is to exhibit an Ālakolam. This is done on the night of the first day. The second programme is to exhibit the vellāṭṭukolam which will be done on the second day evening. An indication of this is given on the first night itself. The programme of the second day begins with a dance called Velakkali. On that day there will be worshipping of gods at intervals. The Vellāṭṭukolam begins by five in the evening. The chief actor will present himself before the public in the colourful robes of a god and will begin to dance to the accompaniment of drums and music. As the dance and music continues even those without dresses would start dancing. Gradually sounds of pop-guns and instrumental music will rend the air. The chief dancer after dancing for some-time would place a stool before the temple and spread a white cloth on it. Then the dancer would sit in meditation and do the ceremony called 'calling the gods'. He would then pray to the gods to bless the function and appear at the zodiacal sign of Virgin. The dance and music start again. Then the people assembled would throw rice and flower into the cloth on the stool. The dancer-god holds a weapon in his hand and changes it often making huge uproars. Then after finishing the ceremonies like Kāviṭṭu and Arulappāṭu, the Vellāṭṭakkarānretires. Then another actor in the dress of another god appears as Vellāṭṭak-kāran and repeats the programme of his predecessor. Because the dance (āṭam) is done before a white (vella) cloth the dance is called Vellāṭam.

After the vellāṭam before midnight Tirayāṭṭam begins. The dresses of the teyyas differ slightly from each other. Some Tirās wear jackets and skirts while some wear lower garlands made of Tulasi leaves (basil plant) and ceṭti (jungle geranium). All the Tirās rush to the temple in great spirit and they are followed by lamp-holders and torch-bearers to the accompaniment of loud sounds of musical instruments and uproars from the spectators. When the first round of dances is over, the ‘Teyya’ stands dancing, pouring blessings to the people and deciding ways of atonecunt for the sins done. Then food is offered to the gods and the function ends with a ‘Vela’ circling the temple.

TIRUṆṆĀNASAMBANDHA (R.). He was one of the four Dāksinātīya Saivatācāryās. He lived during the early part of the seventh century. The book on Dāksinātīya saivism is called Tirumura. There are twelve songs in that book. They were compiled by Nambiyāndar Nambi who lived during the period of Rājarāja Cola. The first seven of these are devotional songs called Tevāras. They were composed jointly by Tirūṇānasambandhar, Tirunāvukkarāsaar and Sundaramūrti. The first three tevāras are of Tirūṇānasambandhar.

TIRUṆṆĀNASAMBANDHA (R.). He was born in the village of Śīrkaḻhi (Brahmapura) near Kumbhakona in the district of Tanjīvūr. His father was Śivapādarāya and mother Bhagavatīyar. Once when Śivapādarāya went to bathe in the temple tank called Brahmatirtha he took along with him his son Sambandhar also. Keeping his son on the steps of the tank Śivapādarāya plunged himself into the waters. Śiva and Pārvati who came that way saw the child sitting alone and Pārvati went and fed him with her breast-milk. From that moment onwards the child started singing songs in praise of Śiva and Pārvati. When he grew up, he did many wonderful deeds visiting many Śiva temples of Pāndirājāya. His father fixed up a marriage for him and the bride’s party assembled even before time at the Cidambara temple. Tirūṇānasambandhar came there in time and standing before the temple deity sang a song in praise of Śiva. The song was greatly appealing and at the end of the song before all those assembled there Sambandhar to the astonishment of all merged with the deity.

TIRUNĀVUKKARĀSAAR (R.). He was a Saivaite like Tirūṇānasambandhar (Refer above) and a disciple also of the latter. He was born in the village of Tirūṇāvur in South Arcot district. His father was Pugalāvar and mother Madiniyā both of whom were Vellāḷas. They got a daughter named Tilakavatīyar and a son named Marulnikkivār. It was this Marulnikkiyār who became famous as Tirūṇāvukkara’ar. This siddha who acquired divine knowledge has composed 4900 songs in praise of Śiva of which only 312 are in use now.
my dreams no other person than my husband has entered my thoughts, let me reach the other shore safe.”

So saying Sita entered the water and the goddess of Earth placed her in her lap and took her to the other shore. Sita did not get even wet. All the sages called her ‘Mahásiddhi’ meaning supremely chaste woman.

(Taranga 1, A lánikávardhānabaka, Katháśaritságara).

TIṬTIKA. A place of habitation in ancient Bhārata. (Śloka 51, Chapter 50, Bhīṣma Parva).

TIṬTIKA I. A kind of bird. To know about the origin of this bird see under the head Trīśiras.

TIṬTIKA II. A celebrated serpent born to the sage Kaśyapa of Kadrū, his wife. (Śloka 15, Chapter 35, Adi Parva).

TIṬTIKA III. A sage who was a member of the council of Yudhīśthira. (Śloka 12, Chapter 4, Sābha Parva).

TIṬTIKA IV. A special breed of horses. Arjuna got this breed from Gandharvanagara during his victory campaign. (Śloka 6, Chapter 28, Sābha Parva).

TOLA. A great satirical poet of the Malayalam Literature. A great humorist, Sanskrit scholar and actor, he was minister to Bhāskara Ravi Varman who was ruler of Kerala during the period from 978 to 1027 A.D. According to Kondugallur Kunjikkuttan Tampurān, a great Sanskrit scholar and poet, Tola was born in Kondoliññaru in the village of Airānikkulam near Aḏur in Cochin in a Nambūdīri family. His original name was Nilakaṅña. When he was a young man, he was ostracised from his community for having had illicit connections with a low-caste servant maid named Cakki. He was wearing then a deerskin belt (Tol) on his body as the usual mark of Brahmacārins (bachelors) and he threw it away of his own accord earning for him the name Tola. There is another version that Tola is the decayed form of ‘Atula’ meaning matchless. He was mainly interested in writing funny ridicules. There are many such poems now available believed to be those of Tola.

TOMARA. A place of habitation situated on the north-east part of Bhārata. (Śloka 69, Chapter 9, Bhīṣma Parva).

Toraṇaspāṭikā. Duryodhana decided to make the Pāṇḍavas beggars by defeating them in a false game of dice. Dhṛtarāṣṭra stood as an accomplice to that. To play the game Dhṛtarāṣṭra constructed a palace and that palace was called Toraṇaspāṭikā.

That diamond-studded palace had a thousand pillars and a hundred entrances. It had crystal fortresses and golden thrones in all the chambers. This palace was called Dyūtabhavana also. (Chapter 56, Sābha Parva).

TRAISĀNI. A King of the family of Turvasu. He was the father of Kārashmanda. (See under Vaiśāvali).

TRAVALI (TRAIBALI). A sage. He shone as a membe in the court of Yudhīśthira. (Śloka 13, Chapter 4, Sābha Parva).

TRAVARṆIKĀ (S). Brahmins, Kṣatriyas and Vaiśyas are the three castes of people called TravarṆikās.

TRASADASYU. A King of the Iksvāku dynasty. He accepted sannyāsa (ascetic life) and became a Rājārṣi.

1) Genealogy. Descending in order from Vīśṇu-Brahma-Marici-Kaśyapa-Vivasvān-Vivasvān Manu-Iksvāku-Vikuki-Sa-āda-Puranājaya (Kakutsthā)-Anena-Pṛthuśva-Pracina-jīt-Yuvanāśa-Mandhātā-Puruṅkutsa-Trasadayu.

2) Other details.

(i) Because he made dasyus ‘evil people’ ‘tras’ (to tremble with fear) he got the name of Trasadayu.

(7th Skandha, Devī Bhāgavata).

(ii) The Aśvinidevas once saved him from defeat in a fight. (Sūktā 112, Maṇḍala 1, Rgveda).

(iii) Once Agastya, Śrutavā and Bradhnāśva, three eminent sages, came to the country of Trasadayu. On hearing that the sages were coming, Trasadayu abandoned all his work and went to receive the sages at the state boundary. He asked them the purpose of their visit and they said they wanted some money. The King then showed them his accounts and convinced them that he was poor. (Śloka 16, Chapter 98, Vana Parva).

(iv) Trasadayu was one among those whose name should be remembered early in the morning. (Śloka 55, Chapter 165, Anuśīṣana Parva).

TRASAREÑU. An ancient measure of weight of metals. Jālavāragate bhānau Yaṭ śukṣmaṁ dṛṣṭaye rajah / Prathamam tat pramāpānāṁ Trasareñuḥ pracaksate. // (Śloka 132, Chapter 8, Manusmṛti).

Eight trasareṇus make one Īru. Three īrus make one Maṅkaṭūku. Three maṅkaṭukus make one Venkāṭuku. Six venkāṭukus make one Madhyaśraya. Three madhyaśrayas make one kunnikkuru. Five kunnikkurus make one Māṣa. Sixteen māṣas make one Suvarṇa. This is the weight of two and a half varāhas. Four suvarṇas make one Pala. Ten palas make one Dhārāṇa.

TRAYI. Veda. Formerly only three Vedas, Rgveda, Yajurveda and Sāmaveda were recognised and so Trayi meaning group of three was used to denote the Vedas. (See under Veda).

TRAYYĀRŪṆA. A King of the Solar dynasty. He was the son of Tridhanva and father of Trisānti. (Chapter 57, Brahmāṇḍa Purāṇa).

TRAYYĀRŪṆI. A sage of the line of disciples of Vyāsa. (See under Guruparampara).

TRETĀYUGA. Second of the four yugas. Kṛtayuga, Tretāyuga, Dwāparayuga, and Kaliyuga are the four yugas. There are three thousand deva-varṣas (divine years) in Tretāyuga.

Śrī Rāma was born at the end of Tretāyuga. Tretāyuga came to an end in B.C. 867100. Śrī Rāma ruled the country for eleven thousand years.

Daśa-varṣa-sahāsāṇi Daśa-varṣa-stañāṇi ca / Rāmo rājyamupāsītvā Brahmālakom prayaśyatī // (Vālmiki Rāmāyaṇa).

(After serving his land for ten thousand years and another ten hundred years ten thousand plus thousand years) Śrī Rāma will go to Brahmāloka. When Rāma took over the reins of administration he was only forty years old. See under Manvantara and yuga. (Classical Sanskrit Literature).

TRIBHĀṆU. A King born of the family of Yayāti. (9th Skandha, Bhāgavata).

TRASADAYU. The son born to Agastya of Lopāmudrā. (See under Idharmāvāha).
TRIDHĀMĀ. The tenth incarnation of Śiva. At this time Bhrigu Mahārṣi was Vyāsa. (Śiva Purāṇa, Satarudrasaṁhitā).

TRIDHANVĀ. A King of the Solar dynasty who was the grandfather of Trisāṅku. (7th Skandha, Devī Bhāgavata).

TRIDĪVĀ. A river of Bhārata. (Chapter 9, Bhīṣma Parva).

TRIGĀNGA. A holy place. (Śloka 29, Chapter 84, Vana Parva).

TRIGARTĀ. A powerful kingdom of ancient Bhārata. There are several references in the Mahābhārata to the Kings of Trigartā. The following are a few of them worth noticing:

(i) The Pāṇḍavas passed through the country of Trigartā while they were wandering in the forests after the fire accident at the waxpalace. (Śloka 2, Chapter 155, Ādi Parva).

(ii) Arjuna during his victory march to the north defeated the King of Trigartā. (Śloka 18, Chapter 27, Sabhā Parva).

(iii) Nakula once conquered the country of Trigartā. (Śloka 7, Chapter 32, Sabhā Parva).

(iv) The Kings of Trigartā used to pay tribute to Dharmaputra. (Śabha Parva, Chapter 52, Sloka 14).

(v) A King of Trigartā once killed the horses tied to the chariot of Dharmaputra and then committed suicide. (Śloka 12, Chapter 271, Vana Parva).

(vi) A King of Trigartā named Suratha was slain by Nakula. (Śloka 16, Chapter 271, Vana Parva).

(vii) Āruṇā, King of Trigartā, with his army joined the Kaurava side and carried away the cattle of the King of Viśrāma and also fought with him. Arjuna during his stay incognito at the palace of the King of Viśrāma killed many Trigartās. (Chapter 32, Viśrāma Parva).

(viii) Āruṇā, King of Trigartā, took the King of Viśrāma as a captive and enraged at this Bhimasena was about to kill Āruṇā when Arjuna intervened and stopped him from that. (Chapter 23, Viśrāma Parva).

(ix) Satyaratī, King of Trigartā, had four brothers and the Pāṇḍavas fought against all the five. (Śloka 9, Chapter 166, Udyoga Parva).

(x) In the Garuḍa-vyūha constructed by Bhīṣma (battle array in the shape of a vulture) five Trigartā princes stood at the head of the formation. (Chapter 56, Bhīṣma Parva).

(xi) Arjuna used the Vāyavāstra against the Trigartās in the great battle. (Chapter 102, Bhīṣma Parva).

(xii) Śri Kṛṣṇa once defeated the Trigartās. (Chapter 11, Droṇa Parva).

(xiii) Once Paraśurāma killed many Trigartās. (Chapter 70, Droṇa Parva).

(xiv) There was a fight between Sātyaki and the Trigartās once. (Chapter 181, Droṇa Parva).

(xv) Arjuna who led the sacrificial horse of the Aśvamedha of Dharmaputra created great havoc to the Trigartās. (Chapter 74, Aśvamedha Parva).

(xvi) The Kings of Trigartā live in the court of Yama. (Śloka 20, Chapter 8, Sabhā Parva).

TRIJAṬĀ (GĀRGYA). A sage. Though he was a sage he lived by farming. He had a wife and children and his earnings from farm work were insufficient to make both ends meet. They were living in poverty and it was at that time that Rāma started for his life in exile in the forests. Before he commenced his journey to the forests he gave immense wealth to all the Brahmans who had assembled around him. At that time Trijaṭā never knew about it and when it came to the ears of Trijaṭā’s wife she ran to the fields and persuaded Trijaṭā to go and see Śri Rāma. When Trijaṭā came to the scene, Rāma had almost finished his distribution, but Trijaṭā took courage and pushing forward through the crowd approached Rāma and said “Oh, famous King, I am a poor man with many children. Give something for this poor man who lives by farming.”

Hearing this, Śri Rāma giving him a small stick asked him to throw the stick into the midst of the cattle grazing nearby. The Brahmin tightening his clothes and getting ready threw the stick with all his might to the south. The stick fell beyond a lakk of cattle grazing there. Śri Rāma gave him all the cattle which stood inside the area covered by the stick. (Chapter 32, Ayodhyā Kānda, Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa).

Trijaṭā was the son of Viśvāmitra. (Śloka 53, Chapter 4, Anuśāsana Parva).

TRIJAṬĀ. A servant demoness of the palace of Rāvana. Trijaṭā was one among the demonesses who were deputed to entice Sītā, sitting dejected under the Aśoka tree, to the side of Rāvana. All the demonesses slept around Sītā. Trijaṭā had a dream one night which is described in Chapter 27 of Sundara Kānda thus: “Śri Rāma dressed in pure white robes and accompanied by Lakṣmana dropped to the place from air in a chariot built with ivory and drawn by a thousand swans. After that they came to Sītā on the back of Airavata. Śri Rāma took Sītā in his lap and rose up into the air. They went high to reach the Sun and Sītā was seen putting on the Sun and the moon. Then Airavata which was carrying Rāma, Sītā and Lakṣmana came to the top of Lanka. Then they came to this place, in chariot. Then they travelled to the north in a Puspaka vimāna. Rāvana with oil smeared on his body and looking all red was lying on the ground. His head was clean shaven. He was drinking oil from a pot and was shouting loudly. Then Rāvana went to the south on the back of a donkey. When he had travelled a short distance he fell from the donkey head downwards. Rising from there he was muttering many vulgar words. Then Rāvana sank into a foul-smelling dung-mire. A black woman wearing a red saree and mud smeared all over her body came near him and dragged him to the south. Kumbhakarṇa also was subjected to her torture. All the members of Rāvana’s family were seen smeared with oil. After that they all travelled south again. At that time Rāvana was seen on the back of a hog, Kumbhakarṇa on the back of a camel and Indrajit on the back of a crocodile. Vibhiṣaṇa alone was seen standing near the Puspaka Vimāna on the back of a four-tusked elephant wearing white robes and white garlands and sweet-smelling pastes smeared all over his body and holding a white umbrella with the four ministers by his side and the royal band playing. At that stage the beautiful city of Lanka with its whole army fell into the ocean. Then a monkey messenger of Śri Rāma burnt the city of Lanka. All the women demonesses and Kumbhakarṇa were seen lying in a cow-dung pit wearing red dress.”
TRIKAKUBHĀMĀ

When Trijatā repeated her dream to her companions all were frightened to death. After the Rāma-Kāvana, battle, it is stated in Vālmiki Rāmāyaṇa, that Śrī Rāma gave presents to Trijatā. (Sloka 41, Chapter 291, Vana Parva).

TRIKAKUBHĀMĀ. A synonym of Mahāviṣṇu. (Sloka 20, Chapter 140, Anuśasan Parva).

TRIKUTA. A mountain. There are twenty mountains on the four sides of Mahāmeru including Trikūta. Purāṇas say that the city of Lāṅka, the abode of Rāvaṇa, was at the top of Trikūta. Mahāmeru is at the north of Bhārata. Lāṅka is to the south of Bhārata. Then how is it possible for Lāṅka to be on the top of Trikūta?

There is a story to substantiate this belief. Once there arose a quarrel between Vāsuki and Vyāyuḥbhaṅgāvān and they decided to find out who between the two was more powerful. Vāsuki went and lay round Mahāmeru so tightly that even Vāyu (air) could not enter it. Vāyu got enraged and broke into a cyclone shaking the whole world. Even Mahāmeru began to shake but Vāsuki lay unaffected. The Cyclone began to increase in vigour and the devas were frightened and they went to Mahāviṣṇu accompanied by Śiva and Brahmac. After hearing their story Viṣṇu called Vāsuki and Vāyu to his side and commanded them to stop the quarrel. Vāsuki then unwound a part of his winding and that was from Trikūta. At once Vāyu entered there and separating Trikūta from other parts carried it away and dropped it in the southern sea. It fell to the south of the southern end of Bhārata. Lāṅka is the city built on it by the celebrated architect, Viśvakarmā.

TRILOKĪTILAKA. A Yogesvari mantra. If one mutters this mantra (a sacred prayer addressed to a deity) one hundred and one times daily, one will become omniscient. Not only that, he would be able to move about to any place he wants. The mantra is this: “Hṛńg Gauri, Rudramayī te yogesvari hum phat Svāhā” (6th Skandha, Devī Bhāgavata).

TRINETRA. A minister of Mahiṣāsura. The cabinet of Mahiṣāsura was extremely strong and brilliant. Cikṣura, virile and an expert in military science, was the Defence minister. The great economist, Tāmra, was the minister for finance. Udāraka was the Commander-in-Chief and the three advisory members were Bāskala, Trinetra and Kālabandhaka. Śukrācārya was the minister for education. (5th Skandha, Devī Bhāgavata).

TRIPĀDA. A demon. In the battle between the devas and the devas Subrahmanyā slew this demon. (Sloka 75, Chapter 46, Śalya Parva).

TRIPURA. A phantom city built by Maya. 1) Origin. Kaśyapa Mahāraṇi son of Marici and grand-son of Brahmā had many wives. Of them Aditi got the first place and Diti the second place. Both of them were daughters of Dakṣa. Devas were born of Aditi and the asuras were born of Diti. Armies of asuras under the leadership of Śrīparadma, Sinhavaktra, Tārakāsura, Gomukha, Hiranyākṣa, and Hiranyakaśipu gave immense trouble to the devas. The devas joined together under the leadership of Idrā and fought the asuras. The nectar received from the ocean of Milk always made the devas the conquerors. When Subrahmanyā slew Tārakāsura the asuras became very weak.

At this stage Kamālāksa, Tārakāsra and Vidyunmāli, sons of Tārakāsura, did severe penance and made Brahmā appear before them. They demanded a boon that they would never be killed by anybody in any of the three worlds. Brahmā told them to ask any boon other than that. Then they said: "Great Lord, we must live in three cities and then roam about freely in the three worlds by your grace. Every thousand years all the three of us should join together at a place with our cities. After that meeting, we should separate and roam about freely for another thousand years. If at all there is death for us, it should occur only when we three are together and that also by one arrow." Brahmā granted the boon and disappeared.

The asuras then approached Maya and asked him to construct three separate cities for them. Maya built three wonderful cities. One was with gold, another with silver and the third with iron. Tārakāsra took the golden one, Kamālāksa took the silver one and Vidyunmāli took the iron one. The asuras started living in these cities. The three puras were respectively in Svarga, Aṅkās and the Earth. But each city had the power to travel to any other place at will. The power of controlling these cities was given to Bāna. Hiranya-kaśipu's son was Prahālda. Prahālda's son was Viro- cana. Mahābali was Virocan's son and Bāna was Mahābali's son (Chapter 14, Padma Purāṇa). All these three cities together were named Tripura.

2) Mytasaṁjñānī Vāpi. (The life giving tank). Even with the existence of Tripura the asuras began to die in numbers and the Tripuras thought of a way to escape from this calamity. Hari, son of Tārakāsra, did penance and made Brahmā appear before him in person. According to a request from Hari Brahmā made Maya build a tank wonderful in nature. Brahmā filled the tank with nectar. If any asura died, it was enough if he was dipped in the tank and the dead asura would soon come to life with added strength and vigour. Asuras became immortal since this and the Tripuras started teasing the devas and men with increased ferocity.

3) Consultation with Śiva. The aggrieved devas approached Brahmā and finding him incapable of helping took him to Śiva. Śiva heard everything and assured them that he would kill them when they next met together at the end of a thousand years.

4) Śiva makes preparations. As a first step to the slaughter of the Tripuras, Śiva sent Nārada to Tripura. Nārada by his unusual spiritual powers made the asura women feel more and more attached to the devas. Śiva at that time thinking about the convenience for a fight with the Tripuras came and settled down on the shores of the river Narmadā. That was how Narmadā became a holy river. (Chapter 13, Padma Purāṇa).

Śiva had to make grand preparations for a fight with the Tripuras. He invoked half the strength of the devas to himself to make Śivaśakti (Javelin of Śiva) greater than Asuraśakti. The devas made Viśvakarmā construct a special chariot for Śiva. On the banks of the river Narmadā at a place which became renowned as Maheśvara Śiva stayed for a thousand years thinking about the fight with the Tripuras. He made the mountain of Mandara his bow, Vāsuki, the string and Viṣṇu his arrow. He installed Agni at the tip and Vāyu at the bottom of the arrow. Four devas stood as horses to his chariot. The earth itself was the chariot and all the animate and inanimate objects of the devaloka arrayed at different parts of the chariot. On the wheels stood the Aśvindevas and Cakrāpāṇi stayed on the axle. Gandharvas took places on the spokes. Indra stayed on the bow and Vāśiṇvaṇa on the arrow. Yama took his place on the right hand and the dreadful Kāla on the left hand. Brahmā acted as the charioteer. Equipped thus, Siva stayed in the godly chariot for a thousand years. When the three cities joined together in the sky Siva split the cities by his three-forked spike. Then he sent an arrow to the cities. Bad omens began to appear in Tripura. People became lifeless in the cities. Soon an arrow from Siva burnt the cities and the Tripuras were burnt to death. (7th Skandha, Bhāgavata; Chapters 31 to 34, Padma Purāṇa; Chapters 33 and 34, Karṇa Parva).

TRIPURI. An ancient country of South India, Sahadeva during his victory march conquered this country. (Śloka 60, Chapter 31, Sabhā Parva).

TRIRATHIKA (S). (Three charioteers). Aśvatthāmā, Krpa and Śātyaki, the three eminent bow-men who took part in the Bhrārata battle were called Trirathikas meaning three great charioteers. (See under Aśvat-thāmā).

2) Father discards him. When Satyavrata grew up he became a lewd, justfult imprudent man. One day while he was leading such a contemptuous life, a marriage was being conducted in a brahmin house. Guests had assembled, the bridgroom had come and the ceremony was about to start when Satyavrata entered the marriage hall and carried away by force the bride to the shock of all those present there. Some of the Brahmins guests immediately went to Trayyārūna and told him what a shameful crime his son had committed. The enraged father at once sent Satyavrata out of the palace. Satyavrata left the country altogether and went and stayed in a colony of harijans. Though he lived with those low-caste people he did not adopt their mode of living. He went out daily to the forests with his bow and arrow and made his food. He never felt any animosity towards his father who had thus sent him out from his country. He thought thus “Of course, my father got terribly angry when he heard the complaints of the Brahmins and in that mood punished me thus, though the punishment was a bit too much. But our family preceptor Vasistha, who knows everything, who is a moralist and a righteous man, who has the knowledge and authority to prescribe atonement for all sins, did severe punishment. That was very hard.” As he thought more about it in this vein, he felt a great hatred towards Vasistha.

3) Satyavrata and Viśvāmitra’s family. When his only son Satyavrata was turned out from the family, King Trayyārūna was greatly distressed. He went to the forests to do penance to get another son. At that time the country did not have rains for twelve successive years as a punishment for the King for sending out his son. The people suffered much. Among the people who were suffering were the wife and children of Viśvāmitra. Viśvāmitra at that time had gone to the shores of river Kauśikī for doing penance. Viśvāmitra’s family consisting of his wife and three sons during that famine lived in hunger. At last the mother decided to sell the middle son and buy food with the money received by the sale. She put a rope made of darbha grass round the neck of the boy and took him to the market. On the way Satyavrata saw them and on hearing their sad story told them not to sell the child. He assured them that he would take care of them till the return of Viśvāmitra. He removed the darbha rope from the child’s neck and the child got the name of Gālava from that time onwards. (Gāla = neck). He promised them he would daily place enough meat at the foot of a tree near the aśrama. True to his promise, he hunted in the forests and brought to the foot of the tree fresh flesh of deer or hare or boar and also fresh fruits. The family lived happily because of him.

4) Curse of Vasiṣṭha and the name of Triṣaṅku. When Trayyārūna went to the forests to do penance, it was Vasiṣṭha who was managing the affairs of the palace. The heir-apparent Satyavrata lived in the hut of a candāla. Every minute Satyavrata’s hatred towards Vasiṣṭha increased in strength. One day Satyavrata did not get any game even after a day’s hunting and at dusk he happened to reach the aśrama of Vasiṣṭha where he saw Nandini, the beloved cow of the sage, grazing by the side of the aśrama. Anger, desire and hunger made him imprudent and without thinking of the consequences Satyavrata killed Nandini and after eating enough to appease his hunger took the rest to feed the family of Viśvāmitra. The wife of Viśvāmitra little knowing that it was cow’s flesh cooked it and ate it.

That night when Vasiṣṭha came to the aśrama he found Nandini missing and he went in search of it. After some time the sage knew that Satyavrata had killed and eaten it. The enraged sage called Satyavrata to his side and cursed him thus “You will from today become a candāla. Three saṅkus (sins) namely wrath of a father, abduction of another man’s wife and consumption of cow’s flesh will give you life-long trouble and thus you will earn a name, Triṣaṅku (Three saṅkus). Instantly Satyavrata became a candāla and started roaming about in the streets.

5) Triṣaṅku becomes King. Triṣaṅku, distressed at heart by a father’s wrath and a Guru’s curse walked about aimlessly in the forests. He expressed his desire to the rṣis and Brahmins to do a yāga and get himself absolved of all his sins. But nobody was willing to help a wretched man cursed and abandoned by both his father and his Guru. Feeling desperate, he decided to commit suicide. He made a great fire-pit and prepared himself to jump into it. Before doing that he prayed to the goddess and when the goddess knew that his devotee would jump into the fire and become ashes, she appeared before him in person and said thus: “Son, why do you try to jump into the fire? Your father has become old and day after tomorrow he will crown you as King and then go to the forests to do penance. Look, there comes your father's minister to take you to the palace." When the goddess disappeared Satyavrata returned to his āśrama in a pensive mood. Nārada went and informed the king of everything that happened in the forest and the king immediately sent his ministers to fetch Satyavrata to the palace. When Satyavrata came the king crowned him as king and then went to the forests for penance.

6) Satyavrata becomes Candāla again. Satyavrata ruled the country for a long time. He was a pious ruler, devoted to god and soon he developed a desire to go to heaven with his mortal body. He approached Vasiṣṭha first for this purpose. But the family preceptor told him there was nothing in the sāstras about any yāga which could help one to go bodily to heaven. Disappointed he approached the sons of Vasiṣṭha who ridiculed him when he told them of his queer desire. Trisāṅku got angry and left them saying "Let me see whether there are others in this country who could send me bodily to heaven." Those arrogant words annoyed Vasiṣṭha and his sons and they cursed him and made him a candāla again. Trisāṅku thereafter did not return to the palace, but went to the forests to live there. He knew if he returned to the palace as a candāla he would not be recognised by his wife and children.

Hariscandra, son of Trisāṅku, heard about the curse on his father and sent the ministers to fetch his father to the palace. But Trisāṅku did not come back and so the ministers made Hariscandra the king of Ayodhyā.

7) Viśvāmitra meets Trisāṅku. When Hariscandra became king, Trisāṅku was living in Amāvāna (forest of Amā) as a great devotee of the goddess. It was at that time that Viśvāmitra returned home after his penance. Viśvāmitra enquired of his wife how they managed to live during the great famine. Then Satyavatī, wife of Viśvāmitra, told him the whole story of how Satyavrata helped them, why he killed Nandini, Vasiṣṭha's cow, and how they ate cow's flesh, how Satyavrata was cursed to be a candāla, how he was called back as king and how he was at that time living in Amāvāna. The eyes of Viśvāmitra became wet when he heard the sorrowful story and he decided to end the candālavatva (state of being a candāla) of Satyavrata. He went straight to Amāvāna and met Trisāṅku there.

8) Trisāṅku Svarga (Heaven of Trisāṅku). Viśvāmitra promised Trisāṅku that he would send him to heaven bodily and made preparations for a yāga. No other sage partook in the yāga because of instructions from Vasiṣṭha. But undaunted, Viśvāmitra conducted the yāga alone and, as the power of his performances increased, Trisāṅku started rising bodily from earth slowly and soon rose up to heaven. When the devas found a Candāla standing with his physical body before the gates of heaven, they ran to Indra and told him. Indra got angry and pushed him out from heaven and Trisāṅku came falling down with his head turned downwards to the earth. Trisāṅku cried loudly calling Viśvāmitra by name. When Viśvāmitra, hearing the noise, looked up he saw poor Trisāṅku descending fast from heaven with his head turned upside down. Viśvāmitra's anger knew no bounds and he roared aloud "Let Trisāṅku stay where he is now." Trisāṅku stopped in mid-air. Indra did not allow Trisāṅku to come up and Viśvāmitra did not allow him to come down. Indra then made a separate heaven for Trisāṅku below the original heaven. Then Viśvāmitra started to create another Indra and devas for the new heaven. The devas were frightened and Indra then approached Viśvāmitra and requested him to desist from his attempt to make duplicate devas promising him that he would give Trisāṅku a seat in his heaven itself. Viśvāmitra agreed to it. At once Indra brought a golden Vīmāna and took him bodily to heaven. (Sargas 57 to 59, Bālakañāḍā, Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa 7th Skandha, Devī Bhāgavata; 9th Skandha, Bhāgavata; Chapter 13, Harivāṁśa; Sundara Kānda, Kamba Rāmāyaṇa; Chapter 71, Ādi Parva; Chapter 12, Sabhā Parva).

TRISĀṅKU II. A philosopher. He is mentioned in several places in Taittirīyopaniśad.

TRISAVAṆA. A sage. When he went to Hastināpura as a messenger of peace, he met Śri Kṛṣṇa on the way. (Chapter 63, Udyoga Parva).

TRISIRAS I. A demon who was a friend of Rāvana. The Khara-Dāsaṇa-Trisiras combination led the attack on Śri Rāma in the forest of Daśākā when Lakṣmana cut off the nose and breasts of the demoness Śūraṇa. Rāma and Lakṣmana killed all the three. Trisiras was a powerful fighter and Śri Rāma's forehead was wounded by an arrow from Trisiras. The latter came and fought in a chariot drawn by four horses. He was killed by an arrow from Rāma. (Sarga 26, Arawya Kāṇḍa, Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa).

TRISIRAS II (VIŚVARŪPA). Once there was a celebrated Prajāpati of name Tvaṣṭā. Though he was of a pious nature interested in the welfare of Brahmins, he hated Indra. He thought of destroying Indra somehow. With that purpose in view he produced by his wife Recāna, a powerful son and named him Viśvarūpa. The boy had three heads and so he was called Trisiras (Tri=Three Siras—head) also. He could use his three heads for three different purposes at a time. He would drink wine with one head and mutter the Veda-mantras by another head and see the world by the third.

Even from boyhood he disliked worldly pleasures and, abandoning even food, started to do penance. During the hot season he would sit amidst fire and during the cold season he would sit in water to do penance. He would stand with his head down and do penance. The penance of Trisiras was so severe that Indra began to get frightened. He sent celestial maidens to stop the penance but all the attempts proved futile before that great ascetic. Then Indra himself riding on Airāvata went and killed the sage by his Vajrāvudha. Indra feared whether Trisiras would come to life again and wreak vengeance on him. So he ordered a carpenter standing nearby to bring to him the three heads separated from the body. The carpenter cut off the heads from the body and as each head fell to the ground several kinds of birds were found escaping from it. From the head which used to mutter Vedic mantras rose the Kapinijāla birds; from the head used for drinking wine rose Kalapiniga birds and from the third rose the Tittirī birds. When the birds thus rose to the air Indra was convinced that Trisiras was dead and he went away. See under Viśvarūpa. (6th Skandha, Devī Bhāgavata).

TRISOKA. A sage who was the son of Kava. The Asvin devas once redeemed the cows belonging to this sage. (Śūkta 112, Anuvāka 16, Maṇḍala 1, Rgveda).
TRISHNAGA. A mountain. This stands to the north of Mahâmeru. Mahâmeru spreads over an area of eighteen thousand square miles and is two thousand miles high. It is surrounded by eight other small mountains two on each side. To the east is Jaṭhara and Devakītu. Pavamāna and Pāryātāra stand to the west while to the south are Kālīsa and Karavīra. On the north arc Triṣṇaga and Makaragiri. (8th Skandha, Devi Bhāgavata).

TRISROTASI. A sacred river. This river lives in the court of Varuṇa worshipping him. (Śloka 23, Chapter 9, Sabhā Parva).

TRISTHANA. A holy place. If one lives and fasts here for one month, one would be able to see God. (Śloka 15, Chapter 25, Anuśāsana Parva).

TRIŚṬUP. One of the seven horses tied to the chariot of Sūrya. The seven horses are: Gāyatrī, Brhatī, Uṣṇik, Jagati, Triṣṭup, Anuṣṭup and Paṅkti. (Chapter 8, Aniśa 2, Viśṇu Purāṇa).

TRISULĀ. A weapon of Siva with the Vaiṣṇava tejas (brilliance of Viṣṇu) obtained by churning Sūrya. Viṣvakarmā made the following: Cakrāyudha (Discus weapon) of Viṣṇu, Triśūla (three-forked spike) of Siva, Puspāka Viṁāna (Aerial chariot) of Kubera and the weapon Śakti of Subrahmanya. (Chapter 2, Aniśa 3, Viṣṇu Purāṇa). (See under Viṣṇukarmā for more details).

TRISULAKHĀṬA. A sacred place. If a man bathes at this place and worships the devas and the manes, he would attain a place equal to that of Gaṇapati. (Chapter 84, Vana Parva).

TRITA. 1) General information. A son of the sage Gautama. He had two brothers called Ekata and Dvīta. (See under Ekata).

2) Other details.
   (i) Ekata, Dvīta and Trīta were born to clean the hands of the devas when they become smeared with the sacrificial butter during the yāgas. Of these Trīta once fell into a well while drawing water and the asuras closed the well. But Trīta escaped opening the top. (Śukta 52, Anuvāka 10, Maṇḍala 1, Rgyveda).
   (ii) Once Ekata, Dvīta and Trīta were stranded in a desert and desperately needed water to quench an increasing thirst. At last they found a well and Trīta after getting down and quenching his thirst brought water to his brothers. The cruel brothers, after drinking the water pushed Trīta into the well and covered the well with the wheel of a bulbocart. Trīta prayed to the Āsvinidevas for help and they appeared before him and rescued him from the well. (Śukta 105, Maṇḍala 1, Rgyveda).

TRIVARGAS (TRIVARÇAKA). A sage who was the son of Aṅgiras. He joined with four other sages and did penance and produced a son named Pāncajanyā equal to the god Agni in splendour. The other four sages were Kaśyapa, Pṛṇa, Cyavan and Agni. (Ślokas 1 to 5, Chapter 220, Vana Parva).

TRIVAKRĀ. A hunchback of a woman who was engaged in the work of making scented cosmetics for Kāṁsa. This woman saw Śrī Kṛṣṇa on his way to the palace of his uncle Kāṁsa in Mathurāpuri. Even at the first sight she felt a great respect and devotion towards Kṛṣṇa and she gave him the scented cosmetics she was carrying to Kāṁsa. Kṛṣṇa placed a foot of his on hers and holding her chin by both the hands raised it up and lo! she stood straight without her hunch. She requested Kṛṣṇa to stay with her that night but Kṛṣṇa left her saying he would stay with her on another day which he did the next day itself. (10th Skandha, Bhāgavata).

TRIVIKRAMAMA. Another name for Vāmana.

TRIVIKRAMASENA. A mighty king.

TRIVIṢṬĀPA. A sacred place inside Kurukṣetra. If one bathes in the holy tank there and worships Śiva one would go to heaven. (Chapter 83, Vana Parva).

TRINĀBINDU I. A lake in the forest of Kāmyaka. The Pāṛḍavas once during their exile went to Trinābindu-saras from Dvaitavana. (Śloka 13, Chapter 258, Vana Parva).

TRINĀBINDU II. A sage. This sage sat and did penance at a place called Rṣṭūrtha. (Chapter 20, Padma Purāṇa).

1) Grandfather of Viṣravas. Viṣravas, father of Rāvaṇa was the son of Māṇini, daughter of Trinābindu. There is a story about him in Uttara Rāmāyana.

Once the sage Pulastya was doing penance in a secluded place in the Himālayas when a few Deva Gandharva women came to that place and disturbed his penance by their dances and noise. The angered sage gave a curse to that place saying that any woman coming to that place would become pregnant. Māṇini, daughter of Trinābindu went to this place unaware of the curse and got pregnant. She came weeping to her father and Trinābindu immediately took his daughter to Pulastya and asked him to marry Māṇini. Pulastya married Māṇini and Viṣravas was born to her.

2) How he cursed Hanumān. Once Hanumān caught hold of a lion and an elephant in fight and tied them each to a post on the two sides of the ārāma of Trinābindu. When the sage stepped out from the hermitage, he was for a moment frightened by the sight of two mighty animals on the sides of his ārāma and knew by his divine powers that the perpetrator of that deed was Hanumān and so he cursed him saying that he would lose all his divine powers forthwith. Hanumān begged for relief and the sage said that he would regain his powers at the time of his going in search of Sītā when another member of his species would remind him of his lost divine powers. Hanumān remained oblivious of his powers till the time when the monkeys were trying to leap to Lāṅkā from the Mahendra mountain on the shores of Bhārata. Jāmbavān, a mighty monkey chief called Hanumān to his side and made him understand the great powers latent in him. From that moment onwards Hanumān regained his lost powers and became his old self. (See under Hanumān).

TRNĀKA. A saintry King. He sat in the court of Yama and worshipped him. (Śloka 17, Chapter 8, Sabhā Parva).

TRNAPA. A Deva Gandharva. He partook in the Jannotsava of Arjuna. (Śloka 56, Chapter 122, Ādi Parva).

TRNASOMĀNGIRAS. A sage who lived in the south of BHārata. (Śloka 34, Chapter 150, Anuśāsana Parva).

TRNĀVARTA. A demon who was the son of Tārakāsura. This demon was living serving Kāṁsa. Kāṁsa once sent Trnāvarta to kill Kṛṣṇa growing up in Ambāḍi. Trṇāvarta, in magic disguise went to the house of Nandagopa. Even when he entered the place bad omens were visible. Yasodā was breast-feeding baby Kṛṣṇa keeping the babe in her lap. Soon Yasodā felt the babe gaining weight and very soon she felt the weight unbearable and rose up to place the child on a mat on the ground. But even before that Yasodā was fixed to the ground by the weight of the babe. But somehow she placed the babe on a mat on the ground and went out to wash her hands and face. When she came back she could not find the babe on the mat. Trṇāvarta had come in the form of whirl-wind and had already carried away the child. But after some time the weight of the babe increased so much that Trṇāvarta, unable to carry the weight, wanted to drop the child to the ground. But the child stuck on to his neck and breast tightly and Trṇāvarta finding no escape from the tight hold which suffocated him, fell to the ground dead on a hard rock. (10th Skandha, Bhāgavata).

TRṬĪYĀ. A river. This river sat in the court of Varuṇa worshipping him. (Śloka 21, Chapter 9, Sabhā Parva).

TRṬIṬI I. Thirty alpakaḷas make one Trṛṭi. (See under Kālāmāṇa).

TRṬIṬI II. A female attendant of Subrahmanya. (Śloka 17, Chapter 46, Salya Parva).

TRYAKŚA. An ancient place of habitation. When the King of this place went to see Dharmaputra with gīts the gate-keepers did not allow him to enter the palace premises. (Śloka 17, Chapter 51, Sabhā Parva).

TRYAMBAKA. One of the Ekāḍāśa Rudras (eleven Rudras). See under Ekāḍaṭaruḍra.

TUGRA. A King extolled in the Ṛgveda. This King sent his son Bhujyu with a large army by sea to conquer his enemies in dvīpāntara. When they were a long distance away from the shore the boats carrying them capsized in a storm and the prince and army were drowned in the sea. The prince then prayed to the A śvindeva and they saved him and his army from the sea and sent them back to the palace. Those boats could travel both in the sea and the air. (Sūkta 116, Manḍala 1, Ṛgveda, Anuvākā 17).

TUHĀRA. A soldier of Subrahmanya. (Chapter 45, Salya Parva).

TUḤUNḌA. A demon. This demon was born to Kaśyapa of his wife Danu. (Chapter 65, Ādi Parva). Accompanied by Tārakāśana this demon once attacked Subrahmanya. Tuhunda threw an iron mace against Gaṇapati who blocked his chariot. By a single stoné of Gaṇapati, the diamond-studded mace of the demon broke into six pieces. When he found his mace gone the demon caught hold of Gaṇapati and beat him with a spiked club on his forehead. Gaṇapati cut him with his weapon (Axe) ‘Veṣamazu’. The demon fell to the ground in two pieces but still his hold on Gaṇapati was not released. Gaṇapati tried his best but could not loosen the hold. Then Kundodara, a leader of the attendants of Gaṇapati smashed the hands of Tuhunda with an iron mace. Tuhunda was killed thus. (Chapter 65, Viṣṇu Purāṇa).

This Tuhunda was born in his next life in the world as a King called Senābinduna. (Śloka 19, Chapter 67, Ādi Parva).

TULADHARA. A charitable and righteous Vaśya who lived in Kāśi. He gave the sage Jājali dharmapadeśa and both of them entered heaven. (See under Jājali).

TULĀPURIṢADĀNA. See under Merudāna.

TULASI. (Holy Basil plant.)

1) General information. Tulasī is a plant held most sacred by the Hindus. There is a Purānic background for Tulasī attaining this spiritualistic importance. In fact it is Mahālakṣmi, wife of Viṣṇu, who had herself taken the form of Tulasī. There is a story about it in Devī Bhāgavata.

2) The curse of Sarvasvati. Sarvasvati, Gaṅgā and Lākṣmī were all, in the beginning, wives of Mahāviṣṇu. The Lord loved all the three equally. One day all the four were sitting together when Gaṅgā sent lustful glances at Viṣṇu which was immediately noticed by both Sarvasvati and Lākṣmī. Sarvasvati got angry and rising up caught hold of the hair of Gaṅgā and dragged her to the ground. Lākṣmī then caught hold of Sarvasvati to prevent further assault but Sarvasvati then poured all her rage on Lākṣmī and cursed her to be born as a plant on earth. Gaṅgādevī could not bear this and she cursed Sarvasvati to be born as a river on earth. Sarvasvati retorted with a curse that Gaṅgā also would be born as a river. When the whole tumult was over Viṣṇu called Lākṣmī to his side and said—“Oh Devī, do not worry. Things have happened as predestined. You go and be born as the daughter of Dharmadhvaja and grow up there. From there by divine grace you will be transformed into a plant sacred enough to make all the three worlds pure. That plant will be named Tulasī. When you will be thus living as Tulasī, a demon named Saṅkhacāda with part of my virile strength will be born and he will marry you. Then you can come back to me. The holy river Padmavati will also be another form of your spirit.”

3) The story of Dharmadhvaja. Who was this Dharmadhvaja to whom was born Mahālakṣmī as a daughter? In times of old there was a Manu called Dakṣaśāvārṇi who was extremely virtuous and a part of Viṣṇu. Descending from Dakṣaśāvārṇi were Brahmaśāvārṇi-Dharmāśāvārṇi-Rudrāśāvārṇi—Devasvārṇi—Indrāśāvārṇi Viṣṇadhvaja. This last named was a great devotee of Siva and because of his great affection for this devotee Siva lived a whole period of a devyuga in the ādrama of Viṣṇadhvaja. King Viṣṇadhvaja by an edict prohibited the worship of any other deity than Siva in his country. Even the worship of Mahālakṣmī ordained by the Vedas during the month of Bhādra (September) became extinct. All Yāgas and worship of Viṣṇu came to a stop. Sūrya (Sun-god) got angry at this belittling of other gods than Siva and cursed the King Viṣṇadhvaja that he would cease to be prosperous. Siva did not like it and he went to punish Sūrya holding his trident in his hand. Sūrya was frightened and he approached his father Kaśyapa. Kaśyapa and Sūrya went to Brahmā and acquainted him with all details. Brahmā also was helpless in the matter and so all the three of them went to Mahāviṣṇu. They prostrated before Viṣṇu and told him all. At that time Siva also came there. Addressing all of them Viṣṇu said “Oh, Devas, within this half an hour twentyone yugas have passed by on the earth. He about whom you have come to speak to me is dead and gone. Even his son Rathadhvaja is dead. The latter has two sons named Dharmadhvaja and Kuṇadhvaja. They are dull and splendidless now because of the curse of Sūrya and are now worshipping Lākṣmī.” Saying thus Viṣṇu disappeared.

4) Birth of Tulasī. Dharmadhvaja and Kuśadhvaja did penance to propitiate Mahālakṣmi. Kuśadhvaja had a wife named Mādhavī. Mahālakṣmi entered her womb as an embryo and after a hundred years Mādhavī gave birth to a daughter. Even at the time of birth the child looked like a matured girl and was extremely pretty. She was therefore, called Tulasī, meaning matchless. (Tula = match). This Tulasī abandoning all worldly pleasures went to Badarikāśrama and started doing penance there with the prayer that Mahāviṣṇu should become her husband. She did penance for twenty-four thousand years sitting amidst fire in the hot season and sitting in water in the cold season and taking only fruits and water as food. Then she did penance for another thirty thousand years eating leaves only, another forty thousand years taking air only as food and another ten thousand years without any food. At this stage Brahmā appeared and asked her the object of her Penance. She replied she wanted Mahāviṣṇu to be her husband. Hearing this Brahmā said thus—"Devi, you know the cowboy Sudāma born of a part of Śrī Kṛṣṇa. That brilliant cowboy has now been born on earth, due to a curse of Rādhā, as a demon named Saṅkhacūḍa. He is matchlessly eminent and has once fallen in love with you seeing you at Goloka. You will become his wife and later you can become the wife of Nārāyana. At that time a part of your divine body will remain on earth as a plant named Tulasī. Tulasī will become the most sacred of all plants, dear to Viṣṇu, and all worship without using Tulasī leaves would be ineffective.”

5) Marriage of Tulasī. Due to a curse of Rādhā, Sudāma, the cowboy, was born on earth as a demon named Saṅkhacūḍa. He did penance sitting at Badarikāśrama and obtained Viṣṇukavaca. Another object of his was to marry Tulasī. He obtained a boon from Brahmā that his death would occur only when the Viṣṇu Kavaca was removed from his body and the chastity of his wife was lost. At that time Saṅkhacūḍa and Tulasī met each other in the forests and were married. Saṅkhacūḍa, brilliant and majestic, went about with Tulasī in amorous sports creating jealousy even among the devas. His arrogance gave innumerable troubles to the devas and they along with Brahmā and Śrīva approached Mahāviṣṇu for a remedy. Viṣṇu then sent Śrīva with his spike to kill Saṅkhacūḍa and he himself started to molest the chastity of his wife Tulasī. Saṅkhacūḍa took leave of Tulasī to go and fight with Śrīva. When Tulasī was thus left alone, Mahāviṣṇu in the form of Saṅkhacūḍa approached Tulasī and after some preliminary talks entered into sexual acts. Tulasī found some difference in the usual sexual methods and suspecting foul play jumped up to curse the impostor. At once Mahāviṣṇu appeared in his true form and said "You have been doing penance for a long time to get me as your husband. Your husband Saṅkhacūḍa was the chief of my Pārśadas, Sudāma. It is time for him to go back to Goloka getting himself released from the curse. By this time Śrīva would have killed him and he would have gone to Goloka as Sudāma. You can now abandon your body and come with me to Viṣṇu to enjoy life as my wife.

Your body will decay and become a holy river named Gandakī; your hair will become Tulasī plant the leaves of which will be held sacred in all the three worlds.’’

Tulasī then changed herself into the form of Lakṣmī and went to Viṣṇu to plant the leaves of Tulasī twig will attain a permanent place in Viṣṇuloka. Even great sinners would be absolved of their sins if their dead bodies are cremated with Tulasī twigs. If at the time of death one thinks of God and mutters His name and if his dead body is later cremated with Tulasī twigs, he would have no rebirths. Even he who has done a crore of sins would attain mokṣa if at the time of cremating his dead body a piece of Tulasī twig is placed at the bottom of the funeral pyre. Just as all waters become pure by the union with Gaṅgā water, all firewood is made pure by the addition of a small piece of Tulasī twig. If the dead body of one is cremated using Tulasī twigs alone, one’s sins for a crore of Kalpa years would be washed away. Yamadūtas would keep away from one whose dead body is cremated with Tulasī twigs and servants of Viṣṇu would come near. If a light is burnt for Viṣṇu with a Tulasī stick it would be equal to burning several lakhs of lights for Viṣṇu. If one makes the Tulasī leaves into a paste and smears it on one’s body and then worships Viṣṇu for one day, one would be getting the benefit of a hundred ordinary worship and also the benefit of doing a hundred godānas. (gifts of cows). (Chapter 24, Padma Purāṇa).

TUMBURU I. A Deva Gandharva. He was the best musician among the Gandharvas.

1) Birth. Tumburu was the son of Kaśyapa, son of Marīci and grandson of Brahmā, born of his wife Pradhā. Of the sons of Kaśyapa the four Gandharva sons, Tumburu, Bāhu, Hāhā and Hūhū were noted for their sweet and pleasant conversation.

2) Tumburu and the Pāṇḍavas. Mahābhārata states about several occasions when Tumburu has shown a special and deep interest in the Pāṇḍavas. The following few are of special mention—

(i) Tumburu attended the Jamotsava of Arjuna. (Sloka 54, Chapter 122, Adi Parva).
(ii) Once this Gandharva gave Yudhiṣṭhira a hundred horses. (Sloka 24, Chapter 52, Sabhā Parva).
(iii) Tumburu welcomed Arjuna when the latter went to Devaloka at the invitation of Indra. (Vana Parva, Chapter 43, Verse 14).
(iv) Once when the Pāṇḍavas were living incognito in the country of Viraṭa the Kauravas carried away the cattle of the King Arjuna in disguise then fought against the Kauravas and Tumburu watched the fight with interest. (Sloka 12, Chapter 56, Viraṭa Parva).
(v) Tumburu was present at the Aśvamedhayāga of Yudhiṣṭhira. (Sloka 39, Chapter 88, Aśvamedha Parva).

3) How Tumburu was born as Virāṭa. When Rāma and Lakṣmī were in the forests in exile a demon named Virādha attacked them. That demon was none other than Tumburu. Once when Tumburu was living in the city of Kubera he committed a sin and Kubera cursed him and made him into a demon. Kubera had then told him that he would get relief from the curse when he was slain by Rāma, son of Daśaratha. Śrī Rāma killed Virādha and the latter regaining the form of Tumburu left for Gandharvaloka. (See under Virādha).

4) How he cursed Purūravas. It is found in Kathāsaritāgāra that the temporary separation which Purūravas had from Urvāśī was due to a curse by the Gandharvas Tumburu.

After marrying Urvāśī Purūravas once went to Deva-loka at the invitation of Indra. He was invited to help Indra in his fight against the asuras. Indra celebrated the day on which one of the best of the demons, Māyādhara was killed. Rambhā was dancing before Ācārya Tumburu on the occasion and Purūravas finding fault with her dance mocked at her. Rambhā felt insulted and asked the King thus: "Fool of a King, what do you know of the divine dances of Deva-loka?" Purūravas retorted that he had learnt more of dancing from Urvāśī than what her successor Tumburu knew. Tumburu got angry and cursed Purūravas that he would live separated from Urvāśī till he did penance to please Mahāviṣṇu. The Gandharvas then carried away Urvāśī from Purūravas. (See under Purūravas).

5) Other details.

(i) Tumburu was a member of the court of Indra. (Sloka 14, Chapter 7, Sabhā Parva).

(ii) Tumburu was a member of the court of Kubera. (Sloka 26, Chapter 10, Sabhā Parva).

(iii) The songs of Tumburu who was a worshipper of Kubera used to be heard from the mountain of Gandhamādana on the full-moon day. (Sloka 29, Chapter 159, Vana Parva).

TUMBURU II. A sage.

Some details.

(i) This sage was one among the many sages who came from the north to visit Śrī Rāma on his return to Ayodhyā after the exile. Those who came from the north were—Kaśyapa, Vasiṣṭha, Atri, Viśvāmitra, Gautama, Jamadagni, Bharadvāja, Sanakādīs, Sarabhanga, Durvāsas, Mataṅga, Vibhāṅdaka and Tumburu. (Uttara Rāmāyana).

(ii) Tumburu was one among the rishis who visited Bhīṣma lying on his bed of arrows. (Chapter 47, Sānti Parva).

TUNḍA. A King. The Pāṇḍavas invited this King to take part in the great Mahābhārata battle. (Sloka 21, Chapter 4, Udyoga Parva).

TUNḍA. A demon. This demon who was one among the army of Rāvaṇa fought against the monkey leader, Nala, in the Rāma-Rāvana battle. (Sloka 9, Chapter 285, Vana Parva).

TUNDIKERA. An ancient place of Bhārata. The people of this place took part in the great Mahābhārata battle. (Sloka 20, Chapter 17, Drona Parva).

TUNGAKARANYA. A holy place. The sage Sārasvata did Devatādhyaṇa on behalf of other sages at this place. (Sloka 46, Chapter 83, Vana Parva).

TUNGAṆEṆA. An ancient holy river of Bhārata. People of Bhāratae came pure by drinking the water of this river. (Sloka 27, Chapter 6, Bhīṣma Parva).

TURIYA. A state of existence of Man. (See under Jāgrat).

TURVĀSA. A King extolled in the Rgveda. Nārya, Turvāsa and Turvīti were contemporaries. (Sūktā 54, Manḍala 1, Rgveda).

TURVASU. A son born to Yayāti of his wife Devayāni. Yayāti had two wives Sārmīṭhā and Devayāni. Of Sārmīṭhā, Yayāti had three sons named Drūlyu, Anudrubhya and Pūru and of Devayāni, two sons named Yadu and Turvasu.

Once Yayāti called all his five sons to his side and asked them if any one of them would be willing to exchange his youth with his father’s old age. All the four refused but Pūru agreed to accede to his father’s request. Yayāti then cursed Turvasu and all the other three. (See under Yayāti).

TURVAYANA. A King extolled in the Rgveda. (Manḍala 1, Rgveda).

TURVITI. A King extolled in the Rgveda.

TURVITI I. A King. But since in some places he is mentioned as a sage, it must be presumed that he must have been a King who had become a sannyāsin during the latter part of his life. Once this sage was drowned and Indra came in time and rescued him. (Sūktā 61, Manḍala 1, Rgveda).

TUSĀRA. A place of habitation of ancient Bhārata. Scholars are of opinion that the present Tukhārīstan was the ancient Tuṣāra. The people of this place used to be called Tuṣāras and their King Tuṣāra. The King of Tuṣāra was the store-keeper during the Rājasuyayajna of Yuddhiṣṭhira. (Chapter 51, Vana Parva). The Pāṇḍavas during their exile crossed this country of Tuṣāra on their way to Dwaitavana from the mountain of Gandhamādana. During the great battle, the Tuṣāras arrayed themselves on the right side of the Krauṇḍa Vyūha (an army formation in the shape of a stork) constructed by Bhīṣma. (Sloka 21, Chapter 75, Bhīṣma Parva). There is a statement in Chapter 65 of Sānti Parva that a barbarous tribe called Tuṣāras lived in the country of Māndhātā.

TUṢIṬAS. There were twelve good devas called Tuṣitas in the Cākṣuṣa Manvantara. When the Cākṣuṣa Manvantara ended and the Vaivasvata Manvantara commenced all the twelve were born as sons of Kaśyapa of his wife Aditi. Because they were born of Aditi they were called Dvādaśādityas. They were Viṣṇu etc. Thus the Tuṣitas of the Cākṣuṣa Manvantara were the Dvādaśādityas of Vaivasvata Manvantara. (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Amśa 1, Chapter 15).

TUṢṬI. A daughter of Dakṣa. She became the wife of Dharma-deva. Dharma-deva accepted as wives the thirteen daughters of Dakṣa including Tuṣṭi. Their younger sister Khyāṭi etc were married to Marici etc. (Chapter 7, Amśa 1, Viṣṇu Purāṇa).

TUṢṬIMĀN. A King of the Yayāti dynasty. (9th Skandha, Bhāgavata).

TVAṢṬĀ I. A Prajāpati. This Prajāpati was an asura also. (Sūktā 94, Anuvāka 14, Manḍala 1, Rgveda).

1) Birth. There are contradictory statements in the Purāṇas regarding the birth of Tvaṣṭā.

(a) Viśvakarmā got four sons named Ahirbudhnya, Tvaṣṭā Ajākṣapāt and Rudra. The great ascetic Viṣṇavṛūpa was the son of Tvaṣṭā. (Chapter 15, Amśa 1, Viṣṇu Purāṇa).
(b) Kaśyapa got as his sons the Ekādaśarudras of his wife Surabhi. Surabhi who became pure by penance got by the grace of Mahādeva five other sons named Aja, Ekapāt, Ahirbudhniya, Tvaṣṭā and Rudra. The noble and famous Viśvarūpa was the son of Tvaṣṭā. (Chapter 18, Agni Purāṇa).

c) Kaśyapa Mahārāja got a son named Tvaṣṭā of his wife Aditi. (Sloka 34, Chapter 226, Ādi Parva).

Because of such varied statements it is not possible to say whose son Tvaṣṭā was.

2) Indra's enemy. Even from the beginning, Tvaṣṭā hated Indra. Tvaṣṭā begot of his wife Reçanā a son named Viśvarūpa to kill Indra. Viśvarūpa was the younger brother of Sanniveśa. Viśvarūpa was called Trīśiras also. (See under Trīśiras). While Viśvarūpa was doing penance Indra killed him by his Vajrāyudha. Enraged at this Tvaṣṭā produced another asura named Vṛtra to kill Indra. (See under Vṛtra). Indra killed Vṛtraśura also. At last greatly disappointed Tvaṣṭā cursed Indra that he would suffer from Putradhukha (loss of son) and then went to the mount Meru to do penance.

3) Other details.

(i) Tvaṣṭā also treated as a Rudra. (Chapter 15, Arītā I, Viśṇu Purāṇa).

(ii) When the forest of Khāṇḍava was burnt, he stood on the side of Indra and fought against Kṛṣṇa and Arjuna. He separated huge portions from the mountain and threw them against Arjuna and Kṛṣṇa. (Sloka 34, Chapter 226, Ādi Parva).

(iii) Tvaṣṭā shines in the court of Indra. (Sloka 14, Chapter 7, Saibaba Parva).

(iv) Kuśera, daughter of Tvaṣṭā was once abducted by Narakāśura. (Chapter 38, Dākṣinātya Pātha, Saibaba Parva).

(v) Viśvākarmā also used to be called Tvaṣṭā. (Sloka 24, Chapter 100, Vana Parva).

(vi) The monkey called Nala was the son of Tvaṣṭā. (Sloka 41, Chapter 283, Vana Parva).

(vii) Tvaṣṭā presented Subrahmānya with two Pīras-dās named Cakra and Anucakra. (Sloka 40, Chapter 45, Śalya Parva).

Tvaṣṭā II. A King of the family of Bharata. This Tvaṣṭā was the son of Bhuvaṇa and father of Viraṇa. (5th Skandha, Bhāgavata).

Tvaṣṭādhara. One of the two sons of Šukrācārya who were deputed to do heinous acts of worship by Šukrā. The other was Atri. (Sloka 37, Chapter 65, Ādi Parva).

U

U (ृ). The letter u means Śiva. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 348).

U (ृ). This letter means 'protection'. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 348).

Ucaka. A King of the Solar dynasty. (Bhāgavata, 9th Skandha).

Ucathyā. A muni in the line of the disciples of Vyāsā. (Bhāgavata, Skandha 12).

Ucāśaśravas I.

1) Birth. A horse which emerged from water during the churning of the sea of Milk. (See under Kaśāśdhi-mathana). Devendra grabbed it the moment he saw it, and thenceforth it became his vehicle. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 23, Verses 33-37).

2) Colour of the horse. Once, during a controversy, Vinata, wife of Kaśyapa, contended that the colour of Ucāśaśravas was white, while another wife of Kaśyapa, Kadru said that its tail was black in colour. It was decided to bet that she who got defeated in this controversy should become the slave of the winner. Because the serpents, the sons of Kadru, cheated Vinata, she had to become Kadru's slave. (See under Vinata). (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 20).

3) Lakṣmīdevi became mare. Devī Bhāgavata relates a story of Mahālakṣmī becoming a mare on account of Ucāśaśravas. King Revanta, son of Sūrya and friend of Indra, once went to Vaiśāla to pay his respects to Bhāgavān Viṣṇu, riding on Ucāśaśravas. Mahālakṣmī, who was then with Viṣṇu was surprised at the arrival of Revanta. Seeing the scintillating form of Ucāśaśravas, her brother, Mahālakṣmī sat looking at the horse unmindful of all other things. (Mahālakṣmī and the horse were both born from the Sea of Milk and hence were sister and brother). Thus occupied Mahālakṣmī did not hear Mahāviṣṇu asking, "Who is this one who comes like a second Cūpiṭ?" Angry at this Viṣṇu said—

"So much attracted by the horse, you have not answered me. Because you enjoy (Ramasi) so much your name in future will be Ramā. You will also become frivolous like an uncultured woman. You have never been constant. Because you felt so much attracted to this horse in my presence, you will be born as a mare in the world of men."

According to this curse Mahālakṣmī had to be born as a mare in the world; the Hehaya dynasty had its origin from her. (See under Ekavīra). (Devī Bhāgavata, Skandha 6).

Ucāśaśravas II. A Mahārāja of the Pūru dynasty. He was one of the six sons of King Avikṣit. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 94, Verse 53).

Ucchikha. A serpent born in the family of Taksāja. It was burnt to death at Janamejaya's serpent yajña. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 57, Verse 9).

Ucchrnga. One of the two attendants given to Skanda by Vindhyā. The other was named Atiṣrīnga. (M.B. Śalya Parva, Chapter 45, Verse 49).

Udanavayu. One of the five life-breaths. The five life-breaths are Prāṇa, Apāṇa, Samāṇa, Udāna and Vyāna.

Udāpāna Tīrtha. A holy bath on the bank of the river Sarasvatī. It is said that Balabhadrā Rāma, while going on a pilgrimage, had visited this holy bath. There is a story showing how this place became a holy bath. Long ago there was a hermit named Gautama, who had three sons called Ekata, Dvita and Trita. The father was much pleased at the dutiful and devotional character of his sons. One day he performed a sacrifice and went to heaven. Then the kings and the priests who were present for the sacrifice began to honour and respect Trita. Ekata and Dvita did not like this. The three brothers performed sacrifices and acquired a large number of cows. With these cows they started for the east. Trita walked before. Ekata and Dvita who were behind, made a consultation and drove the cows another way. Trita walked on in front, alone. On the bank of the Sarasvatī he saw a wolf and getting terrified, he fell into a well in which there was no water. Standing in the well, he imagined a creeper... that was hanging to the well as ‘Soma’ (a herb used as oblation in sacrifice) and performed sacrifice, chanting the Vedas. His chanting was heard in heaven and Brhaspati and other gods came to him and asked him what boon he desired. Trita told them that he only wanted to be saved from the well. Immediately the river Sarasvatī flowed into the well and the waves began to swell. Standing on the waves he praised and glorified the gods. Then he returned home and cursed Ekata and Dvita and transmuted them into wolves. Trita said that their children would become monkeys and cattle. It happened so. The place where the Gods appeared before Trita, became famous and got the name Udāpānatirtha. (M.B. Salya Parva, Chapter 36).

UDĀPEKṢI. A son of Viśvāmitra. He was a Vedāntin. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 4, Stanza 59).

UDĀRAKṢA. A warrior of Śkaṇḍa Deva. (M.B. Salya Parva, Chapter 45, Stanza 63).

UDARASAŅḌĪLYA. A hermit of the Durbar of Indra. (M.B. Sabhā Parva, Chapter 7, Stanza 31).

UDARKA. A minister of Mahiṣāsura. The ministry of Mahiṣāsura was very powerful and efficient. The brave and haughty Cīkṣura was the war minister. Udaraka was the general of the army. (See under Mahiṣāsura).

UDAYAGIRI I. The mountain of the rising. It is supposed by poets that the Sun and the Moon rise from this mountain.

UDAYAGIRI II. An ancient place of pilgrimage. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 94, Stanza 93, that by conducting evening prayer and devotion at this place once, one could obtain the fruits of conducting evening prayer and meditation for twelve years continuously.

UDAYANA. A renowned king of the Candravaṁśa (Lunar dynasty).

2) Birth. There was a city called Kausrāmbī situated in the middle of the famous kingdom known as Vatsa in North India. The palace of king Śatānīka, born of the family of Arjuna, was in Kausrāmbī. Viṣṇumāti was the queen of Śatānīka. She had been childless. One day while Śatānīka was hunting in the forest, he met with the hermit Śaṇḍīlya, by whose blessings Viṣṇumāti conceived and gave birth to a son. That son was Sahasrānīka. When he came of age, Śatānīka left the country with his son and went to the heaven to help the gods in their battle with the Asuras, and he died there. Sahasrānīka became a mighty emperor. Once he got an invitation from Indra to go to heaven and help the gods to fight the Asuras. After having defeated the Asuras, one day, he was walking with Indra in the Nandana Park, when he saw the gods playing with their wives in the park. Immediately the unmarried king became thoughtful and Indra read correctly, the reason for the sudden change in the king and said to the king. “Oh King! Don’t be worried. A girl becoming you in every aspect, is born in the world. Her name is Mrgāvati.”

Sahasrānīka was greatly pleased at this and he returned to the earth. In the chariot there were Tilottamā and the charioteer, with the king. The king who was deeply immersed in thinking about Mrgāvati, did not attend to the conversation of Tilottamā, who getting angry cursed him thus:—“May you be separated for fourteen years from the person whose thought has prevented you from attending to what I have been telling you.” The king married Mrgāvati. She became pregnant. One day she told the king about her desire to dip in a pond of blood. The king got a pond ready, filled with the juice of Lākṣā (a kind of wax, the boiled water of which will look like blood) and such other things. Mrgāvati began to dip and splash in the pond of blood. When she was dipping under the juice, taking her to be a large piece of flesh, an eagle took her from the pond and flew away. The king was overwhelmed with grief and fell down. Then the charioteer came down from heaven and informed the king of the curse of Tilottamā, and then he returned.

The eagle left Mrgāvati in the mount of the Rising Sun and flew away. She cried aloud. A huge snake near her to swallow her. Then a divine person appeared there and saved her from the snake and vanished. Then a hermit-boy came there and asked the lonely woman, clad in only one garment, about her story and took her to the hermitage of the hermit Jamadagni who blessed her. After some days she gave birth to a son. At that time an unknown voice was heard saying “This boy would become the most renowned king Udayana and his son would become the supreme Lord of the Vidyādhāras.” Because he was born in the Udayādi (the mount of the Rising Sun) he got the name Udayana. The boy Udayana grew up in the hermitage.

3) Udayana to his father. The hermit Jamadagni who knew the past, present and future performed all the rituals, necessary for a boy of Kāśiṭṭha caste (kingly race) such as Ācula, Upanayana etc. and gave him education in every branch of knowledge. Because of her love and regard for her son, Mrgāvati put on his arm a bangle with the name Sahasrānīka inscribed in it, which she had been wearing so long. One day, while Udayana was walking through the forest, he saw a snake-charmer catching a snake. He felt sorry for the snake. So he gave the bangle to the snake-charmer and set the snake free. When the snake charmer was gone, the snake told Udayana its story. That serpent was Vasūnemi, the elder brother of Vāsuki. Out of gratitude the serpent gave Udayana the famous Lute Ghoṣavatī and betels and taught him the art of making garlands and marks on the forehead which would never fade.

The snake-charmer took the bangle to the capital for sale. Seeing the name of the king inscribed on it, the king’s men took him before the king. He told the king everything. The king who had been suffering for the last fourteen years form the pangs of separation, started for the mount of the Rising Sun, without any loss of time. The hermit Jamadagni gave him his wife Mrgāvati and son Udayana. They all returned to Kausrāmbī.

4) The anointment of Udayana. Sahasrānīka anointed his son Udayana as the heir to his throne, and appointed Yaugandharayaṇa, Rumanvān and Vasantaka, the son. of three ministers, as ministers of Udayana. At the time of the anointment there was a shower of flowers from the sky and an unknown voice said “With the help of these ministers Udayana would bring the whole of the earth under his control.” After a time Sahasrāṇīka went to the Himālayas with his wife for penance.

5) Vasavadatta became Udayana’s wife. A daughter was born to the king of Ujjayini. Her name was Vasavadattā. Her father Caṇḍamahāśena decided to give her in marriage to Udayana the king of Vatsa. How to bring this to pass? Caṇḍamahāśena and Udayana had been enemies. Finally he found out a way. It was to entrust Vasavadattā to Udayana (who was a great teacher of music) for teaching her music. Ultimately he would fall in love with her and thus Udayana would become his son-in-law. This was the plan.

King Caṇḍamahāśena sent a messenger to Kausāmbī. The messenger was sent back with a reply that, if his daughter was sent to Kausāmbī, he would teach her music. Caṇḍamahāśena did not like this. So he decided to take Udayana a prisoner somehow or other. The king had an elephant called Nādāgiri. He ordered for an artificial elephant to be made equal in size to Nādāgiri, and placed some soldiers inside the elephant.

The artificial elephant with soldiers inside it was taken to the great forest in the Vindhya mountain and placed there. The men of Udayana saw this elephant and reported it to the king. Udayana decided to see the huge elephant which had appeared in the Vindhya. Udayana went to the forest and saw the huge elephant standing at a distance. The king found out a plan to catch it. Playing mild notes on his lute, the king alone neared the elephant. As the night was drawing and as he was immersed in music, he did not understand that it was an artificial elephant. As the king was nearing the elephant it went on retreating, and thus got the king away from his men. Then the soldiers got out of the elephant, surrounded the king and took him a prisoner. Thus Udayana began to live in the palace of Caṇḍamahāśena. His work was to teach Vasavadattā music.

The news reached Kausāmbī. Yaungandharāyaṇa entrusted the affairs of the government to Rumanvāṇ and started for Ujjayini with Vasantaka. At Ujjayini they got Yogēśvara, a Brahmārākṣasa as friend. According to his advice Yaungandharāyaṇa took the guise of a mad old man. Vasantaka adopted the guise of a sick man, suffering from pain in the stomach an uncouth figure to look at. They entered the city. The madness of Yaungandharāyaṇa was an entertainment to the people. The ladies of the court liked him much. Vasavadattā invited the madman to the harem. Udayana instantly recognized the mad man. Vasantaka also got admittance to the palace. He told Vasavadattā the story of Lohājaṅgha in an interesting way. (See under Lohājaṅgha) Vasavadattā began to be drawn more and more towards Udayana. She seemed to have forgotten even about the fact that her father was an enemy of Udayana, who had been thinking seriously of means of escape from the palace. Vasavadattā agreed to accompany him. Āśādhaka got Bhadrāvatī, the elephant of Vasavadattā, ready for the flight. In the night Udayana and his retinue got on the elephant Bhadrāvatī and fled from the palace. Kāñcanamālā the maid of Vasavadattā also accompanied her mistress. When they had passed the Vindhya mountain the elephant Bhadrāvatī fell dead. When they all were standing around the dead elephant sadly, they heard an ethereal voice saying, “Oh King! I am a Vidyādhara woman called Māyāvatī. I had been an elephant for so long. The son you are going to get, will also be helped by me. Your wife Vasavadattā also, is a goddess born as a woman purposely.” Next day, all reached the palace of Udayana and the marriage of Udayana and Vasavadattā took place shortly. Caṇḍamahāśena recognized that marriage.

6) Udayana’s marriage with Padmāvatī. Udayana spent his days with Vasavadattā in the harem. The ministers Yaungandharāyaṇa, Rumanvāṇ, Vasantaka and others thought that the behaviour of the King was detrimental to the well-being of the country. They wanted to remove the King from the palace for a little while and to form an alliance with the powerful King of Magadha. By a marriage alliance all these could be achieved. The King of Magadha had a beautiful daughter called Padmāvatī. The ministers began to work with this end in view.

Once Yaungandharāyaṇa took Udayana to the forest of Lāvānaka and stayed there. It was reported to the King of Magadha that the King of Vatsa was drawing near to his kingdom. Fearing an attack from Udayana, the King of Magadha began to think of concluding a treaty with Vatsa. The King of Vatsa used to go for hunting everyday. One day he went to a distant place for hunting, and the minister went to the house of Vasavadattā and informed her of their plans. Though it was not at all palatable to her, she gave her consent and agreed to help them as it was meant for the well- being of the King and the country. Accordingly, Yaungandharāyaṇa took the guise of an old Brahmin, Vasavadattā that of a young Brahmin lady and Vasantaka that of a Brahmin celibate with only one eye. They went to the kingdom of Magadha. Rumanvāṇ set fire to the house of Vasavadattā and spread the rumour that Vasavadattā and Vasantaka had been burnt to death. Yaungandharāyaṇa, Vasavadattā and Vasantaka reached Magadha. They got into the capital and saw Padmāvatī sitting in the garden. The old Brahmin conversed with the princess for a while. She enquired about the young woman who was with him. The old Brahmin replied thus:— “She is my daughter Avantikā. Her husband has left the country. I request you to keep her with you till I find him out and bring him here. She may not like to be separated from her people. So let her brother, the celibate, also be here with her.”

Padmāvatī took them with gladness and Yaungandharāyaṇa, bidding farewell, returned to the forest Lāvānaka. Avantikā and the Celibate lived in the palace with Padmāvatī. Vasavadattā who had learned from Udayana the art of making garlands ans marks on the forehead which would not fade, had prepared them for Padmāvatī.

The King of Vatsa returned to the forest Lāvānaka and found the house of his wife burnt down to ashes. He fell unconscious when he heard that Vasavadattā and Vasantaka had been burnt to death.

The spies of the King of Magadha who were in the forest of Lāvānaka, reported the rumour about the death of Vāsavadattā and Vasantaka to their King in Magadha, who wished to give his daughter Padmāvatī in marriage to Udayana. The marriage proposal was accepted by Udayana and wearing garlands and marks that would not fade Padmāvatī entered the wedding dais. Udayana married Padmāvatī. Yaugandharayāna made the King of Magadha take an oath that he would go for no more aggression. Udayana and his people reached Kauśāmbi. On the way the King happened to see the mark on the forehead and the garland on the neck of Padmāvatī and asked her who had made them. Padmāvatī told the King the story of Avantikā. Udayana was definite that Avantikā was Vāsavadattā herself. Avantikā was brought before the King. Padmāvatī congratulated Vāsavadattā. Both of them loved each other and lived together as the loving wives of Udayana. (Kathāsaritāgāra, Lāvānakalambaka).

7) Udayana gets a new throne. Once Udayana was sitting in the court-hall, when a Brahmin came there and made a complaint to the King that some cow-herds had broken the legs of his son. The Brahmin said that a boy named Devasena sat on a stone in the forest and instantly he got kingly power. The leg of the Brahmin boy was broken by the friends of Devasena because he did not bow before Devasena. When he heard the story, the minister Yaugandharayāna said that that place must have some peculiarities. Accordingly the men of the King dug the place. He got a throne of gems. (Kathāsaritāgāra, Lāvānakalambaka).

8) The son of Udayana. Vāsavadattā became pregnant and gave birth to a child. He was named Narāvāhana-datta. Nārada granted him a boon that Narāvāhana-datta would become the emperor of the Vidyādharas. (See under Narāvāhana-datta).

The princess of Taksāśīlā named Kaliṅga-senā fell in love with Udayana and she came to Kauśāmbi. But no marriage took place. (See under Kaliṅga-senā). Narāvāhana-datta, the son of Udayana, married Madana-māncukā who was the incarnation of Rati Devī (the wife of Madana). Udayana entrusted the country to his son and led a life of retirement with his wives. (Kathāsaritāgāra).

UDDĀLAKA I. A disciple called Ārunī of the teacher Ayodhadhaumya. To know how Ārunī got the name Uddālaka, see under Ayodhadhaumya.

It is stated in Mahābhārata, Sabhā Parva, Chapter 7, Stanza 12 that this hermit Uddālaka was a prominent figure in the Durbar of Indra. Uddālaka had a son called Svētaketu and a daughter called Sūjātā. He gave his daughter Sūjātā in marriage to his favourite disciple Kahoḍa. The hermit Aśāvakra was their son. See under Aśāvakra. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 132).

Once Uddālaka caused the river Sarasvatī to appear at the place of sacrifice. From that day onwards Sarasvatī got the name ‘Manorāmā’ because when the thought came to his mind (manas) the river made its appearance. (M.B. Śalya Parva, Chapter 33). It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Śānti Parva, Chapter 57, Stanza 10, that Uddālaka expelled his son Svētaketu from the house because the son was a waster of Brahmins.

UDDĀLAKA II. The story of another hermit of the name Uddālaka is mentioned in the Mahābhārata, Anuḥāsana Parva. Chapter 71. This hermit is known as Uddālaki also. Once this hermit happened to forget that he had left flowers, food and his waterpot on the bank of the river and reaching his hermitage, he asked his son Nāciketa to fetch them from the bank of the river. When Nāciketa reached the bank of the river, those things had been washed down by the current. The son returned and reported the matter to his father. The father got angry and cursed his son to death. Seeing the son lying dead on darbha (mattress made of darbhā grass) the hermit cried aloud. In that flow of tears life returned to the body and the son woke up as if from sleep. The father asked the son about the news of the realm of Yama (the god of death) and the son told the hermit the news about the world of the dead.

UDDANDASĀSTRI. One of the eighteen and a half famous poets of Kerala. He was a Sanskrit poet. His native place was Lāṭāpura on the bank of river Pālār in Toṇḍāmaṇiḻalai in the Tamilnad. The name of his father was Sri Kṛṣṇa and that of his mother was Raṅgā-devī. Poet Ullōors says that Sāstri had another name Irugupanāṭha. He had a very good education. After having completed his education, he travelled through Andhra, Kārnāṭaka, Kaliṅga, Gola, Kerala and many other countries and finally came to Kozhikode and visited the King Māṇavikramamāhārāja. At the instance of the king he composed the drama called Maḷḷikāmār-tam. Besides this we have obtained only the ‘Kokilasandesā’ and some other single poems of Sāstri. It is said that there is a thesis on dramas also. Sāstri was not in the habit of respecting those who did not pay respect to him, however superior they might be. So some say that he was arrogant. A Malayāla Brahmin called Bhaṭṭaṭhīrī of Kākkaṭārī, rose against Sāstri in Kerala.

UDDHAV.

1) General information. A Yādava. He was a friend and minister of Śri Kṛṣṇa. In Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 186, Stanza 18, mention is made that Uddhava was present on the occasion of the Svayamvara (marriage) of Draupadī. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 218, Stanza 11, that at a famous celebration held in the mountain of Raivata, Uddhava was present. (See under Subhadra).

Uddhava was a disciple of Brhaspati, and a man of great intelligence. It was this Uddhava who brought the dowry of Subhadra to Indraprastha, when Arjuna married her. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 220, Stanza 30).

Once a king named Śālva besieged the city of Dvārakā. At that time Uddhava saved Dvārakā. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 15, Stanza 9).

2) The message carried by Uddhava. Kaṁśa sent Akṛūra to Ambāḍī, and brought Śri Kṛṣṇa to Mathurā. Śrī Kṛṣṇa killed Kaṁśa and made Ugrasena king, and stayed in the city of Mathurā for a time. At that time Śrī Kṛṣṇa sent Uddhava to Ambāḍī to know about the well-being of the people there. The moment Uddhava entered Ambāḍī, the Gopas and gopa women, (cow-herds) Yaśodā and Nandagopa, all surrounded him to hear about Śrī Kṛṣṇa. They felt much pleased at knowing that Śrī Kṛṣṇa was getting on well. They sent through him many presents to Śrī Kṛṣṇa. He got all those presents into his chariot and took them to Śrī Kṛṣṇa in Mathurā. (Bhāgavata, Skandha 10).

3) The end. Śrī Kṛṣṇa informed Uddhava beforehand the fact that the Yādava dynasty was going to end. Uddhava felt grief and requested Śrī Kṛṣṇa to take him also to Vaikuntha (the abode of Mahāviṣṇu). Śrī Kṛṣṇa taught Uddhava the doctrine that the body of man and such other things seen in the whole universe were nothing but mere delusion. At that time Uddhava asked Śrī Kṛṣṇa twentyone questions about Bandha and Mokṣa (Bondage and deliverance).

To all these questions Śrī Kṛṣṇa gave him satisfactory answers. (Bhāgavata Skandha 11).

Before the destruction of Dvārakā, the Yadus left the city. They went to Prabhāsātūrīha, a place on the sea coast and lived there. Uddhava who knew that the destruction was imminent, bade farewell to them and walked away alone. He was filled with a brightness. Śrī Kṛṣṇa did not stop him. (M.B. Mausala Parva, Chapter 3).

It is stated in Bhāgavata, Skandha 11, Chapter 29, that Uddhava went to the hermitage of Badarikā and engaged himself in penance.

UDDĪPAKA. See under Pañcatantra.

UDICYĀ. One of the disciples of Vyāsa. (Bhāgavata, Skandha 12).

UDRAPĀRAKA. A serpent born in the family of Dhrtrāṣṭra. This serpent fell in the sacrificial fire of Janamejaya and was burnt to death. (M. B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 67, Stanza 17).

UDVĀHA I. A Kṣatriya king born from the family of Krodhavāsa, an asura. (M.,B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 67, Stanza 64).

UDVĀHA II. A part of air. It is believed that air or wind is the breath of Mahāviṣṇu. In the Purāṇas mention is made about forty nine types of Maruts or winds. Seven breaths are important among them. They are:(1) Pravaha (2) Āvaha (3) Udvaha (4) Samvaha (5) Vivaha (6) Parivaha and (7) Parāvaha. About Udvaha mention is made in Bhāṣā Bhārata, Sānti Parva, Chapter 329 thus:

"Which is the wind that takes water from the four oceans and gives it to the clouds? That ever-blowing great wind is Udvaha."

UDYOGAPARĀVA. A sub-section of Mahābhārata. (See under Bhārata).

UGRA I. A military captain of Śūrapadmāsura, Chief of asuras. In the Viramahendra Kāṇḍa of Skanda Purāṇa, two warriors, Ugra and Mayūra are reported to have attacked Indrapuri.

UGRA II. One of the sons of Dhrtrāṣṭra. (M. B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 67, Verse 103). Bhīmasena killed him (M. B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 64, Verses 34, 35).

UGRA III. A Yadava prince. The Pāṇḍavas sent to him also an invitation letter to help them in the war. (M. B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 4, Verse 12).

UGRA IV. A synonym of Lord Śiva. (M. B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 17, Verse 100).

UGRA V. Son of Kavi, the Prajāpati. (M. B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 85, Verse 133).

UGRA VI. See under Varṇa.

UGRADAMŚTĪ. A daughter of Mahāmeru. Merudevi had nine daughters, Meru, Pratirūpā, Ugradāniṣṭī Latā, Ramyā, Śyāmā, Nāri, Bhadrā and Devavīthi. They were wedded by the sons of a king named Agni-dhra. (Bhāgavata, 5th Skandha).

UGRAKA. A serpent. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 35, Verse 7).

UGRAKARMA I. King of Śālva. Bhīmasena killed him. (M.B. Karna Parva, Chapter 5, Verse 41).

UGRAKARMA II. Military Chief of the Keśāya prince, Viśoka. Karna killed him. (M.B. Karna Parva, Chapter 8, Verses 4, 5).

UGRARAVAS. A muni. He killed one Duṣṇapya (Setumāhāmya). Duṣṇapya was the last son of a merchant in Pātaliputra. He killed many children for sport and his father sent him away. He went to the forest and there drowned to death a muni called Ugaravas, who was engaged in tapas. Ugaravas cursed him to death by drowning and his soul to wander about as a devil. The curse came true. (Setumāhāmya).

UGRASENA I. King Ugrasena, father of Kaṁsa.

2) Ugrasena became king. Ugrasena became king of Mathurāpuri. His Kingship was not a hereditary acquirement. There is a story behind it. In olden days, in the plateau of Kālindī there was a famous place called Madhuvana. The place was called so because it was the abode of an asura named Madhu. Madhu had a son, Lavaṇa. Satrughna killed him as he was a very troublesome fellow and a thorn on the side of the Devas. But, Satrughna then established a beautiful kingdom there and ruled it. He named it Mathurā. After the death of Satrughna his two sons ruled Mathurā. Then, when the Solar dynasty came to an end, Mathurā came under the Yādavas. A Yādava king called Śūrasena ruled over the kingdom. Vasudeva, father of Śrī Kṛṣṇa was the son of Śūrasena. After the death of his father Vasudeva took up the profession of herding cows, and therefore Ugrasena, another king of the Yādava dynasty had to become king of Mathurā. (Devi Bhāgavata, 4th Skandha).

3) Ugrasena and Kaṁsa. There is a common belief that Kaṁsa was the son of Ugrasena. But, the Bhāgavata relates the following to the effect that Kaṁsa was born to a Gandhāvara called Drāmila of Ugrasena's wife. When once Ugrasena's wife was in her monthly periods, she walked in the forest with her companions. A Gandhāvara called Drāmila saw her then, felt attracted by her and made her pregnant. Angered at this, she cursed Drāmila thus: "Since you have procreated a son in me, while I am in my periods this son will be killed by a boy born in my husband's family." Kaṁsa was the son born to her in the above manner. Kaṁsa ascended the throne after putting Ugrasena in prison. According to the curse of Ugrasena's wife, Śrī Kṛṣṇa was born in Ugrasena's family and he killed Kaṁsa. Nārada had informed Kaṁsa of the Drāmila interlude. Kaṁsa told this story secretly to Akṛṣṭa when the latter was deputed by him to invite Kṛṣṇa to the dhanur yajña. (Bhāgavata, 10th Skandha).

The name Ahuka. Genealogy states that Ugrasena was the son of Ahuka. But, in certain contexts Ugrasena is called Ahuka also. "Afterwards we made Ahuka-Ugrasena King...." (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 128, Verse 39).
5) Ugrasena imprisoned. Vasudeva, father of Śrī Kṛṣṇa was Ugrasena’s minister. Kaṁsa, when he attained majority imprisoned Ugrasena and became himself king. (M.B. Sābhā Parva, Chapter 22).

6) Ugrasena regained kingdom. Śrī Kṛṣṇa killed Kaṁsa with the permission of Ugrasena and made him king again. During the reign of Ugrasena, Jarāsandha and Śālva attacked Maithūrapūri. (See under Kṛṣṇa).

7) Ugrasena and the iron rod. While Ugrasena was ruling the Kingdom, the sages Viśvāmitra, Nārada and Kaṭṭha once came to Dvārakā. To insult the sages, the Yādavas brought before them, Śāmba dressed as a pregnant woman. The Yādavas told the sages that she was Baḥbhu’s wife, and wanted to be told whether the child she delivered would be male or female. The sages understood their evil mentality, and prophesied that Śāmba would deliver an iron rod fierce enough to annihilate the whole Yādava race. According to the prophecy the next day Śāmba delivered an iron rod. The Yādavas imparted the news to Ugrasena, who got the iron rod reduced to powder and deposited the powder in the sea. He also enforced prohibition of liquor in the country. (To know how the powder of the rod ruined the Yādava dynasty see under Kṛṣṇa). (M.B. Mausala Parva, Chapter I).

8) After death. After his death, Ugrasena joined the Viśvadevātās. Bhūrīrasva, Śāla, Bhūrī, Karuṣa-Ugrasena, Vasudeva, Uttra and his brother Saṅkha—these kings (after death) joined the company of Viśvadevātās. (M.B. Svargāroha Parva, Chapter 3, Verses 16, 17).

UGRASENA II. A brother of King Janamejaya. He, along with his two brothers thrashed the son of Sāmā. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 3, Verses 1 and 2).

UGRASENA III. Son of Kaśyapa by his wife Munī. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 65, Verse 42). He was present at the birthday celebrations of Arjuna. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 122, Verse 52). He was also present to witness the fight between Arjuna and Kṛpācārya at the Virāṭa city. (M.B. Virāṭa Parva, Chapter 56, Verses 11 and 12).

UGRASENA IV. A king who was Svarbhānu, the asura, reborn. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 67, Verses 12 and 13).

UGRASENA V. A son of Dhrītarāṣṭrī. He is also called Citrasena. (M.B. Ādi Parva. Chapter 67, Verse 100). This Ugrasena was killed by Bhīma. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 137).

UGRAŚRĀVAS I. Son of Muni Lomaharṣa. He is the Sūta who told Purānic stories to the munis at Naimisāraṇya. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 1, Verse 1).

UGRAŚRĀVAS II. A son of Dhrītarāṣṭrī. Bhīmasena killed him in the battle of Kurukṣetra. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 67, Verse 100, and Droṇa Parva, Chapter 157, Verse 19).

UGRAŚRĀVAS III. Husband of Śīlavaṭi. (See under Atri, Para 7).

UGRATAPAS. Son of Sutapas, a muni of the Bhrigu dynasty. Once he concentrated his mind and thoughts on Śrī Kṛṣṇa immersed in love of the Gopīs with the result that he was born as daughter of Sunandī, the Gopī in Anūḍā, and served Kṛṣṇa. (Padma Purāṇa).

UGRATEJAS I. A synonym of Lord Śiva. (M.B. Anuśāsa Parva, Chapter 17, Verse 5).

UGRATEJAS II. A serpent. It welcomed Balabhadra-rāma once. (M.B. Mausala Parva, Chapter 4, Verse 15).

UGRATIRTHA. A Kṣatriya king, who was Krodhavāsa, the asura, reborn. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 67, Verse 65).

UGRĀYUDHA I. A son of Dhrītarāṣṭrī. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 67, Verse 99). He was present at the wedding of Pāñcālī. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 185).

UGRĀYUDHA II. A Pāñcāla king and partisan of the Pāṇḍavas. Karna wounded him in war. (Karna Parva, Chapter 56, Verse 44).

UGRĀYUDHA III. A powerful person, who fought on the Kaurava side. (M.B. Sālya Parva, Chapter 2, Verse 37).

UGRĀYUDHA IV. An emperor killed by Bhīma. (M.B. Sānti Parva, Chapter 27, Verse 10).

UGRODH. A king of the lunar dynasty. (Bhāgavata, 9th Skandha).

UJJAYA. One of the sons of Viśvāmitra. They were Brahmacārans. (M.B. Anuśāsa Parva, Chapter 4, Verse 58).

UJJAYANA. The Āśrama of Arṣiṣeṇamahāraṣī was situated near Mount Gandhamādanā in front of Mānasā lake. Ujjuṇaka was a lake near the āśrama. A dip in the waters of the lake, it was believed, would wash off all sins. (M.B. Anuśāsa Parva, Chapter 25, Verse 35).

UJJAPĀLAKA. A desert near the āśrama of Uttanka muni. Dhundhu, offspring of the asuras, Madhu and Kaitabha, lived in this desert. (See under Dhundhu).

UJJAYANTAPARVATA. A mountain near the Pīḍāraka temple in Saurāstra. It is believed to possess wonderful siddhis. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 88, Verse 21).

UJJAYINI. One of the seven very sacred places in ancient India. Its ancient name was Avantī. The seven sacred cities are: Ayodhya, Mathurā, Māyā, Kāśi, Kānci, Avantī, and Dvāravatī. The famous Mahākāla temple described by Kālidāsa was on the banks of the river Siprā flowing through Ujjayinī. Jyotirlinga of Śiva is the presiding deity in the temple. There is also a holy bathing ghat called Koṭiṣṭhūra here. A bath in it is as beneficial as an Aśvamedha yajña. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 82).

UKTCHA. Agni, the father of Parāvāni. This agni is saluted with three kinds of Uṛkha hymns. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 219, Verse 25).

UKTCHA (M). A particular portion of Śāmaveda.
ULUKA II

Mahābhārata, Karṇa Parva, Chapter 25, Stanzas 9 to 11, that Ulūkā defeated Yuyutsu. Next fight was between Sahadeva and Ulūkā in which Sahadeva killed Ulūkā. (M.B. Sāya Parva, Chapter 28, Stanzas 32 and 33). The following are the synonyms of Ulūkā, given in the Mahābhārata:—Sākuni, Kaitaka, Saubalyasuta and Kaitavya.

ULUKA II. A Yakṣa (a demi-god). It is stated in Mahābhārata, Adī Parva, Chapter 32, that Garuḍa and this Yakṣa fought with each other.

ULUKA III. A son of Viśvāmitra. He became a hermit. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 4, Stanza 51). It is mentioned in the Mahābhārata, Sānti Parva, Chapter 47, Stanza 11, that this Ulūkā visited Bhiṣma on his Bed of arrows.

ULUKADUTĀGAMANAPARVA. A sub-section of a Parva in the Mahābhārata. (See under Bhārata).

ULUKĀŚRAMA. A holy place. (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 186, Stanza 26).

ULŪPI. Wife of Arjuna.

1) How she became the wife of Arjuna. Once Arjuna happened to enter the palace in which Dharmaputra was living with Pāñcālī. As a result, Arjuna had to go on a pilgrimage for a year. (See under Trāvān). Arjuna reached Gaṅgādvāra. When he got down into the river Gaṅgā, he saw Ulūpī the daughter of Nāgarāja (King of the serpents). He asked her a few questions. She told him thus:—"I am the daughter of the serpent Kauravya of the family of Airāvata. I came to bathe in the river and when I saw you I grew amorous." Arjuna told her that Dharmaputra had imposed on him celibacy for twelve months and that it was not right to marry in the meantime. Ulūpī argued with Arjuna and convinced him that it was not wrong to marry her. Arjuna married her. A son named Trāvān was born to her.

2) How Ulūpī caused Arjuna to be killed and how he was brought to life again. (See paras 28 and 29 under Arjuna).

3) The end of Ulūpī. After having brought Arjuna back to life, Ulūpī reached Hastināpura with Babhrurvāhana and Citrāṅgadā. (M.B. Aśvamedha Parva, Chapter 87). As soon as she reached there she greeted Kuntī, Draupadi and Subhadrā. She gave them various kinds of presents. It is mentioned in many generalised locations in the Mahābhārata. After Kauravya, Citrāṅgāsika Parva, Chapter I, Stanza 23 that Ulūpī served Gāndhārī at one time. In Mahābhārata, Āśrama-vasika Parva, Chapter I, Stanza 23 that Ulūpī served Gāndhārī at one time. In Mahābhārata, Āśrama-vasika Parva, Chapter 10, Stanza 46 it is mentioned that Ulūpī was greatly loved by the subjects. When the Pāndavas began the 'great departure' (Mahāprasthānā) Ulūpī entered the River Ganges. Citrāṅgādā went to Manalūrapura.

"Ulūpī, the daughter of the serpent Kauravya, jumped into the Ganges and to Manalūrapura, went to Citrāṅgādā." (Bhāṣā Bhārata, Mahāprasthānika Parva, Chapter 1, Stanza 27).

4) The other names of Ulūpī. Bhūjagātmāja, Bhūjagendrakanyākā, Bhūjagottamā, Kaurāvī, Kauravyadūhitā, Kauravyakulanandini, Pannaganandini, Pannagatāmāja, Pannageśvarakanyā, Pannagī, Uragatamājā. These are the synonyms used in the Mahābhārata for Ulūpī.

ULŪTA. A country in ancient India. (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 9, Stanza 54).

UMĀ. Pārvatī. (For details see under Pārvatī).

UMLOCĀ. A celestial woman. Umlocā with other celestial women participated in the birth celebration of Arjuna. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 122, Stanza 65).

UNCHAVRITTI. A brahmin. His story is told as follows in Jaimini Aśvamedha Parva. This poor brahmin who lived by begging got one day some food grain powder. After offering a portion of it to Agni and Brahmins, he divided the balance equally between the children. Then he sat down to take his own food when Dharma-deva, disguised as a brahmin, appeared and demanded food. Unchavṛtī gave all his food to the guest. Since that did not satisfy the guest, the sons also gave their shares of the food to him. Greatly pleased at the noble act of Unchavṛtī, Dharma-deva took the brahmin family with him to Svargaloka. One day a few particles of the food grain powder which remained with the brahmin fell on the earth. A mongoose came and played on that ground. That part of his body which got smeared with the food-grain powder became golden in colour. Though the mongoose went to the yajña ground of Dharma-deva and repeated the above process there, the remaining portion of its body did not become golden.

UNDRA (M) (UTRAM). A place in South India. Sahadeva subjugated this place. (M.B. Sahā Parva, Chapter 31, Verse 71). People of Undram were present at the Kāșṭūya of Yudhīṣṭhīra with presents. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 51, Verse 22).

UNMADĀ. A celestial woman.

1) Became a woman by the curse of Urvasī. Harīsa, the King of Gaurāvaras (semi-gods) had a general of the army called Durmada. He was a dangerer. He had an eye on Urvasī. She was the wife of Purūravas a famous King. On several occasions Durmada followed Urvasī, with lustful desire. He had expressed his amour for her on several occasions. But Urvasī did not pay any heed to his words.

One day Purūravas and Urvasī were present in the durbar of Indra. Purūravas and Urvasī had signalled a rendezvous for that night at the corner of the Nandana Park. Durmada understood this. He called a celestial woman named Unmadā to his side. They made a plan and accordingly Unmadā disguised herself as Urvasī and Durmada took the guise of Purūravas and both of them entered Nandana park. Purūravas went to Unmadā and conjugated with her. In the same way Urvasī received Durmada, mistaking him for Purūravas. After the conjugation Durmada laughed loud as if he had played a trick on Urvasī. Urvasī understood everything. Purūravas also arrived there. Urvasī cursed Durmada to take birth in the earth as a Rākṣasa and cursed Unmadā to be born in the earth as the daughter of a King and she said that at that time she would love one man and become the wife of another man. The aggrieved Durmada and Unmadā prayed for liberation from the curse. Urvasī gave them liberation thus:—

"This Durmada will be born as the son of Unmadā. Seeing the death of her husband and son, she would jump into fire. After that she will enter heaven. Durmada will be killed by the sword of an enemy and will obtain heaven." According to this curse Durmada was born as the son of Dirgha-jāngā, the emperor of Hiranyakapura, under the name Pingākṣa and Unmadā was born as the daughter of the King of Videha. Her name was Harijī (Brahmāṇḍa Purāṇa, Chapter 3).

2) The marriage and death of Harijī. Harijī grew up to be a young woman. Once Pīṅgākṣa growing lustful took Harijī and went through the sky. She cried aloud for a long time. Pīṅgākṣa, the asura, left her in a wild forest. At that time a King named Vasumanas came by that way hunting. He killed Pīṅgākṣa and then having heard the story of Harijī got her on the horse called Jumūta and sent her to Videha (Mithilā). Her father was much pleased at getting her back. He wanted to give her in marriage to Vasumanas. The date of the marriage was fixed. Invitations were sent to many Kings. Among them there was a King named Bhadrāśreṇya, who took her by force and went away. There was a fierce battle between the two Kings, Bhadrāśreṇya and Vasumanas and Vasumanas was defeated. Seeing this Divodāsa, the King of Kāśi, attacked Bhadrāśreṇya. Though Divodāsa defeated Bhadrāśreṇya, he did not like to harm the beaten King. So he returned to his kingdom. Bhadrāśreṇya took Harijī to his palace and married her. A son was born to her and he was named Durmada. This was the same Durmada who had taken birth and died as Pīṅgākṣa and who had been born again as the son of Harijī. This Durmada took by force the daughter of his uncle called Citrāṅgī and a child was born to them. Bhadrāśreṇya again engaged in a battle with Divodāsa, the King of Kāśi, and was defeated. Then his son Durmada got into the battlefield and he also was defeated.

When all this news reached Vasumanas, the King of Ayodhāya, he became jealous of Bhadrāśreṇya. A battle was fought between them in which Vasumanas was defeated. But a fierce battle was fought again in which Bhadrāśreṇya and his son Durmada were killed. Durmada obtained heaven. Stricken with grief at the death of her husband and son, Harijī got into fire and went to heaven. (Brahmāṇḍa Purāṇa, Chapter 3)

UNMĀDINI. A beautiful woman. She was the daughter of a Vaśya in the city of Srāvasti. She went to the King Devasena and requested him to marry his daughter. Because of the interference of his favourites, the King did not marry her. The King’s general married her. Once the King happened to see her by chance. When he saw how beautiful she was, he felt sorry that he did not marry her. From that day onwards the King grew morbidly torpid and finally died.

This story was told by Yaugandharāyaṇa, minister of Udālayana, the King of Vatsa. (Kathāsārasīgara, Līvānakalambara; Tārāṅga 1).

UNMĀTHA I. Yama (Kāla) presented Skandadeva with two attendants. One was Unmātha and the other Pramātha. (M.B. Śalya Parva, Chapter 45, Stanza 30).

UNMĀTHA II. An attendant presented to Skandadeva by Pārvatī. (M.B. Śalya Parva, Chapter 45, Stanza 51).

UNMATTĀ. A warrior of a class of Rāksasas (giants). In Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 10, it is mentioned that this warrior died in the battle between Rāma and Rāvaṇa. Genealogy. Descended from Visūṇu in the following order:—Brahmā—Heti—Vidyutkēsa—Sukeśa—Mālayāvān—Unmattā. Vidyutkēsa was born to Heti, the son of Brahmā by his wife Bhayā; Sukeśa was born to Vidyutkēsa by his wife Sālakṣajāṅkā and Māli, Sumāli and Mālayāvān were born to Sukeśa of his wife Devavatī, and to Mālayāvān by his wife Sundari, seven sons named Vajramuṣṭi, Virūpākṣa, Durmukha, Suptaghna, Yaśajñakoṣa, Matta and Unmatta and a daughter named Nālā were born. Prahasta, Akampana, Viṣṇa, Kāla-kāmukha, Dhūmrā-kṣa and some more Rāksasas were the sons of Sumāli, brother of Mālayāvān. Kaikasi, the mother of Rāvaṇa, was the sister of Prahasta.

UNMUCA. A hermit of south Bhārata. Mention is made about him in Mahābhārata, Sānti Parva, Chapter 208, Stanza 28.

UPABARHĀṆA. See the 2nd para under Nārada.

UPACĀRA (Hospitality). They are sixteen in number. (Things to be offered to the guest). They are called Śoḍāsopacāras. They are given below:—(1) Āsana (seat) (2) Pāḍya (water to wash feet) (3) Arghya (water to drink) (4) Snāṇīya (bath) (5) Anulepana (ashes or other fragrant things for besmearing) (6) Dhūpa (smoke) (7) Dīpa (light) (8) Naivedya (food) (9) Tāṃbūla (Betel) (10) Sītalajāla (cool drinks) (11) Vasana (clothing) (12) Bhūṣaṇa (ornaments) (13) Mālya (garland) (14) Gandha (sweet-smelling things) (15) Ācamaniyaka (water to rinse mouth) (16) Sutalpa (Good bed).

These are the sixteen offerings that we have to give to our guests.

UPACITRA. A son of Dhṛtarāṣṭra. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 67, Stanza 95). In the Mahābhārata, Droṇa Parva, Chapter 136 Stanza 22 it is mentioned that he was killed by Bhīmasena.

UPADEVA. A King of the Pūru dynasty.

UPAGĪA. A son of Viśvāmitra. He was a Brahmavādin. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 4, Stanza 56).

UPAGIRI. A hilly place in North Bhārata. (M.B. Sabhā Parva, Chapter 27, Stanza 3).

UPAGUPTA. A King of the Candravāṃśa (Lunar dynasty). (See under Genealogy).

UPAJALA. A river. In the Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 13, Stanza 31, it is mentioned that by bathing in this river the King Usīnara got power and position higher than that of Indra.

UPAKĪCAKAS. Kicaka, the brother-in-law of King Viṛata, had one hundred and five brothers. They are called Upakīcakas. Kicaka and the Upakīcakas were born of a portion of Kālakeya an asura. At the palace of Viṛata, Kicaka harassed Pāṇcālī and was killed in the night by Bhīma. (See under Kicaka). Hearing about the death of Kicaka, the hundred and five Upakīcakas came there and decided to burn Pāṇcālī also, because they thought she was the cause of the death of their elder brother. They bound and carried her to the cremation ground. Hearing her loud cry, Bhīma jumped over the wall and ran to the cremation ground. He uprooted a tree, killed all the hundred and five Upakīcakas and brought Pāṇcālī to the palace. (M.B. Viṛata Parva, Chapter 23).

UPAKOŚĀ. The daughter of the teacher Upavarṣa. (See under Vararuci).

UPAKRŚNAKA. A warrior of Skandadeva. (M.B. Śalya Parva, Chapter 45, Stanza 57).

UPAMANYU I. A dutiful disciple of the teacher Ayodhadhaumya. This teacher had three disciples of prominence. They were Āruṇi, Upamanyu and Veda,
To know how Upamanyu was put to test by the teacher see under Ayodhadaumya.

UPAMANYU II. In the Krtyayuga, there lived a hermit named Vyāghrapāda who had two sons. They were called Upamanyu and Dhaumya. Some learned men are of opinion that Upamanyu the son of Vyāghrapāda and Upamanyu the disciple of Ayodhadaumya, were one and the same. Once Upamanyu visited another hermitage along with his father. He happened to drink the milk of the cow there. After that they returned to their own hermitage, Upamanyu went to his mother and asked her to make milk pudding for him. But the mother felt very sorry because there was no milk. At last she mixed flour in water and made pudding and gave it to him. Upamanyu did not accept it. His mother told him that there was no way to get milk and that men could get wealth, crops etc. only by the grace of Śiva.

Upamanyu who was of a wilful nature did penance with meditation and contemplation on Śiva. Finally Śiva appeared before him in the shape of Indra and told him to ask for his boon. Upamanyu boldly replied that he wanted no boon from anybody else except Śiva. Śiva made his appearance in his own form and made Upamanyu a deva (God).

Upamanyu said all these things while he talked with Śri Kṛṣṇa. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 14).

In the Book "Our hermits", written by Rāmasvāmi Sāstri in Tamil, it is mentioned that Upamanyu had written a book "Śiva bhaktaviśā" in which biographies of devotees of Śiva of great attainments are given.

UPAMANYU III. In the Brahmāṇḍa Purāṇa we come across another Upamanyu as the son of a hermit named Suṣapata. Upamanyu reached the hermitage of Kaśyapa, with the idea of marrying Sumati, the daughter of Kaśyapa and the elder sister of Garuḍa. Nobody liked the idea of giving Sumati in marriage to that old man. The hermit got angry at this and cursed Kaśyapa that if he gave his daughter in marriage to any hermit his head would break into a hundred pieces. (Brahmāṇḍa Purāṇa, Chapter 18).

UPANANDA II. A serpent. (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 103, Stanza 12).

UPANANDA III. A warrior of Skanda. (M.B. Śālya Parva, Chapter 45, Stanza 64).

UPANISAD. The four Vedas are Rk, Yajus, Sāma and Atharva. Each of these four has a Brāhmaṇa (a treatise relating to prayer and sacrificial ceremony). Next come the Āraṇyakas (forest texts—writings meant for the forest-dwelling hermit) as appendices to the Brāhmaṇas. Then come the Upāniṣads as appendices to the Āraṇyakas. These four classes of literary works (the Vedas, the Brāhmaṇas, the Āraṇyakas and the Upāniṣads) constitute the Vedic literature proper. The Āraṇyakas and the Upāniṣads are inseparably connected with each other. The Upāniṣads are called Vedāntas (the end of the Vedas). The bulk of these Vedāntas belong to different periods anterior to the Later Vedic Period. The students begin the study of Upāniṣads only after having completed the study of the Mantras (Vedic hymns) and the Brāhmaṇas (the ritual).

The meaning of the word 'Upaniṣad' is that which is most near. Upa = near, ni = most, sad = exist, (or sit). The Upāniṣads can be called the Jñānakāṇḍa of the Vedas. They describe the nature of Brahman. The figure of the supreme Spirit (Brahman) exists in the Upāniṣads. Apparently the Upāniṣads are explanations of the mantras, but they are concerned more with the allegorical significations and the mystic meanings of the tattvas or essence, of the origin of life, the world, the soul, God etc. The Upāniṣads are the basis of the Ṣad-darśanas, the six systems of philosophy. There are a large number of Upāniṣads. The most important among them are 108 in number.

UPAPĀTAKA (UPAPĀPA) (Minor sins). In accordance with the Rāṣtrasaṃhāra (political philosophy) of Ancient India, crimes were divided into two types. They were called Upapātakas (minor crimes) and Pātakas (major crimes). To know about major crimes (Pātakas) see under Pāpa (sin). Upapātakas are given below:—Cow-slaughter; sacrificing by one who is unworthy to perform it; seducing another man's wife; forsaking one's father, mother and teacher; forsaking self-study, agni (fire) and son; becoming Parivettā (one who gets married before one's elder brother is married.) Younger brother finishing education before the elder; giving an unmarried girl to Parivitti or Parivettā; performing sacrifice by a parivitti or a parivettā; slandering an unmarried girl; Living on the interest of money that is lent; violating one's vow; selling pond, garden, wife or son; becoming an outcaste; forsaking relatives; Teaching the Vedas after receiving remuneration; selling things which should not be sold; working in mines; working with big machinery; destroying medicinal herbs; living by women; to impede rites; cut down fresh trees (not dried) for firewood; kidnapping women; mingling with slanderers of women; selfish activities; eating forbidden rice; not keeping Sacrificial fire; theft; not repaying loan; learning forbidden sciences; doing things which are bad and will cause grief to others; stealing of base metals, grails and cows; contact with drunken women; killing women, Śādra, Viṣṇya and Kṣatriya and becoming an infidel are all Upapātakas.

Causing grief to a Brahmin; inhaling the smell of liquor and other prohibited things; resorting to tricks or deceit and engaging in pederasty are sins which would make one an outcaste.

Slaughter of dog, donkey, camel, lion, sheep, jungle-goat, fish, serpent and mongoose are sins of a mixed character.

Receiving money from the despicable; buying and selling; serving a śūdra; telling a lie; acting so as to render oneself unworthy; killing worms and birds; eating food along with liquor; stealing fruits, flowers and butes; and becoming a coward are also sins.

UPAPLAṆYA. A minor city in the country of Virāṭa. This minor city stood near the capital city of Virāṭa Kingdom. After their incognito-life, the Pāndavas are said to have lived in the city of Upaplavya. (M.B. Virāṭa Parva, Chapter 72, Stanza 14).

UPAPURĀṆAS. See under Purāṇa.

UPARICARAVASU.

Uparicaravasu.
2. How he got the name Uparicaravasu. Once Vasu built a hermitage and began to perform penance in accordance with the advice of Indra. When the penance became too severe Indra appeared and gave him an aerial chariot. Since then Vasu used to travel through air in the chariot. So he got the name ‘Uparicaravasu’ (Vasu, who travels above). (Mahabharata, Adi Parva, Chapter 63).

3. Vasu and Indra festival. Indra gave Vasu a garland (Vaijayantimala) which would never fade, and gave a boon that, so long as he wore that garland, he would not receive any wound. He was given a bamboo stick (Vequdanda) and was instructed to fix that rod on the earth and celebrate the festival of Indra. Vasu celebrated the festival of Indra and from that day onwards the festival of Indra came to be celebrated in the world. (See under Indrotsava).

4. The sons of Vasu. Five sons named Bhadrathra, Kuisma (Manivahana), Mavella, Yadu and Raja were born to him.

5. Kicking and splitting Kolahala. The river Suktimati flowed through the capital city of Vasu. Once the great hill Kolahala grew amorous of Suktimati and caught hold of her. Uparicaravasu got angry at this and kicked the mountain which was split into two and Suktimati flowed out of the gap. Still two children were born to the great hill by Suktimati. The river was pleased at the freedom accorded by the king and placed the two children at the feet of the king. They grew up. The son became general of the army and the daughter Girik became the wife of the king. (M.B. Adi Parva Chapter 63).

6. Vasu goes hunting. One day the king decided to go to hunt. On the same day his wife had her monthly course. Still without changing his programme he started for the forest. Even after entering the forest the thought of his wife lingered in his mind. The forest was in full bloom as it was Spring. Seeing this the king grew amorous and sat under a tree. A mild breeze was blowing. Instantly the king had seminal flow. He collected the semen in the leaf of a tree and sent it to the queen through an eagle. Thinking that to be some food, another eagle got near and a quarrel arose. The semen fell in the river Yamuna. A fish named Adrika swallowed it. (See under Adrika). A fisherman caught that fish. He got a male child and a female child from the stomach of the fish. That girl is the famous Satyavati Matisyagandha who became the queen of Pandu. (See under Satyavati). The fisherman gave the boy he got from the fish to King Uparicaravasu. (M.B. Adi Parva Chapter 62).

7. Other information.
(i) It is mentioned in Mahabharata, Sabha Parva, Chapter 8, Stanza 20, that Uparicaravasu was famous as a member of the council of Yama.
He was a friend of Indra, a devotee of Visnu and a righteous and diligent man who loved and esteemed his father. Because of the grace of Sri Narayana, he secured an empire. He consecrated everything before god. Once Indra gave him half of his seat. (M.B. Santi Parva, Chapter 355). Because of the grace of Bhagavvan (Lord), Garuda made him a traveller of the sky. (M.B. Santi Parva, Chapter 337, Stanza 37).
(ii) In Mahabharata, Santi Parva, Chapter 337, Stanza 38, it is mentioned that finally Uparicaravasu entered the world of Brahman.
(iii) Once a controversy arose between Indra and the hermits, whether cow-slaughter during sacrifices, was desirable. At this time Uparicaravasu happened to come there. As he was a man of truth, he was asked to make a decision. Uparicaravasu stood on the side of Indra and gave his opinion in favour of slaughter. The hermits who were against cow-slaughter got angry and cursed Uparicaravasu to go down to the world of Patala (netherworld). (Matsya Purana, Chapter 152).
This story is seen with slight difference in Mahabharata Santi Parva, Chapters 322-324.

UPASLOKA. A son born to Sri Krsna by Sairandhri. He learned all sciences and Philosophies and finally became a follower of the Sankhya-Yoga cult. (Bhagavata, Skandha 10).

UPASRUTI. The patron-goddess of Uttarayana (The sun’s progress towards North in the former half of the year). In Mahabharata, Adi Parva, Chapter 166 mention is made of how this goddess made it possible for Indrani to see Indra through the holes of a stalk of lotus. It was by the help of Upasruti that Saci Devi and Indra met together. (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 14, Stanzas 12 and 13).

UPATYAKA. A country in Bhara. (Mahabharata, Bhishma Parva, Chapter 2, Stanza 55).

UPAVARSA. The younger brother of the Teacher varsha. He was also a teacher. For further information see under Vararuci.

UPAVASA. Upavasa means going back from sin and leading a good life. (Upa (varta) = go back and Vasa = A life). All actions which are not good, must be relinquished. Those who observe Upavasa should abstain from using flesh, Masura (pule), canaka (a kind of gram), Varaku (a kind of grain), green leaves prepared, honey, rice etc. and from contact with women. He should not wear flowers, ornaments, or fashionable dress; should not inhale fragrant smoke, and fragrance of any sort. Cleaning the teeth and using collyrium also are prohibited. Instead of cleaning the teeth in the morning Pacagavya (Milk, curd, ghee, urine and dung of cow) should be taken in. Drinking water several times, using betel leaves, sleeping in the day time and sexual act also should be avoided. (Agni Purana, Chapter 175).

UPAVENA. A river. This river is considered to be the mother of Agni (fire). Some are of opinion that this river is Krsna-vena a tributary of the great river Krsna (R.Kistna) of South India. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 222, Stanza 14).

UPAVITA. The sacred string or Uttariya. The twice-born (the three upper castes) wear this. When it is worn over the left shoulder and under the right arm it is called Upavita, when it is worn over the right shoulder and under the left arm it is called Pracinaivita and if it is worn around the neck as a garland it is called Nivita. (Manusmriti, Chapter 2, Stanza 63).
made with the thumb the man will become stout. If it is done with the middle finger he will have long life. If it is done with the fourth finger (anāmikā), he will get food and if it is made with the index finger (tāmajjini) he will get salvation. The form of the mark also could be changed. The mark may be made in the form of a flame, the leaf of bamboo reed, a lotus-bud, a fish, a turtle or a conch. If the mark is as large as ten finger-breadths it is superfine. If of nine finger-breadths, it is medium superfine; and if it is eight and a half finger-breadths, it is lower superfine. In the same way if the finger-breadth of the mark is seven, six or five they will be super medium, medium medium and lower medium. If it is four, three and two they will be of the low, medium low and lowest.

It is also ordered that when one wears the Ļṛdhvatā fraud in a particular spot of the body one will have to think of a particular name of Viṣṇu.

URDHVAṆIDHARĀ. An attendant of Skandadeva. (M.B. Sāya Parva, Chapter 46, Stanza 18).

ÚRJJĪ I. A wife of Viśāṅga. Seven sons named Rajas, Gotra, Ļṛdhvatā, Ļakṣman, Pāṇḍava, Sūyā, Seuapa and Sūkra, were born to Viśāṅga by his wife Úrjjī. These seven holy men were the seven hermits (Saptārṣi) in the third Manvantara. (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Aṁśa 1, Chapter 10).

ÚRJJĪJA I. One of the seven hermits of the Śvārociṣa Manvantara. The seven hermits of the Śvārociṣa Manvantara were Úrjīra, Sāmbha, Pāṇḍa, Pāṇḍha Sīrāṇa and Pārīvān. (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Aṁśa 9, Chapter 1).

ÚRJJJA. 111. A King of the Hehaya dynasty. He was the grandfather of the famous Jarāsandha. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 278).

ÚRJJAKETU. A King of the dynasty of King Janaka. (Bharadvāga, Skandha 9).

ÚRJJANI. A daughter of the Sun. (Ṛgveda, Maṇḍaḷa 1, Anuvāka 17, Sūkta 119).

ÚRJJASVATI. A daughter born to Priyavrata, the son of Manu Śvāyambhūva, by Surūpā the daughter of Viśvakarma. Utjjasvatī had ten brothers. (Devi Bhāgavata, Skandha 8). Priyavrata gave Utjjasvatī to the teacher-priest Śukra. Devayānī, the wife of Yāyāti, was the daughter born to Śukra by Utjjasvatī. (Bharadvāga, Skandha 5).

ÚRJJAYONI. One of Viśāṅga’s sons who were expounders of Vedas. (M.B. Anuśasana Parva, Chapter 4, Stanza 59).

ÚRMLĪĀ. Lakṣmāna married Ěrmīlā, the daughter of King Janaka and the sister of Śtā. When Lakṣmāna went to the forest with Śrī Rāma and Śtā, Úrmlīā remained in Ayodhya. After the forest life, Śrī Rāma and Lakṣmāna returned with Śtā. When Śrī Rāma was ruling over the country, two sons were born to Lakṣmāna by Úrmlīā. The elder son was named Taksaka and the second was the name Chatraketu. At the instruction of Sri Rama, Lakshmana went to the Eastern sea and killed the foresters there and built there a city called Agati. Taksha was made the King of Agati. Lakshmana then went to the western sea and killed the Barbarians there and built a city called Candramati and made Chatraketu the King of that city. Being punished by Sri Rama, Lakshmana drowned himself in the river Sarayu. (See under Lakshmana).
After that Urmiila jumped into a pile of fire and reached the world of Visnu. (Uttara Ramayana).

URNA. A wife of Marici. In the Sva-yam-bhuva Manvantara Marici had a wife called Urna and six mighty sons by her. When they saw Brahma once, they teased him by calling him 'afather who had married his daughter.' Brahma got angry with them, and cursed them to take birth as Daityas (demons) on the earth. Accordingly they took birth as the sons of Kalanemi on earth.
(Devi Bhagavata, Skanda 4).

URNANABHA (SUDARSAANA). A son of Dhrtarastra.
(M.B. Adi Parva, Chapter 67, Stanza 96). It is mentioned in Mahabharata, Droena Parva, Chapter 127, Verse 67, that Bhimasena killed him.

URNAYU. A Devagandharva. He had participated in the Birth celebration of Arjuna. (M.B. Adi Parva, Chapter 122, Stanza 32). Once this Devagandharva fell in love with Menaka. (Mahabharata, Udyoga Parva, Chapter 117, Stanza 16).

URU. A son born to Manu Cakṣuṣa by his wife Nadvala.
Uru had nine brothers named Puru, Satyadnyana, Tapasvi, Satyavak, Kavi, Agniśthu, Atiratra, Sudyumna and Atimanyu. Six great sons were born to Uru by his wife Atreyi. They were Aṅga, Sumanas, Svati, Kratu, Aṅgiras and Gaya. Vena was born to King Aṅga by his wife Sunīthā and the famous emperor Prthu was born as the son of Vena. (Agni Putana, Chapter 18).

URUKRAMA. Another name of Vāmana.

URVA (AURVA). A luminous hermit of the family of Bhrigu. He was the son of Gayaavana and the father of Reka. He created a tremendous fire for the destruction of the three worlds and extinguished it by putting it in the ocean. (For details see under Aurva).

URVARA. A celestial woman in the palace of Kubera.
In the company of some other celestial women, she danced before the hermit called Aśāvakra. (M.B.
Anuśasana Parva, Chapter 19, Stanza 44).

URVARYAN. Son of the Prajāpati Pulaha. Three sons named Kardama, Urvarfyān and Sarihṇu, were born to Pulaha by his wife Kṣamā. (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Arha 1, Chapter 1).

URVASHI I. A famous celestial damsel.
1) Birth of Urvasī. In days of old two hermits named Nara and Nārāyaṇa did penance to Brahmā in the holy heritage of Badarikā for a thousand years. (Nara and Nārāyaṇa were the children born to Dharma, the son of Brahmā). Because of the severity of their penance Indra was struck with fear. Thinking that they were doing this severe penance with a view to become Indra, he approached the hermits and told them that they might ask for any boon. Even though Indra told them several times, they did not speak a word nor did they make any stir. Indra's fear increased. So Indra decided to create some delusions which would arouse in them fear, desire eetc., so that their penance might be broken. He began to bring around them wild animals such as lion, elephant wild snake etc. and natural phenomena such as storm, heavy rain, forest-fire etc. to terrify them. The efforts of Indra were futile. The disappointed Indra sent for Kāmadeva (Cupid) and consulted him, as a result of which Kāmadeva and his wife Ratīdevi with many celestial maids came to the hermitage in the mountain of Gandhamādana with the intention of hindering the penance of Naranārāyaṇas. The season of spring was created in the forest. The celestial women such as Rambhā and others came before the hermits and began to sing and dance. The hearts of the hermits began to swell with passion. When they opened their eyes what they saw was a beautiful sight. The famous celestial women, Menakā, Rambhā, Telottama, Sukạśini, Manorāma, Mahēvarī, Puṣpadanā, Pramadava, Ghrātci, Candra-prabha, Somā, Vidyumāla, Ambujākṣi, Kāçanamālā, and others with their ten thousand and eighty hand-maids stood before them. Hermit Nārāyaṇa who got terribly angry struck on his thigh with his eighty hand and instantly there arose a woman of extreme beauty.
Because she had originated from the Īru (thigh) of Nārāyaṇa, that woman, who was the most beautiful in the three worlds, got the name Urvasī. All the others were struck with wonder at the sight of this new creation. After that so many other beautiful women also were created. The hermit Nārāyaṇa gave all of them to Indra. With shame Indra accepted them and returned to heaven along with them. Thus Urvasī arrived at the realm of the devas (gods). (Devi Bhagavata, Skanda 4).

2) Position of Urvasī. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata that Urvasī had the eleventh place among the singers.
The expert dancers were Anśecāṇa, Adikā, Somakēś, Miśrā, Alambuṣa. Marici, Śucikā, Vidyut-prāṇa, Telott-amā, Ambikā, Keśā, Rambhā, Subhītu, Asitā, Supriyā, Paṇḍarikā, Sugandhā, Surāsā, Prāmāṇi, Kāmyā and Śraradvāti. Urvasī got the first place among the celestial maids in beauty. (M.B. Adi Parva, Chapter 123).

3) Urvasī and Pururavas. Pururavas was the son of Budha born of Ilī. He grew up and became a king of great renown. His fame reached even the realm of the gods.
One day during that period Brahmā cursed Urvasī. "Go and be born on the earth." (It is stated in the Devī Bhagavata that it was Brahmā who cursed Urvasī and in the Bhāgavata that it was the Mitṛavruga who cursed Urvasī). Urvasī had heard about the fame of Pururavas and had felt tender love for him. The celestial maid reached the earth. She went to the palace of Pururavas and saw him. Because of the perfection of their figures, both loved mutually. The king asked her to become his wife. She agreed. But she laid down three conditions.
(i) I have with me two lambs which I bring up as my sons. You must take care of them. No harm should befall them.
(ii) I take in only ghee. On no account should you compel me to eat any other food.
(iii) Don't come near me in nudity except at the time of coition.

The king agreed to all these conditions. From that day onwards Urvasī lived in the palace of the king as his wife. They lived happily for a long while without separating from each other.

Urvasī became conspicuous by her absence in the realm of the gods. She was the most expert actress in heaven.
Indra missed her. So a search was made and they found out that she was in the palace of Pururavas. Indra asked the Gandharvas to bring that celestial woman to heaven somehow. Visvāvasu and some others of the Gandharvas reached the palace of king Pururavas and waited for an opportunity. One midnight they stole the lambs and took them away through the sky. At that time the king was with Urvasī in the harem. Urvasī heard the cry of the lambs and she was flurried. She reviled the king who was not capable of taking care of two lambs. Hearing her harsh words the king took his bow and arrow and following the cry of the lambs he was about to chase the thieves. Taking this opportunity the Gandharvas caused a lightning to flash in the king's harem. In the light of the lightning Urvasī saw the king standing nude. The Gandharvas having achieved their task had left the lambs and departed before the king had got out of the room. The king caught hold of the lambs and returned to the harem, within a short while. But Urvasī had gone out of the palace and was on her way.

The king was full of grief. He wandered all over the country in search of Urvasī. At last he reached Kurukṣetra and saw Urvasī there. He bowed low before her and implored her to return to the palace. But Urvasī replied thus:

"Women are like wolves. Don't have alliance with them.
Oh King! Kings should not put faith in women and thieves."

Saying thus, Urvasī vanished. (Devi Bhāgavata, Skandha 1).

4) The reason why Pururavas had to remain separate from Urvasī. Pururavas had once gone to heaven, in accordance with the invitation of Indra to help the Gods in the battle with the asuras. Indra had killed Māyādhara, a noble Asura, in that battle and had celebrated a festival. In that festival Rambhā was dancing before Tumburu, the sage-priest, and detecting some flaw in her dance Pururavas teased her. Rambhā retorted by asking the king what he knew about dance, and the king replied that he had learned from Urvasī more dance than Tumburu the teacher of Rambhā. Tumburu got angry at this, and cursed the king Pururavas to suffer from the pangs of separation from Urvasī. Stricken with grief, Pururavas returned to his palace. It was after this that the Gandharvas took away Urvasī. Pururavas went to Badarikāśrama and performed penance, meditating on God Viṣṇu for the nullification of the curse. Urvasī, aggrieved by separation from her husband, sat motionless as a picture, in the custody of the Gandharvas. Lord Viṣṇu was pleased with the penance of Pururavas. The Gandharvas brought her back to the king. Thus it became possible for the king to meet Urvasī at least once a year. (Kathāsatīsāgara, Lavānakalambaka, Tārāga 1).

5) The sons born to Pururavas by Urvasī. The king became very sad when Urvasī was about to depart from him at Kurukṣetra. Seeing his grief Urvasī told him, "Oh King, if you want so much to live with me, you have to worship the Gandharvas. They will be pleased and will give me to you. Don't be sorry. Now I am pregnant. Come to this place at the end of a year. We can spend that night together. Then we will get another son also that night." Pleased at what Urvasī had said, the king returned to his palace. On completion of a year Pururavas went to Kurukṣetra and spent a night with Urvasī. Urvasī gave Pururavas a very beautiful child and then she vanished. The king sat there and praised the Gandharvas, who gave the king an Agnisthālī (a fire pot). Because of his derangement, thinking it to be Urvasī the king took the sthālī (pot) and wandered about in the forest. At last placing the pot in the forest, the king returned to his palace. On that day Tretāyuga (one of the four ages of the word) commenced, and the Vedas dawned in his mind as three in number. He returned to the place where he had left the Sthālī in the forest and took it. After that he made two "āraṇīs" (wood from which fire is kindled by attrition) out of a banyan tree and placed his body between them and made fire. That fire is called 'Jātavedas'. Thus Jātavedas became the son of Pururavas.

Pururavas generated three fires from Jātavedas. The first of them is Pranava. The second is called Nārāyaṇa and the third Agnivāraṇa. (Śrimad Bhāgavata, 9th Skandha).

To Pururavas six sons were born from the womb of Urvasī. They were Ayus, Sruṭāyus, Satyāyus, Raya, Vijaya and Jaya. (A little difference is observed in these names in the Mahābhārata, Adi Parva, Chapter 75, Stanzas 24 and 25).

6) To know how a Gandharva named Durmada and a Vidyādhari named Unmadā played a trick on Pururavas and Urvasī, see under Unmadā.

7) How Agastya and Vasiṣṭha were born to Mitrāvārunas because of Urvasī. In days of old there was a renowned king named Nimi in the family of Ikṣvāku. He decided to perform a sacrifice of a long duration. He began preparation and invited famous hermits such as Bhrgu, Aṅgiras, Vāmadeva, Pulastya, Pulaha. Ṛcika and others. Finally he invited Vasiṣṭha. At that time Indra had begun another sacrifice in heaven. So Vasiṣṭha went to heaven for that sacrifice, telling Nimi that he would conduct the sacrifice on his return. The emperor Nimi did not like it. Recognizing the hermit Gautama as the main priest, he began performing the sacrifice. The sacrifice of Indra lasted for 500 years. When Vasiṣṭha returned after that, the sacrifice of Nimi was over. Vasiṣṭha cursed Nimi. "You will become devoid of body." Nimi cursed back. "Let Vasiṣṭha also become thus."

The aggrieved Vasiṣṭha went to his father Brahmā and complained about the curse. Brahmā told Vasiṣṭha. "You penetrate the brightness of Mitrāvārunas and stay there. In due course you will get a birth which is not of a womb." Hearing these words, Vasiṣṭha reached the hermitage of Mitrāvārunas. He left his body there and fused himself into their effulgence. During this period Urvasī came to that hermitage. Seeing her, Mitrāvārunas had seminal flow. The semen fell in a pot. From the pot two bright and handsome sons were born. The first of them was Agastya and the second Vasiṣṭha. (Devi Bhāgavata, Skandha 8).

8) Indra cursing Urvasī. Once Agastya went to the durbar of Indra. On the occasion Indra asked Urvasī to dance. In the midst of the dance she saw Jayanta, the son of Indra, and became amorous and her steps went wrong. Nārada who was playing his famous lute called Mahāti could not play well. Agastya got angry and cursed Jayanta to become a bud. He cursed Nārada also. So his lute became the lute of the world. Urvasī was born on the earth under the name Mādhavī due to the curse.

9) Urvaśī changing Arjuna into eunuch. (See under Arjuna).

10) Other information.

(i) It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Sābhā Parva, Chapter 10, Stanza 11, that Urvaśī had been in love with Kubera once.

(ii) Urvaśī was dismayed when Sukadeva attainted Supreme Bliss. (See under Śuka).

URVAŚI II. Another name of Gaṅgā. As she sat on the Uru (thigh) of Bhagīratha, Gaṅgā got the name Urvaśī. (M.B. Dronā Parva, Chapter 60, Stanza 6).

URVASĪTĪRTTHĀ. A holy place and Bath. Those who bathe in this holy bath will be honoured by the world. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 84, Stanza 157).

UŚĀ I. The daughter of Bānāsura and the wife of Aniruddha.

1) Genealogy. Descended from Viṣṇu in the following order:- Brahmā - Kaśyapa - Hiraṇyakaśipu - Prahlāda - Virocana-Mahābali-Bāṇa-Uśā.

2) Marriage of Uṣā. See under Aniruddha.

UŚA II. The daughter of a hermit. The king of Śalva once attacked Satyaratna, the king of Vidarbha, and killed him. The queens of the king of Vidarbha went to the forest. One of them who was pregnant gave birth to a child on the bank of a river. When she got down into the river to drink water, a crocodile swallowed her. Then a hermit's daughter named Uṣā brought up the child. (Śiva Purāṇa).

UŚA III. The night is called Uṣā and the day, Ghuṣṭī. The time between Uṣā and Ghuṣṭī is called Sandīyā. (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Aṣṭā 2, Chapter 8).

UŚANGU I. A hermit who lived in the western country. (M.B. Śānti Parva, Chapter 208, Stanza 30).

UŚANGU II. A synonym of Śiva. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 17, Stanza 105).

UŚANGU III. A king of the Yadu family. His father was Viṣṇiśvan and his son was called Citraratha. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 147, Stanza 29).

UŚANGAVA. A member of the durbar of the king Yama (god of death). (M.B. Śāhā Parva, Chapter 8, Stanza 26).

UŚANKU (RUŚANKU). A hermit. Seeing that old age was coming on him this hermit forsook his body in the Prthūdaka tirtha and went to the realm of Viṣṇu. Ārṣiśeṇa, Viśvāmitra, Sindhubhīpā, Devāpi and such others got Brāhmaṇy (the state of being Brahmī) by doing penance in the hermitage of this hermit. (M.B. Śānti Parva, Chapter 38, Stanza 33-39).

UŚANAS. The teacher Śukra, the son of the hermit Bhrigu. (See under Śukra).

UŚIK I. A hermit about whom mention is made in the Rgveda.

UŚIK II. One Uśik as the wife of the hermit Dirghatamas is mentioned in the Rgveda Mandala 1, Anuvāka 16, Sūkta 112. This Uśik was the maid of the queen of the old King of Kaliṅga. The king requested Dirghatamas to beget children by his queen. The queen did not like this. She sent her maid Uśik to Dirghatamas. The hermit Kāśīvān was the son born to Dirghatamas by Uśik. (Rgveda, Mandala 1, Anuvāka 18, Sūkta 125).

UŚINARA I. A famous king of the Candravānśa (Lunar dynasty).

1) Genealogy. Descended from Viṣṇu in the following order:- Brahmā-Ātri-Candra-Budha- Purūravas - Āyus-Nahuṣa-Yayāti-Anudhruyu-Sabhānara-Kālana - Śrījaya-UŚINARA. UŚINARA was the father of Sībi and Vena.

2) The reason for the curse of the eight Vasus. Once the Aśtāvāsas (Vasus eight in number) came to the hermitage of Vasiṣṭha, with their wives. The wife of Dyau, one of the Aśtāvāsas, saw the cow ‘Nandini’ in the hermitage. She and the daughter of UŚINARA were intimate friends. She wanted to get Nandini, so that she might give it as a present to the daughter of UŚINARA. According to her wish the Aśtāvāsas caught hold of the cow and took her home. At that time Vasiṣṭha had been away. When he returned, he knew about the theft of the cow and cursed the Aśtāvāsas to take birth in the wombs of women on earth. It was according to this curse that the Aśtāvāsas took birth in Gaṅgādevī the wife of Santanu. See under Bhīṣma. (Devi Bhāgavata, Skandha 2).

3) Indra testing UŚINARA. UŚINARA was a just and liberal-minded King. Indra decided to test the King regarding his liberality. He got Agnideva (fire-god) for his help. Indra took the form of a Kīte and Agnī that of a dove. Both flew down to UŚINARA as if the Kīte was chasing the dove. UŚINARA agreed to protect the dove. The Kīte argued with the King that it was not meet and right on his part to rob him of his lawful food. The King agreed to give any other kind of flesh to the Kīte. But the Kīte would have none of them. Finally the Kīte agreed to accept the flesh of the King instead, equal to the weight of the dove. The King cut more and more flesh from his body, but it could not weigh equal to the dove. At last the King himself got into the balance. Then the gods had pity on the King and the Kīte and the dove appeared in their real form and blessed the King and then they returned to heaven. (M.B. Aranyā Parva, Chapter 131). In Mahābhārata a story like this occurs about King Śibi also.

4) Other information.

(i) UŚINARA gave Gālava two hundred horses as dowry and married Yāyāti’s damsel Mādhavī. (See under Gālava).

(ii) The King Śunaka gave UŚINARA a sword. (M.B. Śānti Parva, Chapter 166, Stanza 79).

(iii) UŚINARA performed a sacrifice on the bank of the river Vitastā and became equal to Indra. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 130, Verses 20-21).

(iv) UŚINARA attained heaven by giving cows as gifts. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 76, Stanza 25).

UŚINARA II. A King of the Yādavas. In the Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 183, Stanza 20, it is mentioned that this King was present on the occasion of the Svayaṁvara (the bride choosing a husband) of Draupadi.

UŚINARA III. Mention is made in Mahābhārata, Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 32, that Vṛṣādabhī was another name of UŚINARA and that he had once ruled over the kingdom of Kāśī.

UŚINARA IV. A country. It is stated in Mahābhārata, Karna Parva, Chapter 5, Stanza 47, that Arjuna had killed the warriors of this country. In Mahābhārata, Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 33, Stanzas 22 and 23, mention is made that due to the curse of Brahmīs the Kṣatriyas (the ruling class) had become Śudras (servile class).
USIRABIJA I. A mountain in North India. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 139, Stanza 1).

USIRABIJA II. A place on the northern side of the Himālayas. Mention is made in Mahābhārata, Udyoga Parva, Chapter 111, Stanza 23, that the King Marutta once fought a battle here.

ŪŚMĀ. The son of the Agni (Fire) named Pāncejanya. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 221, Stanza 4).

ŪŚMAPĀ. A group of Pīṭhas (the Manes). It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Sabhā Parva, Chapter 8, Stanza 30, that these Pīṭhas (the manes) live in the palace of Yama.

ŪŚNĀDESA. An ancient place in Krauṇḍadvīpa (the island of Krauṇḍa). Krauṇḍacarvata (the mountain Krauṇḍa) stands near this place. (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 12, Stanza 21).

ŪŚNĪGAŚGA. An ancient holy place in Bhārata. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 135, Stanza 7).

ŪŚNĪK. One of the seven horses of the Sun. The seven horses of the Sun are, Gāyatrī, Brhati, Uśnīk, Jagati, Trisūṭ, Anuśūṭ, and Paṅktī. (Viśu Purāṇa, Aṅśa 2, Chapter 8).

ŪŚNĪNĀBHA. A Viśvadeva (a class of gods). (Mahābhārata, Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 91, Stanza 44).

ŪŚTRAKARNIKA. An ancient place in South India. Mention is made in Mahābhārata, Sabhā Parva, Chapter 31, Stanza 71, that this place was brought under control by Sahadeva.

2) Utathya drank up the sea dry. Varuṇa deva had an eye on Soma’s daughter Bhadrā when Utathya married her. Incensed at the marriage, Varuṇa carried Bhadrā off to the sea one day when Utathya was not present. Nārada informed Utathya that it was Varuṇa who stole his wife. Though Nārada, at the request of Utathya, asked Varuṇa to return Bhadrā to the former he did not oblige. Enraged at this Utathya drank up the sea dry. Yet, Varuṇa did not come round. Then Utathya rendered all the lakes of Varuṇa dry. Trembling at this Varuṇa returned Bhadrā to Utathya and prostrated at his feet. He pardoned Varuṇa and gave back the sea to him. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 154).

UTATHYA II. The muni Satyatapas. (See under Satyatapas.)

UTKALA I. A place in India where people lived in safety. Karna conquered this place. (Drona Parva, Chapter 4, Verse 8). Utkala is believed to be modern Orissa.

UTKALA II. Son of Vaivasvata Manu. (Brahmaṇḍa Purāṇa, Chapter 31).

UTKOCA (M). A holy place. Dhaumya, the younger brother of Devala lived in Utkotāritha. The Pāṇḍavas went there and made Dhaumya a priest. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 182).

UTKOCAKA (M). An ancient holy place. Dhaumya did tapas here, and it was here that the Pāṇḍavas took Dhaumya as their priest. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 152, Verses 2-6).

UTKRĀTHINI. A female attendant of Skanda. (M.B. Śalya Parva, Chapter 46, Verse 16).

UTKROŚA. One of the two attendants Indra gave to Skanda; the other was called Paṅcraperka. (M.B. Śalya Parva, Chapter 45, Verse 35).

UTPALĀVANA. A holy bath in the Panjab. At this place Viśvāmitra performed a sacrifice. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 37, Stanza 15).

UTPALINI. A river flowing near the forest known as Naimiśāranya. Arjuna had seen this river. (Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 214, Stanza 6).

UTPĀTAKA. A holy bath. Those who bathe in this tirtha (bath) will get the merits of a fast. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 25, Stanza 41).

UTSAVA. Celebrations conducted in temples from olden days. There are Sāstraic (scriptural) injunctions as regards conducting utsavas. Utsava is an indispensable celebration when once the deity (idol) is installed in the temple. Utsava should be celebrated for one day, three days or seven days in the very same month in which the deity was installed, because non-celebration of Utsava will render the installation ineffective. Utsava should be conducted either during Uttarāyaṇa (movement of the sun from south to north) or Viśu (when the Sun is in the centre) or at a time suitable to the temple authorities who conduct the utsava in Sayana, Upavana or Gṛha. It should commence with auspicious ceremonies like the sowing of seeds of nine varieties of foodgrains, and with dance, song, instrumental music etc.

UTSĀVASĀNKETA. A place in the South Bhārata. (Mahābhārata, Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 9, Stanza 61).

UTTAMA. A King born in the dynasty of Svāyambhuva Manu who had two famous sons, of whom Priyavrata married Surūpā and Barhiṣmati, two daughters of Viśvakarmā. Priyavrata begot three children, Uttama Tānasā and Raivata by his wife Barhiṣmati. These three sons attained exceptional prowess and became lords of the ages of Manu (Manvantarādhipati).

Priyavrata, with his children ruled the country in all happiness and prosperity for ten crores of years. (Devī Bhāgavata, 8th Skandha). Uttaṇāpāda, the second son of Svāyambhuva manu begot one son, Uttama by his wife Suruci and another son Dhruva by his wife Suniti. (See under Dhruva). (Viśu Purāṇa, Part 1, Chapter 11).

UTTAMĀSA. A particular place in ancient India. (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 9, Verse 41).

UTTAMAUJAS. A warrior who fought in the great war on the Pāṇḍava side. He belonged to the Pāṇcāla country.

It was Uttamaujas who guarded the right wheel of Arjuna’s chariot. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 15, Verse 19). He fought fiercely with Aṅgada. (Drona Parva, Chapter 28, Verses 38-39). He was defeated in a fight with Duryodhana. (Drona Parva, Chapter 130, Verses 30-43). Kṛtavarmā also defeated him. He killed Susena, son of Karna. (Karna Parva, Chapter 75, Verse 13). This valiant warrior was killed by Aśvatthāma. (Saupūṣṭa Parva, Chapter 8, Verses 35-36). His cremation is described in Verse 34, Chapter 26 of Stīr Parva.

UTTANABARHIS. The son of Śaryātī, a King of the family of Vaivasvata Manu. (Bhāgavata, Skandha 9).
UTTANAPĀDA

UTTANAPĀDA. A King. He was the son of Svāyambhuv Manu, the son of Brahmā. Svāyambhuva Manu had two sons Priyavrata and Uttanapāda. (Devi Bhāgavata, Skanda 8). A son named Uttama was born to Uttanapāda by his wife Suruci. Uttanapāda had another wife called Suniti. (Vīṣṇu Purāṇa, Amśa 1, Chapter 11). See under Dhrūva.

UTTANKA (UTTANKA). An ideal disciple of Veda who was the disciple of Āpodāhaumaṇya.

1) Uttanka and the Guru's wife. After entrusting management of the āśrama to Uttanāka, Veda once went out on a tour of the country, and Uttanka stayed in the āśrama carrying out the instructions of the Guru. Then came the menstrual period of Veda's wife, and his other wives requested Uttanka to do the needful, so that the fertile period of their co-wife was not wasted. Uttanāka's reply to them was as follows:—"Asking by women, I shall not do this improper act; and the preceptor has not asked me to do such a thing though it might be improper."

His Guru, Āpodāhaumaṇya returned to the āśrama some time after this, and was very pleased to hear about the above incident. He blessed Uttanāka. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 3).

2) His tuition fee. His education being over, it was now time for Uttanāka to give due offerings—tuition fee to his guru, and Uttanāka enquired of the guru as to what he would have by way of dākṣīṇā. The guru asked Uttanāka to get his wife's instruction in the matter and act accordingly. Because of the aforesaid incident (Uttanāka not acting on the guru's wife during her menstrual period) she had a grudge against him, and therefore, asked him to bring as his tuition fee the ear-rings worn by the Kṣatriya wife of King Pausā.

Uttanāka set out to procure the ear-rings. On the way he saw an ox, and on its back a big man, who called out to Uttanāka to eat the excretion of the ox. When Uttanāka hesitated to do so, the man on the ox asked him again to eat it, pointing out that his guru, Veda, had done it. Then did Uttanāka consume both the excretion and urine of the ox, and did his oblations, in his perplexed mood, standing. Uttanāka arrived at the palace of King Pausā and told him about the object of his visit. The King agreed to it. But, when Uttanāka entered the Zenana Pausā's Kṣatriya wife could not be seen. When Uttanāka told the King about this, he remained thoughtful for some time and told the former that he might surely have become impure due to performance of oblations in the wrong manner, and that his wife would not be visible, due to her chastity, to the eyes of such impure folk. Uttanāka admitted to having, on his way, performed oblations not in the proper manner, and then he sat down facing the east after washing his hands, feet etc. and performed oblation in the correct manner. Then did the wife of King Pausā become visible to him, and she, pleased at his humility, handed over her ear-rings to him. She also advised him to be very careful about the ear-rings as they had once been coveted by Taksaka, King of the serpents. Bidding adieu to the queen, Uttanāka saw the King and they sat together to take food. Not only was the rice cold; but a hair was also found in it. Uttanāka cursed the King and rendered him blind, and the King, in turn, cursed Uttanāka not to have children. But, both of them became calm quite soon and withdrew their curses.

On his way back to the āśrama with the ear-rings, he had only just stepped into a pool for a wash, when a naked Buddha sannyāsin, who was following him, snatched and ran off with the ear-rings. It was really Taksaka disguised as the sannyāsin who thus snatched the ear-rings. Uttanāka chased him and caught him when he assumed his original form of the serpent King and disappeared into a cave. Uttanāka waited at the mouth of the cave stupefied, when Indra deputed his Vajrāyudha to help Uttanāka. The Vajrāyudha cut a tunnel-like route to Pātāla from the earth and through the cave Uttanāka reached Pātāla by this route and found out the palace of Taksaka.

Though Uttanāka praised and cajoled the Nāgas (serpents) their King Taksaka did not make his appearance. Uttanāka saw there two women, who had been weaving clothes, and on one machine there were black and white threads. The machine had one wheel with twelve spokes and was turned by six boys. Also there was a horse, and a man. When Uttanāka praised them, the horse and the man approached him. The man advised Uttanāka to blow through the anus of the horse so that the snakes could be brought round. Uttanāka did so, when lo! from all the pores on the body of the horse, flames of fire began sprouting out. When the Nāgaloka (country of serpents) got thus filled with fire and flames, Taksaka lost his nerves and came out with the stolen ear-rings, which Uttanāka received back. But, that was the last day on which the rings had been promised to be given to his guru's wife by Uttanāka, who remained there gloomy and sorrow-stricken at the thought that he would not be able to travel all the distance before sunset and give the ear-rings to the guru's wife. Then the horseman gave the horse to Uttanāka, who reached the āśrama just in time when the guru's wife was about to curse Uttanāka for not returning with the rings though it was nearly dusk time. Now the guru and his wife blessed Uttanāka, who detailed to them his experiences since leaving the āśrama in quest of the ear-rings. Then the guru spoke thus to Uttanāka—"The two women whom you found engaged in weaving were Dhātā and Vīdhātā, the white and black strings, day and night, and the six boys who turned the wheel with twelve spokes were the six seasons. The ox seen by you on the way was Airāvata (Indra's elephant), the horse seen in Pātāla was Agni-deva, and the horseman, Indra. The excretion you ate on your way was nectar, and that was the reason why you did not die in the Nāgaloka. Indra, who is my friend blessed you because of mercy towards you, my disciple. You could bring back the ear-rings also because of Indra's blessings."

Then the guru blessed Uttanāka and the latter took leave of them. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 3).

3) Uttanka and Janamejaya's serpent yajña. Uttanāka, determined on taking vengeance on Taksaka, went away directly from the āśrama to Hastināpura, where he met Janamejaya and told him the fact that it was Taksaka, who had bitten to death Parikṣit, his (Janamejaya) father. It was thus prompted by Uttanāka to take revenge upon Taksaka that Janamejaya performed the serpent yajña. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 3).
4) Uttanka and Dhundhumāra. See under Dhundhumāra.

5) Uttanka attained salvation. Uttanka was put up at a place called Ujjalaka. When he became old, he went about visiting many temples. During this tour one day Uttanka saw a hunter in the forest called Gulika attempting to steal the golden plates on the dome of the Viṣṇu temple in Sauvīra. Gulika raised his sword to kill Uttanka, when he told the former that he would have to suffer the results of sin during many births if he committed a sin. This admonition of Uttanka so touched the heart of the hunter that he fell dead on the spot with a repentant heart. Uttanka sprinkled Gāngā water on the corpse of the hunter, who attained Vaikunṭha (abode of Viṣṇu). On the advice of Viṣṇu, Uttanka went to Badarī where he did tapas and also attained Vaikunṭha. (Nārādiya Purāṇa).

In Chapters 53-58 of Asvamedha Parva of Mahābhārata is related the story of one Uttanka muni, under the caption ‘Uttakopākhyaṇa’. In Mahābhārata (original) he is referred to as Uttanka; but in its Malayālam rendering he is called Uttanka. There are no substantial differences between the story of Uttanka and that of Uttanka, Veda’s disciple. But, since, there are differences, in certain aspects some information about the Uttanka of the ‘Uttakopākhyaṇa’ is given below—

1) General. Uttanka was a disciple of Gautama, the husband of Ahalīyā. The guru had more love for Uttanka than for his other disciples, and therefore did not permit the latter to leave the Āśrama even after the other disciples were sent away. Uttanka became old; wrinkles attacked his body and greyness his head.

2) Tuition fee (Gurudaksana). Uttanka once returned from the woods with firewood, in a very tired condition. The daughter of the guru shed tears at the sight. Gautama called Uttanka to him and asked him about the cause of his grief and sorrow. Uttanka replied that the hairs on his head turned grey on account of sorrow that he was not permitted to leave the Āśrama although it was hundred years since he had gone there first as disciple. Then Gautama permitted Uttanka to quit the Āśrama. Uttanka asked Gautama what he should offer as tuition fee. Gautama consulted his wife on the topic and she suggested as tuition fee the two ear-rings of gems worn by the wife of King Saudāśa, who used to eat the flesh of man. Immediately Uttanka set out to fetch the ear-rings and on his way met Saudāśa in the forest, and told the latter about his mission. Saudāśa tried to eat Uttanka, who told him that he was in duty bound to obtain the ear-rings for his guru’s wife and that, after fulfilling the mission, he would return to Saudāśa to be eaten up by him. Saudāśa agreed to the proposition. He directed Uttanka to his wife Madayanti, who spoke to him thus—“Devas and Mahārṣis covet these ear-rings. If I place them on the ground, serpents will steal them; if handed over to Ucchīṣṭa, Yāsak will steal them, and if the watchman sleeps, Devas will snatch them off. Therefore, you should bring some token for me to believe that you are deputed by my husband.” Accordingly Uttanka went back to Saudāśa and returned to his wife with a token from him, and Madayanti handed over her ear-rings to Uttanka. Being told by Saudāśa that Uttanka need not return again to him, Uttanka started for Gautama’s āśrama with the ear-rings. Feeling hungry on the way, Uttanka tied to the branch of a vilva tree the ear-rings bundled in deer skin and ate vilva fruits. Just then the bundle of deer skin got untied and the ear-rings kept in it fell on the ground. A serpent carried off the rings between its teeth and concealed itself in a mole-hill. Highly grieved and upset by the sight, Uttanka fell down from the tree. For 35 days Uttanka dug the mole-hill. Then Indra felt great sympathy for him, appeared on the spot, and passed his Vajrāyudha through the mole-hill. Then the earth burst open and Uttanka entered Pātāla through the opening, and a horse, its tail white and the rest of the body black in colour presented itself to him. It asked Uttanka to blow through its anus. Uttanka did so and the Nāgāloka was filled with flames of fire. (The horse was Agnideva.) Then did the serpents return the ear-rings to Uttanka, who returned with it to Gautama and presented it to him (Gautama) as tuition fee.

3) Uttanka about to curse Śrī Kṛṣṇa. Uttanka once went to Dwārakā, and during their talk was about to curse Kṛṣṇa for not attempting to bring about a compromise between the Kauravas and the Pāṇḍavas. At once Kṛṣṇa exhibited his Viśvarūpa (himself as containing the whole universe). Thereupon Uttanka saluted Kṛṣṇa, who asked him to request for any boon. He prayed for the boon that water might be made available in any desert he visited. Kṛṣṇa told him that whenever he required water he might successfully think of him.

4) Indra tested Uttanka. Some time afterwards, while roaming about quite thirsty and tired in a desert, Uttanka thought about Kṛṣṇa, and at once there appeared before him a naked Cāndāla, his body covered with mud. Dogs encircled him. Uttanka hesitated to drink the water given to him by this Cāndāla, who had some water with him. The Cāndāla again insisted on Uttanka drinking the water, but he again refused the offer. The cāndāla then disappeared with the dogs. Within a few minutes a person with disc, conch, club etc. about him appeared, and Uttanka recognised him as Śrī Kṛṣṇa. Uttanka told Kṛṣṇa that it was not proper to give water to a brahmin through a cāndāla. Kṛṣṇa’s reply to this was as follows:—“I asked Indra to give you nectar instead of water, and he argued that it was not proper that men should be given nectar. I pleaded for you again. Indra replied to this that he himself would, in the guise of a cāndāla give nectar to you, and he should not be found fault with, if you refused the nectar. I accepted that proposition of his. But, you did not accept nectar thus offered to you. So, you cannot be given nectar now. But, there will appear water-laden clouds in deserts which you traverse, which would be known as ‘Uttanka clouds’ and they would give you sweet water.

Uttanka was pleased, and it is the Uttanka clouds, which form as per the above orders of Kṛṣṇa that cause rain to fall, though rarely, in deserts even today.

UTTARA I. The son of King Virāta of Matsya. Mention is made in the Mahābhārata, Virāta Parva, Chapter 35, Stanza 9 that Bhūmijāya was another name of Uttara. Uttara also accompanied his father Virāta, when he went to take part in the Svayamvar (choice of a husband) of Draupadi. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 185, Stanza 3).

2) Uttara and Arjuna. See the paragraph Ajñātavāsā under Arjuna.
3) The end of Uttara. Uttara had taken part in the battle between the Pándavas and the Kauravas. It is mentioned in the Mahâbhârata, Bhîṣma Parva, Chapter 45, Stanza 77 that a combat took place on the first day of the battle between Uttara and Virabhâhu. Uttara attacked Śâlīya who killed Uttara. (MB. Bhîṣma Parva, Chapter 47, Stanza 36 to 39). Uttara who met with a glorious death in the battle, got a place in heaven with the gods. (MB. Svârgârahoṇa Parva, Chapter 5, Stanza 17 and 18).

Uttara II. A King who had gone down because of his contemptuous behaviour towards his superiors.

Uttara III. A fire. (MB. Vana Parva, Chapter 221, Stanza 29 and Sabhā Parva, Chapter 22).

Uttara.

1) General information. Daughter of Virâṭa, the King of Matsya. Her brother was called Uttara.

2) Up to marriage. The Pándavas led their incognito life in the capital of the Matsya Kingdom. Arjuna adopted the name Bṛhannala and was employed as the tutor of princess Uttarâ in music and dancing. At the end of the life, King Virâṭa gave his daughter Uttarâ in marriage to Abhimanyu the son of Arjuna. (See the paragraph Ajñâtavâsa (incognito-life) under Arjuna).

3) Son. The son born to Abhimanyu and Uttarâ was Parīkṣit, who became a famous King later. (MB. Ādi Parva, Chapter 95, Stanza 83 and 84). See the seventh paragraph under Aśvathmâ).

4) The death of her husband. Abhimanyu was killed in the battle between the Pándavas and the Kauravas. It is mentioned in the Mahâbhârata, Droṇâ Parva, Chapter 78, Stanza 37 that Uttarâ fell unconscious, when she heard of the death of her husband. Śrî Kṛṣṇa consoled Uttarâ. In the Mahâbhârata, Śrî Parva, Chapter 20, Stanza 4 to 28 the lamentation of Uttarâ over the death of Abhimanyu is mentioned.

5) To the forest. Uttarâ also was seen among the women who accompanied Dhrtârâṣṭra, to a little distance when he went to the forest after the battle. (MB. Aśramavâśika Parva, Chapter 15, Stanza 10).

Uttaradîśa. See under Gâlava.

Uttarajyotiśa. An ancient city which stood in the western part of Bhrâta. It is said in the Mahâbhârata that Nakula conquered this city. (Sabhâ Parva, Chapter 32, Stanza 11).

Uttarakosâla. An ancient country in Bhrâta. It is mentioned in the Mahâbhârata, Sabhâ Parva, Chapter 30, Stanza 3 that Bhîmasena conquered Uttara Kosâla.

Uttarakuru. A part of the Jambûdvîpa (Island of Jambû). Mention is made in the Mahâbhârata that during his conquest Arjuna had gone up to this place and carried away from there plenty of wealth. It is believed by common people that this place is inaccessible to human beings. (MB. Sabhâ Parva, Chapter 28, Stanza 7 to 20). The southern end of this place is the Nilagiri and the Northern end Mount Meru. The inhabitants are gifted people, with trees bearing flowers and fruits, the flowers fragrant and the fruits sweet. A particular type of tree known as Kṣirī (milky) grows here from which milk will flow. There are also trees which will give you whatever you ask. It was the belief of ancient people that with the fruits of Kṣirī, you could make garments and ornaments. The soil of this place contains gems and in the sand there is gold.

Those who fall down from heaven live in this region. The average age of the inhabitants of this place is said to have been eleven thousand years. There is a kind of bird in this place called Bhrûṇḍa. These birds drag dead bodies away to caves. (MB. Bhîṣma Parva, Chapter 8, Stanza 2 to 13).

Uttaramânaśa. A holy place of pilgrimage. It is stated in the Mahâbhârata, Anûśâsa Parva, Chapter 25, Stanza 60, that those who visit this holy place will get atonement from the sin of Bhrûṇḍahatyā (causing embryony).

Uttara-pâñcâla. An ancient country in Bhrâta. Drupada became the King of this country on the death of King Pṛṣata. (MB. Ādi Parva, Chapter 129, Stanza 43). In course of time Uttaraâpâñcâla came under the control of the Ācârya Droṇa. (See under Droṇa). In the Mahâbhârata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 137, Stanza 70 to 76 it is mentioned that this country was on the north bank of the Gâṅgâ.

Uttarapâriyâtra. A mountain. (Bhâṣa Bhrâta, Vana Parva, Chapter 313, Stanza 8).

Uttarâpâtha. North Bhrâta. (MB. Śânti Parva, Chapter 207, Stanza 43).

Uttara Râmâyâna. The second part of the Râmâyana. Uttara Râmâyâna comprises the story from Śrî Râma's return from the exile in the forest and assuming the ruling of the country onwards.

Uttara Ulûka. The country of Ulûka in North India. It is mentioned in the Mahâbhârata, Sabhâ Parva, Chapter 27, Stanza 11 that Arjuna conquered this country.

Uttेजिनि. A follower of Skandadeva. (MB. Śalya Parva, Chapter 45, Stanza 6).

Vâbhra-vâyaṇi (Bâbhra-vâyaṇī). One of Viśvâmitra's sons, who were all Brahmavâdins. (MB. Anûśâsa Parva, Chapter 4, Stanza 57).

Vâdânya. An ancient hermit. (For further details see under Aśṭâvakara).

Vadhâ. Son of Yâudhâna, a giant. It is mentioned in Brahmâṇḍa Purâṇa that this giant had two sons Vighna and Sama.

Vadhra. A country in ancient India. (Mahâbhârata, Bhîṣma Parva, Chapter 9, Stanza 55).

Vadhrimâti. A princess, praised in Rgveda. This beautiful princess got a hermaphrodite as her husband. She shed a good deal of tears and prayed to the Aśvins (Charioteers of Indra, celebrated as Gods of light and helpers) in consequence of which she got a son named Hiranyahasta. (Rgveda, Mandala 1, Sûkta 116).

Vadhûsâra. A river which flowed through the vicinity of the hermitage of Cyavana. This river took its origin from the tears of Pulomâ, the wife of hermit Bhrûgu. (For further details see under Cyavana). Because of a bath taken in this river, the body of Parasûrâma shone with radiance. (MB. Vana Parva, Chapter 99, Stanza 60).

Vadhyaśva. A king in ancient India. It is mentioned in Mahâbhârata, Sabhâ Parva, Chapter 8, Stanza 12, that the spirit of this king stays in the palace of Yama, praising him.

Vâdî. A son of emperor Pṛthu. Pṛthu had two righteous sons called Antardhâna and Vâdí. A son named Hâvirdhâna was born to Antardhâna by Śikhâṇḍîni. Dhiṣanâ born in the dynasty of Agni became the wife of Havir-dhāna. Six sons named Praśinabarhis, Sukra, Gayā, Kṛṣṇa, Vraja and Ajīna were born to the couple. (Viśnu Purāṇa, Amśa I, Chapter 14).

VĀGBHATA. A Sanskrit scholar who lived in the 12th century A.D. He is the author of the two medical books 'Aṣṭāṅga-saṅgraha' and 'Aṣṭāṅgahṛdaya'. Another work called 'Neminīrvāṇa' is also written by Vāgbhaṭa.
This work deals with the story of Neminātha, a Jain hermit.

Not much is known about Vāgbhaṭa. He was a scholar in rhetorical science. There are certain stories about his writing the medical books. It was a period when the muslims had beaten down the Brahmins. They had taken away the medical science also from them. The Brahmins considered this to be a disgrace to them. They declared to select an intelligent boy and send him to a Muslim physician. They selected Vāgbhaṭa. The Brahmins disguised Vāgbhaṭa as a Muslim boy and sent him to the Muslim Physician on the other side of the river.
The boy went to the physician and told him that he was coming from far away with the intention of learning medical science. The teacher put certain questions and understood that the boy possessed extraordinary intelligence. He began to teach the boy the science of medicine. Seeing the interest of the boy the teacher asked the boy to eat food from his house and to learn day and night. The Brahmin boy did not like to eat the food of Muslims. The boy said that he had a relative on the other side of the river and that he would go there and have his supper and return for the night study.
The teacher agreed and thenceforward Vāgbhaṭa began to learn day and night. Within a short time he completed learning.

One day the teacher was sleeping on the seventh storey of the building and his disciple Vāgbhaṭa was massagning his legs. The boy soliloquised that fate had destined him to massage the legs of a Musalman. Instantly he cried bitterly, and the teacher awoke and understood that the boy was not a Muslim, and tried to cut his head. The boy thought: 'The four Vedas and the six Śāstras say that there is a god. If it is true no harm will come to me.' Then he jumped out of the window.
In consequence of this jump, he became a little lame and no other harm befell him. He swam across the river and reached the other side and told the Brahmins everything. The Brahmins asked him what he imagined when he jumped from the seventh storey. He replied
'I jumped with this imagination. The four Vedas and the six Śāstras say that there is a god. If it is true no harm will come to me.' As soon as the boy had finished the Brahmins became angry and they all got up.
They said 'You went wrong in using the doubtful 'if', instead of the affirmative 'As'. The Brahmins joined together and expelled him from the society. The boy thought of going away somewhere. 'But there won't be another chance for somebody else to go and learn medical science from the Muslim physicians. So before going away from here I must make the fruits of my efforts available to these people.' Thinking so he lived there for a little longer. He lived there without ming-lng with the Brahmins, cooking his food. It is believed that Vāgbhaṭa wrote 'Aṣṭāṅga-saṅgraha' and 'Aṣṭāṅga-hṛdaya', during this period.

VĀGDUSTA. One of the seven sons of hermit Kauśika.
(Matsya Purāṇa, 20: 3). The famous Pitravartti was the youngest brother of Vāgdustā.

VĀGINDA. Son of the king Prakṛta born in the family of Gṛtsamāda. It is stated in Mahābhāratā, Anuśasana Parva, Chapter 30, Stanza 63 that he was the father of King Pramiti.

VĀGMI. A son born to Manasyu, the grandson of emperor
Puru, by his wife Sauvārī. This son had two brothers Śakta and Samihanana. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 24, Stanza 45).

Five sons such as Āsavān and others were born to Kuru by his wife Vāhinī. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 94, Stanza 50).

VAHNI I. An asura. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Śānti Parva, Chapter 227, Stanza 52 that this asura had been a lokapāla (Indra, Agni, Yama and Varuṇa were called lokapālas) in olden days.

VAHNI II. The son of the king Turvasu. Vahni had a son named Bharga who became very famous. (Bhāga-vata, Skanda 9; Brahmāṇḍa Purāṇa, 3: 74, 1).

VAHNI III. One of the sons born to Kṛṣṇa by Mitravindā. (Bhāgvata, Skanda 10).

VAHNIJĀVĀLAM. A hell. (See the portion Naraka under Kāla).

VĀHYAKĀ. The two daughters of King Śṛṅjava. They were married by Bhajamāna, a Yādava king. Three sons named Nimi, Kṛṣṇa and Vṛṣṇi were born to them.
(Matsya Purāṇa, 44: 49-50).

VAIBHĀJATA. A garden. It is stated in Bhāgvata, Skanda 5, that this garden is situated on the top of the mountain Supārśva which stands as a prop to Mahā-meru.

VAIDARBHI I. A wife of King Sagara. This king born of the Solar dynasty, had two wives named Vairābhī d Saibyā. Vairābhī was also called Sumati and Saibyā had another name Keśīṇī. Of these two, Vairābhī gave birth to sixtythousand sons and Saibyā to one son named Asamañjasa. (See under Sagara).

VAIDARBHI II. Wife of the King Kuśa. Four sons named Kuśamba, Kuśanābha, Asūrtarajas and Vasu were born to Kuśa by Vairābhī. (Vālmiki Rāmāyaṇa, Bāla Kāṇḍa, Sarga 32).

VAIDARBHI III. A king. This King gave his daughter Lopāmudrā in marriage to Agastya. (M.B. Anuśasana Parva, Chapter 137: Verse 11).

VAIDEHA III. Another name of the country of Videha.

It has the meaning, that which is in Videha. (M.B. Bhishma Parva, Chapter 9, Stanza 57).

VAIḌŪRYAPARVATA. A mountain which stands near Gokarpāthirā (holy place) in the country of Sūrpaṇraka (Kerala). Agastya once built a hermitage on this mountain. If one bathes in the river Narmadā, after having visited this Vaiḍūrya mountain one could attain the holy worlds. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 33, Verse 13).

VAIDYA. One of the sons born to Varuṇa by his wife Śunādevī. His sons ērṇi and Muni fought with each other and died. (Vāyu: 84: 6-8).

VAIḤĀYAṢA. A cavity or a sacred pit (kuṇḍa) situated near the hermitage of Naranārāyaṇa. (M.B. Sānti Parva, Chapter 127, Stanza 3).

VAIṆJAYANTA I. The capital city of an asura named Timiḍhivaṇa, otherwise called Śambara. (See under Timiḍhivaṇa).

VAIṆJAYANTA II. Name of the flag of Indra. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 42, Stanza 8).

VAIṆJAYANTA III. A mountain standing in the middle of the sea of Milk. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Śanti Parva, Chapter 35, Stanza 9, that Brahmā comes to this mountain daily for devotion and meditation.

VAIṆJAYANTI. Two bells of Airāvata. Indra presented these two bells to Subrahmanya, who, in his turn, gave one of them to Viṣṇu. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 231, Stanza 13).

VAIKARṬANA. Another name of Karṇa.

VAIḴĀṆASA. A philosopher. He had written a book known as "Vaiḵāśnava-dharmapraśaṇa". Matters concerning the duties of a forest-house-holder, occupation suitable for children born of wedlocks which are in accordance with natural law as well as contrary to the natural order, etc. are dealt with in detail, in this book. A large number of quotations from Vaiḵāṇava-dharmapraśaṇa occur in Manusmṛti.

VAIḴĀṆASAŚ. A group of hermits of the Vedic age. There were hundred hermits in this group. (Ṛgveda, 9: 66). They were born from the finger nail of Brahmā. (Taittirīya, 1, 23).

VAIḴUNṬHA I. The dwelling place of Mahāviṣṇu.

VAIḴUNṬHA II. Another name of Mahāviṣṇu. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Śanti Parva, Chapter 342, Stanza 80, that when Viṣṇu made creation with the five elements, his powers did not have any hindrance (kuṇḍhita) and so he got the name Viṅkuṭha.

VAIḴUNṬHA III. A Brahmin saint who lived in the Tretāyuga. The living things got deliverance from sin, the moment they came into contact with him. This power of Viṅkuṭha to give living things deliverance, is mentioned in Padma Purāṇa, Brahma khaṇḍa, Chapter 3, as follows:

Viṅkuṭha once lighted a ghee-lamp in the presence of Viṣṇu in Kārttika and returned home. At that time a rat came there and began to drink the ghee. Then the lamp blazed into a flame. The rat was terrified at this, and ran away. But by the grace of Viṣṇu the rat got deliverance from all its sins.

That rat was killed by snake-bite. The men of Yama came with ropes. Instantly the messengers of Viṣṇu also came on Garaṇa. Yama's men got afraid of Viṣṇu's messengers and humbly asked them: "For what goodness of him are you taking this great sinner to Vaikuṇṭha?" They replied: "He had blazed a lamp before the presence of Viṣṇu. That act has earned for him a place in Vaikuṇṭha. The goodness earned by lighting a lamp with devotion and love in Kārttika, could be described only by Mukunda." After that the rat was taken to Vaikuṇṭha.

VAIṬĀṆIKA. A holy place. Mention is made in Mahābhārata, Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 25, Stanza 23, that those who bathe in this holy place could freely walk about in the world of the celestial maids.

VAIṆIṬRĀ. One of the Saptamāṭis (seven mothers). They are Vaimitrā, Kāki, Halimā, Mālini, Bṛhadā, Āryā and Pālālā. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 228, Stanza 10).

VAIṆATEYA I. One of the prominent sons of Garaṇa. (M.B. Udyaṇa Parva, Chapter 101, Stanza 10).

VAIṆATEYA II. Son of Vināṭa. (Garaṇa).

VAIṆYA. Another name of emperor Pṛthu. (See under Pṛthu).

VAIṚJĀ. One of the Sapta Piṭrs (Seven Menes). The Sapta Piṭrs are, Vairāja, Agniśvāta, Somapā; Gārhapatiya, Ekaśṛṣṭa, Caturveda and Kala. (M.B. Sābhā Parva, Chapter 11, Stanza 46).

VAIṚĀMAS. A caste of people in Ancient India. The people of this caste gave Dharmaputra, various kinds of jewels and other costly things as presents and then attended the Rājasūya of the Pāṇḍavas. (M.B. Sābhā Parva, Chapter 51, Verse 12).

VAIṚĀṬA. One of the hundred sons of Dhṛtarāṣṭra. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 96, Verse 26, that this Vairāṭa was killed in the battle of Bharata by Bīmascena.

VAIṢĀKHĀ. A month. This month comes after the month of Caitra and before the month of Jyeṣṭha. It is stated in Mahābhārata, Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 106, that by observing the fast of taking food only once, daily in this month, one could acquire prominence among kinsmen and people of one's own caste.

VAIṢĀKHAVRATA. See under Dhṛṣṭabuddhi.

VAIṢĀLĀ. A city. This city was founded by King Viṣṇu, who belonged to the dynasty of Dīśa. Because Nābāga, the son of Dīśa had married a woman from Viṣṇya caste, he also became Viṣṇya. The writings of Vatsa, the son of Bhalandana of this family, are included in the Ṛgveda. The differentiation of castes was not so strict in those days as today. It is not known in what country Dīśa and his people Anagas lived. The Kings Karandhama, his son Aśvīṣt and his son Marutta of this dynasty were great and valiant. Marutta had performed both horse sacrifices (aśvamedha) and imperial consecration (Rājasūya). To Trūbadnī, who was in the tenth generation from Marutta, a son was born named Viṣāla. This Viṣāla founded a city and lived there. That city is called Vaiṣāla. Many of the scholars are of opinion that this city Vaiṣāla is the same as Ujjayinī. It is stated in Mahābhārata that Soma-datta of the seventh generation from Viṣāla had performed ten aśvamedhas (horse-sacrifices).

VAIṢĀLĀKṢA. The Law of conduct of Brahmā. Since Śiva, who is Viṣālākṣa (far-sighted) had collected and abridged them, it came to be called Vaiṣālākṣa. (M.B. Śānti Parva, Chapter 59, Stanza 82).
VAISHALINI. The daughter of King Visā. She was married by Avikṣī, the son of Karandhama. The famous Marutta was the son born to this couple. (Mārkandeya Purāṇa, Chapters 119-126).

VAISHAMPAYANA.
1) General information. A prominent disciple of Vyāsa. It is mentioned in Devi Bhāgavata, Skandha 1, that the main disciples of Vyāsa were Asita, Devala, Vaishampayana, Sumantu, Jaimini, Paila and some others. (See under Bhrārata).
2) Other details.
(i) It was Vaishampayana who told the story of Bhrārata composed by Vyāsa, to King Janamejaya. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 1, Stanza 20).
(ii) Vaishampayana told Janamejaya the story of Bhrārata at the instruction of Vyāsa. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 60, Verse 22).
(iii) Vaishampayana praised Mahābhārata and spoke of its greatness. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 62, Stanza 12).
(iv) Once Vaishampayana was overpowered by ignorance, and he killed a Brahmin. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 6, Stanza 36, that in spite of it he attained heaven.

VAISHNAVACĀPA. The bow of Visū. (For further details see under Visū, para 7, sub-section 7).

VAISHNAVADHARMAPARVA. A sub-section of Āsvamedhika Parva in Mahābhārata.

VAISRAVANA. Kubera. (See under Kubera).

VAISVADEVA (M). A sacrifice. It is mentioned in Devi Bhāgavata, Skandha 11, that a brahmin should perform this sacrifice to protect himself from harms caused by oven, threshing stone, axe, cutting knife, and other weapons. This sacrifice could be performed in a cavity for kindling fire on the floor besmeared with cowdung and mud. It should not be done in an ordinary oven meant for cooking, in iron oven, in earthenware or on ordinary floor. As all the deities are having faces of fire, the sacrificial fire should not be kindled by fanning the flame with hand, winnow, hide of black antelope or cloth. By fanning the flame with cloth, the sacrificer will contract disease; by winnowing he would sustain loss of wealth; and death, by fanning with hand. Plums, fruits, roots, curd, ghee etc. could be used as burnt offerings. When these are not available, firewood, roots of herbs, grass etc. could be used instead. Things to be offered as burnt-offerings should be purified, first by sprinkling ghee on them. In the absence of ghee, milk, curd and water may be used. Using things which are unfit as burnt-offerings will invite bad results.

In Vaiśvadeva-sacrifice, half-burnt firewood used in cooking, should never be used. So also salts of any kind. After finishing Vaiśvadeva, Gograsa (giving rice to cow) also should be done.

VAISVANARA I. A hermit. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Sahā Parva, Chapter 7 Verse 18, that this hermit stays in the palace of Indra. (Rgveda, Manḍala 1, Anuvāka 11, Sūkta 59).

VAISVANARA II. The first son of Agni called Bhānu. In Cāturmāya-sacrifice, this fire Vaiśvānāra also is worshipped along with the fire Parjanya. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 221, Stanza 16).

VAISVANARA III. One of the sons born to Kaśyapa by his wife Manu. (Bhāgavata, Skandha 6).

VAIVĀHIKAPARVA I. A sub-section of Ādi Parva in Mahābhārata. This Comprises chapters 192 to 198 of Ādi Parva.

VAIVĀHIKAPARVA II. A sub-section of Vaiṣṭa Parva. This comprises Chapters 70 to 72 of Vaiṣṭa Parva.

VAIVASVATA MANU. The seventh Manu. There is a description of Manu Vaivasvata under Manvantara.
1) Genealogy. Descended from Visū in the following order:-Brahmā-Mātrici-Kaśyapa-Vivasvān-Vaivasvata Manu.
2) The incarnation of Matsya and Vaivasvata Manu. See under Avatāra, Section "Matsya."
3) Wife and children. The wife of Vaivasvata Manu was Śraddhā. Many sons were born to the couple. Prominent among them were, Yama, Yami, Aśvinikumāras, Revanta, Sudyumna, Ikṣvāku, Nṛga, Śaryādi, Diśa, Diśata, Karuṣa, Narīṣyanta, Nābhaga, Prādhara and Kavi.

VAIVASVATA TIRTHA. A holy place. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 25, Stanza 29, that he who bathes in this holy bath would become himself a holy tirtha.

VAISYA. One of the four castes. (For further details see under Varṇa and Caturvāraṇya).

VAITALI. A warrior of Subrahmanya. (M.B. Sālya Parva, Chapter 43, Stanza 67).

VAITANDA. Son of Āpa, one of the eight Vasus. Āpa had four sons named, Vaitandā, Śrama, Śanta and Dhvani. (Visū Purāṇa, Anśa 1, Chapter 15).

VAITARANĪ I. A hells. (See under Kāla, the Section Narakā).

VAITARANĪ II. The name of river Ganges when it flows through the world of the Manes. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 169, Stanza 22).

VAITARANĪ III. A river. The prominence of this river is given below:
(i) This river stays in the court of Varuṇa and glorifies him. (Mahābhārata, Śabha Parva, Chapter 9, Stanza 20).
(ii) This river gives remission of sins. There is a spot called Virajātirtha, in this river. He who bathes in this holy place would shine like the moon. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 85, Stanza 6).

VAJA. A son of Sudhanvā, whose father was Aṅgiras. It is mentioned in Rgveda, Manḍala 1, Aṣṭaka 1, Sūkta 111, that Sudhanvā had three sons named Rbhu, Vibhvan and Vāja.

VAJAPEYA. A sacrifice.

VAJASANEYA. A religion or religious book (scripture). At the end of Kaiṭiyu, people will become thieves and lose all good qualities, and moreover fifteen branches of the Veda Vājasaneyas alone will be accepted as Regulations of life. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 16).

VAJASANEYA (VAJASANEYAS). A group of Priests. Priest Yājñavalkya was one of the disciples of Yajur Veda-group of Vyāsa. Of the line of disciples, Yājñavalkya had fifteen disciples. They were called Vājasaneyins or Vājasaneyas.

The Yajus—collection received from the god Sun were divided into fifteen groups by Yājñavalkya and given to each of his disciples. From that day onwards, his disciples became famous by the name Vājasaneyas. (Br. U 7-3-7).
VĀJĀŚRĀVAS. A priest who was the son of Naciketas. (Bṛhadāraṇyaka Upaniṣad, 6-4-33).

VĀJRA I. Son of Visvāmitra. He was an expounder of Vedas. (M.B. Anūśāsana Parva, Chapter 4, Stanza 52).

VĀJRA II. The son of Aniruddha, who was the grandson of Śrī Kṛṣṇa. Mention is made in Mahābhārata, Mausala Parva, Chapter 7, Stanza 72, that after the extermination of the Yādavas by the mausala fight (the fight with grass grown from the filings of the iron-pestle), Arjuna anointed Vajra as the King of the remaining Yādavas. When the Pāṇḍavas began the Mahāprasthāna (the great departure), Yudhīṣṭhīra called Subhadrā and instructed her to look after Vajra with particular care. (M.B. Mahā Prasthāna Parva, Chapter 1, Stanza 8).

VĀJRA BĀHU I. A notorious asura. Vajrabāhu was born of a Vidyādhara-damsel named Cañcikalakṣī, when she was raped by the asura Sahasramukha. This Vajrabāhu did penance before Śiva and obtained Pāṇu-patāstra (a divine arrow) and an impenetrable armour. After this, he caught hold of Indra and bound him. Subrahmanyā rescued Indra and killed Vajrabāhu. (Kamba Rāmāyaṇa, Uttra Kāṇḍa).

VĀJRA BĀHU II. A monkey. With other monkeys Vajrabāhu got on the body of Kumbhakarṇa and scratched his face and body and did much harm in the battle between Rāma and Rāvaṇa. Kumbhakarṇa caught hold of them and ate them. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 287, Stanza 67).

VĀJRA DĀMŚTRA I. A ferocious giant who was a follower of Rāvaṇa. In Vālmiki Rāmāyaṇa, Yuddha Kāṇḍa, Sarga 54, mention is made that this giant was killed by Angada in the Rāma-Rāvaṇa battle.

VĀJRA DĀMŚTRA II. A captain of the army of Tripurāsura. It is stated in Gaṇeśa Purāṇa that Tripurāsura gave his captain clothes, villages etc., as presents, for bringing Pāṇa (netherworld) under control.

VĀJRA DATTĀ. The King of Prājīyotisapura. He was the son of Bhagadatta. He attacked the neighbouring kings and defeated them. He caught hold of the sacrificial horse of Yudhīṣṭhīra, led by Arjuna, who fought with Vajradatta for three days and defeated him. (M.B. Aśvamedha Parva, Chapters 65 and 74).

VĀJRA JĀVĀLĀ. A daughter of Mahābali. This Vajrajāvālā was the wife of Kumbhakarṇa. (Uttra Rāmāyaṇa).

VĀJRA KĀNṬKĀSĀLĪ. A hell. (See the part Naraka under Kāla).

VĀJRA MUSṬI. A giant. Vajramuṣṭi was the son born to Mālyavān of his wife Sundā. Vajramuṣṭi had six brothers named Vīrūpaśa, Durnukha, Suptaghna, Yajñakośa, Matta and Unmatta and a sister named Nālā. (Uttra Rāmāyaṇa).

VĀJRA NĀBHĀ I. A warrior of Subrahmanyā. (M.B. Śalya Parva, Chapter 45, Stanza 63).

VĀJRA NĀBHĀ II. A King of the line of Śrī Rāma. The genealogy is the following. Śrī Rāma-Kuṣa-Aditi-Niṣadhā-Nabhas-Puḍḍarikā-Kṣemadhāvāvā - Devānīka - Rkṣa-Pāryāṭa-Bala-Vinda-Vajranābha. Khagana was the son of Vajranābha. (Bhāgavata, Skanda 9).

VĀJRA NĀBHĀ III. An asura. Prabhāvatī whom Pradyumna the son of Śrī Kṛṣṇa married, was the daughter of this asura. (For details see under Prabhāvatī).

VĀJRA NĀBHĀ IV. A King who ruled over Mathurā. He was a friend of Parīkṣit. At the request of hermit Śaṅḍilya, Uddhava talked to Vajranābha about the greatness of Bhāgavata.

VĀJRAṆĀGA. An asura. This asura was born to Kaśyapa of his wife Diti. Tārakāśura was born to Vairāgī of his wife Vairāgī (For details see under Pārvatī, Para 2).

VĀJRAPRĀŚĀDA. A house in heaven. Maṇḍvīpa is situated above the world of Brahmā. This is an island in the sea of Amṛta with an area of several yojanas. All the sand particles on the shore of the sea of Amṛta are jewels. Beyond the trees of jewels standing on the sea-coast, there is an iron-wall with four towers. Those who come here to see Devī (goddess) should get down from their vehicles here. Beyond this wall of iron, there are seven walls of bronze, copper, lead, brass, a mixture of five metals, silver and gold. They are called Saṃpāṭālas. Between the walls there are several parks such as Kalpa-vātikā, Santanāvakātikā, Haricandana-vātikā, Mandāravātikā, Pārijātavātikā, Kadambavātī etc. On passing the seven walls, several houses are seen. They are topaz-house, jacinth-house, diamond-house, chryspose-house, sapphire-house, ruby-house, emerald-house, etc. (Devī Bhāgavata, Skanda 11).

VĀJRAŚĪRĀ. A son of hermit Bhṛgu. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Anūśāsana Parva, Chapter 35, Stanza 125, that hermit Bhṛgu had seven sons named Cyaovanā, Vajraśīrā, Sucī, Aurvā, Sukra, Vareṇya and Savana.

VĀJRAVEGA. A giant who was the brother of Khara, Dūṣaṇa and Tri īras. In the battle between Rāma and Rāvaṇa Vajravega stood as the attendant of Kumbhakarṇa and fought with Śrī Rāma and was killed by Hanūmān. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 287).

VĀJRAVIṢKAMBAH. A child of Garuḍa. (Mahābhārata, Udyoga Parva, Chapter 101, Stanza 10).

VĀJRAṆUDHA (Thunderbolt). The famous weapon of Indra. 1) The making of this weapon. In olden days a fierce asura named Vṛtra was born. The Kālākeyas and many other asuras became his followers. They began to cause havoc in the world, and cause harm to the Devas. At last under the leadership of Indra, the Devas went to Brahmā and informed him of their grievances and requested for advice as to the way of killing Vṛtra. Brahmā told them that only with a weapon made of the bone of the hermit Dadhi, could Vṛtra be killed. The Devas went to the bank of the river Sona and saw the hermit Dadhi, who was the foremost of munificent men, doing penance there. Indra told him the purpose of their visit. He told the Devas to take his bone, if it was useful to them. Saying this he forsook his body. The Devas took the bones of the hermit and gave them to Vīvākarmā who made a powerful weapon with them and gave that to Indra. They named the weapon the ‘thunderbolt’. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 100).

2) The face of Subrahmanyā was cut. Once Indra was defeated by Narakāśura. He went to the Himalayas and hid himself there. Unable to see their King Indra, the devas went to Subrahmanyā. When Indra knew this, he thought that Subrahmanyā had taken possession of the world of the gods. So he came and fought with Subrahmanyā. The thunderbolt of Indra touched the face of Subrahmanyā and wounded him. From the blood which flowed from the face of Subrahmanyā two noble men appeared who eventually became warriors of Subrahmanyā. (Kathāsaritsāgara, Lāvāṇakalambaka, Taranaga 6).
3) Daily thunderbolt. In Viragna Purāṇa, Anśa 1, Chapter 5 and Anśa 2, Chapter 8, a process by which thunderbolt is made daily in the evening from the water particles thrown by Brahmans when they recite the spell Gāyatrī, is described.

In the evening, the fierce giants called the Mandehas wished to catch the Sun. Prajapati had given them a curse that though their bodies would not perish they would daily meet with death. So there is a fight between these giants and the sun daily in the evening. At that time the Brahmans recite the spell Gāyatrī with the Brahma-pervading syllable 'OM', and throw up water. This water becomes the Vajra weapon, and burns the giant.

4) The thunderbolt became a tiger. The hermits Nārada and Parvata once went to the palace of the King Śrīnāyana. The King worshipped them and served them for a long time, as a result of which a son was born to him. Indra decided to lessen the superior power of these hermits. Once the son of the King, who was a mere boy, was playing in the forest. At the instruction of Indra, the thunderbolt took the form of a tiger and went to the forest and killed the boy. Śrīnāyana became very sad. Nārada and Parvata brought the boy to life again and gave him to the King. (M.B. Sānti Parva, Chapter 30).

VAJRA I. Indra who wields the weapon Vajra (q.v)

VAJRA II. An eternal god concerned in offering to the manes. (Mahābhārata, Anuśāna Parva, Chapter 91, Stanza 33).

VAKA (BAKA). See under Baka.

VĀKĀ. The daughter of the giant Mālyavān. Viśravas married her. Three sons Triṣūras, Dūṣaṇa and Vidyujjihva and a daughter Anupālīka were born to the couple (Brahmāṇḍa Purāṇa, 3: 8: 39-56; Vāyu Purāṇa, 70 34-50). But in mahā Bhārata, mention is made only about three wives of Viśravas, named Puṣpotkaṭa, Rākā and Mālīṇī.

VAKA DĀLΒHYA (BAKA DāLBHYA). A hermit of Ancient India. The information obtained from Mahābhārata about this hermit is given below.

(He was a member of the council of Yudhiṣṭhir.) (M.B. Sabhā Parva, Chapter 4, Stanza 11).

(ii) Once Vaka Dālbhya lectured to Yudhiṣṭhir a about the greatness of Brāhmaṇas. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 26, Stanza 6).

(iii) On another occasion he described the welfare of eternal beings to Indra. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 193).

(iv) Once he stopped Śrī Kṛṣṇa, who was going to Hastināpura, and conversed with him on the way. (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 83, Stanza 65).

(v) The hermit Baka Dālbhya once talked about how the kingdom of Dhṛtarāṣṭra would be made burnt offering to fire. (M.B. Sāya Parva, Chapter 41, Stanza 5).

VAKANAKHA (BAKANAKHA). One of Viśvāmitra's sons who were expounders of the Vedas. (Mahā Bhārata Anuśāna Parva, Chapter 4, Stanza 58).

VĀKPĀRUSYA (Using harsh words). One of the wrongs brought under the rule of chastisement in ancient India. Without caring for the truth or falsity, a man praising another with a view to tease or offend him, is Vākpārūṣya. The teasing may be aimed at somebody with disabled members of the body or disabled organs of sense. Besides, using heart-rending words also comes under this crime. In olden days kings issued orders to fine anybody found guilty of this crime. Ordinarily the fine was 25 Panas. If the crime was committed against one who was below the level of the culprit the fine be paid was only half. If harsh words were used against other women or people of a higher level the fine was double. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 258).

VAKRA. A King in Ancient India. He is known by the name Dantavakra. (For further details see under Dantavakra).

VAKŠOGRIVA. Viśvāmitra's son, who was an expounder of Vedas. (M.B. Anuśāna Parva, Chapter 4, Stanza 53).

VAL (BALA). An asura. It is stated in Padma Purāṇa, Bhūmikhaṇḍa, how Indra killed this asura.

One day Vāla went to the sea for his evening worship. Devendra saw the asura, shining with the radiance of celibacy and the divine rod and deer-hide, praying on the sea-shore. Instantly Indra cut him into two with his weapon, the thunderbolt. Vala fell down motionless. Mention is made about this asura in Rgveda, Maṇḍala 1, Anuvāka 4. (For further details see under Bala).

VĀLAKA (BALĀKA). A forester. (For further details see under Balāka).

VĀLAKĀSVĀ. See under Balākāśva.

VĀLAHIYAS. See under Bālāhīyas.

VALLALA. See under Bālava.

VALGUJĀGHA. A son of Viśvāmitra. He was a Brahmavādī. (See under Viśvāmitra).

VALIMUKHA. A famous monkey in the army of Śrī Rāma. (Valmiki Rāmāyaṇa, Yuddha Kāṇḍa, Sarga 4, Verse 52).

VĀLISIKHA. See under Bālīṣika.

VALKALA. See under Bālvala.

VALLABHA I. The husband of Hemaprabhā, an unchaste woman. (See under Hemaprabhā).

VALLABHA II. Son of Balākāśva. He was a righteous King. Vallabha had a son named Kuśika. (M.B. Anuśāna Parva, Chapter 4, Stanza 5).

VĀLMIKI I. A hermit who was the first among poets and the author of Rāmāyaṇa.

1) General information. Knowledge about this hermit who was the first among the poets of Bhārata, is scanty. So we have to depend mainly on some hearsay for the life history of this sage.

It is said that Vālmiki was the tenth son of Varuṇa. But in his younger age he fell into the hands of wicked people and became a wicked man, like his friends. Then his name was not Vālmiki. Being a father, he had to support his family. For this purpose he used to plunder travellers. Once he happened to catch the Saptarṣis (the seven hermits) who passed by that way. The hermits asked him whether his wife and children would share the sins he had incurred by plundering. The plunderer could not answer that unexpected question. He ran home and asked his wife and children if they would share the sins incurred by him. They were not prepared to do so. In a moment his life underwent a thorough change. He ran to the Saptarṣis and knelt before them. They imparted to the forester, knowledge of the Vedas. The forester sat under a tree and began to sing Rāma Rāma. Days and months and years passed, unknown to him. He did not know that white ants had built a shelter above him. After several years the Saptarṣis returned by that way. They broke the ant-hill and took the hermit out. Because he came out of Vālmiki or white-ant-hill he came to be known as Vālmiki. He built his hermitage on the bank of the river Tamasā and lived there with his disciples. It was at this place that he composed the famous poem Rāmāyaṇa. (For further details see under Rāmāyaṇa).

2) Other details.

(i) Vālmiki shines in the palace of Indra. (M.B. Sābhā Parva, Chapter 7, Stanza 16).

(ii) Mention is made in Mahābhārata, Udyoga Parva, Chapter 83, Stanza 27, that Vālmiki met Śrī Kṛṣṇa who was going to Hastināpura as a messenger of the Pāṇḍavas.

(iii) Sātyaki recited a poem composed by Vālmiki, after having killed Bhūrīravas in the Bhārata-battle. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 143, Stanza 57).

(iv) Vālmiki told Yuddhiṣṭhira of the benefits of his devotion to Śiva. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 18, Stanza 6).

VĀLMIKI II. One of the prominent sons of Garuḍa. (Mahābhārata, Udyoga Parva, Chapter 101, Stanza 11).

VĀMĀ. An attendant of Subrahmanya. (M.B. Sālya Parva, Chapter 46, Stanza 12).

VĀMADEVA. An ancient hermit.

1) VāmaDEVA and Śala. Three sons named Śala, Dāla and Bala were born to King Parikṣit by his wife Suśobhānā, a princess of Maṇḍūka. In due course, King Parikṣit anointed his eldest son Śala as King and went to the forest for penance.

Once Śala went to the forest to hunt. While chasing a deer, the King asked his charioteer to bring horses capable of overtaking the deer. The charioteer told the King that such horses were available at the hermitage of VāmaDEva. They went to the hermitage of VāmaDEva and got the horses on condition that they would be returned.

After the hunting, Śala reached his capital. Seeing the beauty and the vigorous nature of the horses, the King did not like to part with them. VāmaDEva sent his disciple to the court of the King to take the horses back. But the King sent him back empty-handed. VāmaDEva got angry. He came in person and demanded his horses. The King replied that Brahmins did not require such horses. While these two were quarrelling with each other, some fierce giants came there and pierced Śala with a trident and killed him. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 192).

2) Other information.

(i) He was a friend of Vasiṣṭha and a priest of Daśaratha. (Vālmiki Rāmāyaṇa, Bālakāṇḍa, Sarga 7, Stanza 3).

(ii) Maṇḍala 4 of Rgveda was composed by VāmaDEva.

(iii) VāmaDEva was a hermit who had praised the Aśvinidevas when he was in his mother’s womb. (Rgveda, Maṇḍala 1, Sūkta 119).

(iv) Once VāmaDEva tried to eat the flesh of a dog because of hunger, with a view to save Brahmins. (Manusmṛti, Chapter 10, Stanza 106).

(v) He was a prominent member in the assembly of Indra. (M.B. Sābhā Parva, Chapter 7, Stanza 17).

(vi) Once VāmaDEva gave advice about righteousness to King Vasumanas. (M.B. Śanti Parva, Chapter 92).

VĀMADEVA II. A King. Arjuna defeated this King during his regional conquest of the North. (M.B. Sābhā Parva, Chapter 27, Stanza 11).

VĀMADEVA III. One of the seven sons born to Manu by his wife Śatārūpā. It is stated in Matsya Purāṇa, Chapter 4, that the Brahmin was born from the face, Kṣatriya from the hand, Vaśya from the calf of the leg and Śūdra from the foot, of VāmaDEva, who was an incarnation of Śiva. This VāmaDEva who had five faces and a trident in his hand, fought with Candra, when Tārā the wife of Brhaspati was carried away by Candra. (Matsya Purāṇa, 4-13).

VĀMĀNA I. An incarnation of Mahāvīra.

1) General information. There are ten main incarnations of Mahāvīra. Of these, the incarnation of Vāmāna is the fifth.

2) Two Vāmanas. Two different stories occur in the Purāṇas about the incarnation of Vāmāna. One story is about how Mahāvīra took the incarnation of Vāmāna and thrust Mahābali an asura, down to the netherworld. This story is more widely known. In the second story the place of Mahābali is given to the asura called Dhundhu. This is the main difference. For a comparative study, both stories are given below:

a) The first story of the incarnation of Vāmāna. The devas (gods) such as Indra and the others were born to Prajāpati Kaśyapa by his wife Aditi and the asuras (demons) such as Mahābali and others, by his wife Diti. The Dāityas (asuras) began to harm and harass the Devas to a great extent. Once Aditi, the mother of the Devas, complained to Kaśyapa about this. He advised her to take the fast called ‘Payovrata’ fixing the image of Mahāvīra in her heart and that he will take birth through her as Vāmāna and destroy Mahābali. According to the advice of her husband, Aditi began to take Payovrata, at the end of which Mahāvīra appeared before her and asked her what her wish was. She told Viṣṇu, of her grievances and Viṣṇu consoled her and said “You have invoked me by your prayer and fast for the safety of your sons. So I will enter your womb through the penance of Kaśyapa and take birth as your son and rescue your sons.” Mahāvīra disappeared. Aditi worshipped her husband with devotion. By contemplation Kaśyapa knew everything. He infused the energy he had acquired by penance into Aditi, who gave birth to a son. The birth took place on the twelfth day of the month of Bhadrapada, in the bright lunar fortnight at the auspicious moment called Abhijit, in the star of Śrāvaṇa. The infant had four hands. While Kaśyapa and Aditi were looking on, the infant changed its form and became a dwarffish Brahmīn boy. The Devas brought presents to the child. The Sun taught him the spell called Savitri mantra. Brhaspati gave the Brahmnstring. Kaśyapa gave the string wound round the waist. The earth gave the hide of a black antelope. Soma the Vanaspati gave a rod; Aditi gave the cloth over the privities, the sky an umbrella, the seven hermits gave Ku’a-grass, Brahmā gave a waterpot, Sarasvati gave a rosary and Kubera gave a pot.

At that time, the powerful Mahābali had brought the three worlds of heaven, earth and Pīṭāla (the netherworld) under his control: That Asura King performed a horse-sacrifice with the help of a Bhārgava Brahmīn. Hearing about it Vāmāna started for the place of sacrifice. Mahābali was performing the sacrifice at a place called Bhṛgukacchaka on the North bank of river Narmādā. The priests who were performing the rites and ceremonies of the sacrifice saw Vāmana coming slowly to the sacrificial hall. They wondered whether it was the Sun, Sanatkumāra or Agni (Fire) coming to see the sacrifice. While they were standing thus, Vāmana with his umbrella, rod and water pot filled with water entered the sacrificial hall. Mahābali welcomed Vāmana and asked him the purpose of his visit, Vāmana said “Oh! King! Your words are sweet. Noble Asura! give me three feet of ground which I measure with my feet. That is all what I want.” Mahābali agreed. The teacher-priest Sukra felt some doubts regarding the identity of Vāmana. So he secretly told Mahābali that the boy Vāmana was none other than Mahāvisnū and as such, he should not give any promise. But Mahābali had already given the promise. He refused to go back upon his words. The priest Sukra got angry at this and cursed Mahābali thus. “You boast that you are wise and learned. But you are disobedient, slow-witted and unwise. So all your prosperity will be destroyed.”

Though he was cursed, he did not deviate from the path of truth. He gave the promised ground to Vāmana by pouring water with the water brought in golden pot by his queen Vindhyāvalī. The names, Āśāna and Kotaṇā also are used in the Purāṇas for Vindhyāvalī the wife of Mahābali. She came out for the purpose wearing golden ornaments. Mahābali himself washed the feet of Vāmana, who instantly began to grow and became large beyond imagination. Everybody on the spot was amazed at the unimaginable bigness of Vāmana. On that huge figure, Mahābali saw the priest, the performers of sacrificial rites, the sacrificial hall, the universe, the elements, the qualities the senses, the mind, the individual spirits, and at the feet of the figure the world Rasāṭāla. He saw the earth on its feet, mountains below the knees, birds on its knees, the Maruṇa on its thighs, evening on its clothes, the Prājāpatis on its privities, the noble and mighty asuras on its loins, the sky on its navel, the oceans on its stomach, Dharma (duty) in its heart, rightness and truth on its breasts, Mahālakṣmi holding lotus on its chest, songs of Śāman and all other voices in its neck, all the gods beginning with Indra on its hands, the points (directions) on its ears, the ether on its head, the clouds on its hair, breaths in its nose, the sun in its eyes, fire on its face, the Vedas in its words, Varuna in its tongue, day and night agreement and disagreement in its winking and anger on its forehead. In its touch there was desire, in its radiance there was water, in its buttocks lawlessness, sacrifice in its steps, death in its shadow, illusion in its laugh, medicines in its hairs, rivers in its veins, stones in its nails, Brahmā in its intelligence, hermits, devas etc. in its life-breaths. Thus the figure was seen by Mahābali. Vāmana had trodden on the whole of the earth, which was completely under the cont ol of Mahābali, with one foot, filled the whole of the sky with his large body and the four points were filled with his hands. The second step was put on Maharloka, Janaloka and Tapaloka (three worlds). No spot was left in the universe for a third step.

Vāmana said: “You have given me three feet of ground. I have measured two feet of ground. Show me the place to measure the third step. I have measured the earth with one step and the heaven with the second step. You have seen it. If you cannot keep your promise you had better go down to Pātalā.” Bali requested him to place the third step on his head. Vāmana placed his foot on the head of Mahābali and thrust him down to Pātalā.

Vāmana brought Indra to the spot and anointed him as the ruler of heaven, in the presence of all the gods and hermits. Indra sent Vāmana with the Lokāpalas (Indra, Agni, Yama and Varuna) in a divine Vīmāna to the world of Viṣṇu. (Bhāgavata Sandhā 8).

b) The second story of the incarnation of Vāmana. Dhundhu, an asura boy, was born to Kaśyapa by his wife Danu. That asura did penance and pleased Brahmā. He made a request that he should not be killed by Indra and the other gods or anybody else. Brahmā, who was pleased at his penance, gave him the boon he asked. The boy Dhundhu, at the beginning of the fourth Kaliyuga, during the period of Hiranyakasipu, went to heaven and defeating Indra and the other Devas, established his rule there as Indra. The mighty Hiranyakasipu was travelling on the mountain Mandara as an official under Dhundhu. The defeated and grief-stricken Devas went to the world of Brahmā and lived there. Dhundhu, who knew this, wanted to drive them out of that place also. He requested Sukra, the priest and teacher of asuras, to tell him the means of doing it.

Sukra said, “Devendra was enabled to enter the presence of Brahmā, because he had performed one hundred horse-sacrifices. “Hearing this, Dhundhu, with the permission of the teacher Sukra, began to perform sacrifice in the holy place called Prācina tirtha. Hearing that Dhundhu had begun the horse-sacrifice, Indra and the Devas trembled with fear and, leaving the world of Brahmā, went to the world of Viṣṇu and prayed for protection. Bhagavān came to know of everything and consoled them and sent them back. After this Mahāvisnū took the form of a Vāmana and jumped into the Devikalāla and lay afloat like a piece of dry wood. Dhundhu and the hermits saw by chance, Vāmana sinking and coming up in the water. They took the Vāmana-Brahmin out of water and asked him how he had fallen in water. Vāmana replied with sliver:—“In the family of Varuna there was a Brahmin named Prabhāsa, who was a scholar. I am Gatiṃśa, the younger of his two sons. After the death of father, I requested my brother to divide the property of our father. My brother quoted several rules and said that I was not entitled to get any portion of my father’s wealth. I spoke against him and getting angry he caught me by my hair and threw me into the river. It is a year since I, being not able to swim, began to sink and come up in this river. Thus you have seen me here.”

The Bhārgavas who were present there, requested Dhundhu thus. “Oh! King of the asuras! Be pleased to give this boy a well-furnished house, servant-maids and plenty of wealth.” Hearing this Dhundhu said to Vāmana. “I will provide you with wealth, servant-maids, house, gold, cows, land, clothes etc.” Vāmana humbly said to Dhundhu “Oh Lord! I do not want any wealth. It is my desire for wealth that has brought me to this plight. I request you to give me only three feet of ground.”

As soon as the asura-King complied with his request, Vāmana began to grow like the moon. He assumed the shape of Trivikrama to measure each of the three worlds with a foot. In two steps he measured all the worlds. Vāmana whose body was bigger than Mahāmeru became angry when he did not see place to measure the third step, and fell on Dhundhu. By this heavy fall there appeared a great cavity thirty thousand yojanas deep. Bhagavān Viṣṇu took the asura Dhundhu and threw him into that deep pit with a mighty force, and by a shower of dust he filled the cavity.

Indra with the Devas occupied the world of Gods. Leaving the asura King in the sea of dust, Bhagavān jumped into the river Kālindī and disappeared. (Padma Purāṇa, Chapter 78).

VĀMANA II. One of the eight elephants supporting the universe. This elephant was one of the four sons of Irāvātī. Airāvata, Supratīka and Aśjana were the other three. (Brahmaṇḍa Purāṇa, 3:7:292). This Vāmana was the conveyance of a famous giant in the army of Ghaṭotkaca during the battle of Bhārata. (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 60, Verse 56).

VĀMANA III. A holy place situated on the borders of Kurukiṣṭera. By bathing in the particular spot called Viṣṇupāda, in this holy place and worshipping Vāmana, one could enter the world of Viṣṇu. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 86, Stanza 103).

VĀMANA IV. A holy place. It is stated in Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 84, Stanza 13, that those who worship Hari (Viṣṇu) in this place will never become miserable.

VĀMANA V. A mountain in the Krauṇica Island. (Mahābhārata, Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 12).

VĀMANABHĀṬṬĀBĀṆA. A great Sanskrit poet. It is believed that he lived in the 15th century. He has written several poems and plays. His poetic works are 'Nalābhhyadaya' and 'Ragunāthacarita'. The former consists of eight Kāṇḍas and the latter, thirty Kāṇḍas.

It is stated that VāmanabhāṭṭābāṆa was the teacher of Vidyāranyā. Besides these two major works, he had written several poems and dramas. Imitating the poem 'Meghasandesa' of Kālidāsa, he had written a poetic work of the same type called 'Harāssandasandeśa'. A minor Drama called Śrīgarābhāṣana was written by this Vāmana. It is said that this drama was acted at Vijayanagara. The two plays, named—Pārvatiparīṇayā and 'Kanakarekhā' were also written by the same poet.

VĀMANAPURĀṆA. One of the eighteen Purāṇas. (See under Purāṇa).

VĀMANIKĀ. An attendant of Subrahmaṇya. (M.B. Sālya Parva, Chapter 46, Stanza 23).

VĀMKSU. A river which is famous in the Purāṇas. The low-caste people who lived on the basin of this river, came to the Rājasūya (imperial consecration) of Yudhisthīra. (M.B. Saḥā Parva, Chapter 51, Stanza 17).

VĀMŚĀ. A daughter born to Prajāpati Kaśyapa by his wife Pradhā. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 65, Stanza 45).

VĀMŚAGULMA. A holy bath. The rivers Šoṇa and Narmadā start from this bath. In Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 85, Stanza 9, it is stated that by visiting this holy bath one could obtain the fruits of performing a horse-sacrifice.

VĀMŚAMULAKA. A holy place situated on the boundary of Kurukiṣṭera. It is stated in Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 83, Stanza 41, that if a bath is taken in this holy place one could bring about the up-lift of one's race.

VĀMŚAVĀLĪ. (GENEALOGY). The genealogy of the characters in the Purāṇas is given separately at the end of this book.

VĀMYA. Name of the horse of the hermit Vāmadeva. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 122, Stanza 41).

VĀNAPARVA. An important Parva in Mahābhārata.

VĀNAPRAŚTA. (House-holder in the forest). One of the four stages of life. (See under Āśrama).

VĀNARA (MONKEY). Monkeys are given a prominent place in the Purāṇas. Considering them as born in the family of Hanumān, an ardent devotee of Śrī Rāma, some worship monkeys. It is mentioned in Vālmikī Rāmāyana that the monkeys got a prominent place first among the gods and spirits. It is stated in Vālmikī Rāmāyana, Kiśkindhā Kāṇḍa, Sarga 33, that the leaders of the monkeys were Bāli, Sugrīva, Aigada, Māinda, Gavaya, Divvīda, Gavākṣa, Gaja, Sarabha, Sūryāska, Hanumān, Vidyumnālī, Virabahu, Subhā, Nala, Kumuda, Jāmbavān, Tāra, Supātala, Sunetra, Nila and Daddhivaktra.

The social life of the monkeys, is described as follows in the Vālmikī Rāmāyana, Kiśkindhā Kāṇḍa, Sarga 33, "Mahendra mountain, the Himālayas, the Vindhya mountain, the peaks of Kailāsa and Śveta mountain, Mandara mountain etc. are the places mostly inhabited by monkeys. On the mountains shining like the rising sun, on the east of the western ocean also monkeys live. The Monkeys which inhabit black soil are blue in colour. Monkeys which live in red arsenic caves are yellow in colour. Those which live in Mahā Meru and Dhūmra (smoky) mountain have the colour of the rising sun and are drunksard.

VĀNASPATI I. Those trees which produce fruits without flowering are called Vanaspatis according to Manusmṛti Chapter 1, Stanza 47. Āṭi (fig tree) is an example. (Apuspha phalavanto ye te vanaspatayā smṛthā).

VĀNASPATI II. One of the seven sons of the King Ghrṭapṛṣṭha. (Bhāgavata, Skandha 5).

VĀNAVĀ. A country famous in the Purāṇas. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 9, Stanza 54).

VĀNAVĀSIKA. A country in ancient India. (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 9, Stanza 58).

VĀNYU I. A son born to Prajāpati Kaśyapa of his wife Danu. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva Chapter 65, Stanza 25, that he was the most prominent of the ten sons of Danu.

VĀNYU II. A son born to Uruvaśī from Purūravas. The sons of Uruvaśī were Ayus, Dhiimān, Amāvasu, Dr̥ḍhāyu Śatāyu and Vanāyu. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 75, Stanza 25).

VĀNYU III. A country in ancient India. Mention is made about this country in Mahābhārata, Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 9, Verse 56.

VĀNCULA. A bird. The cry of this bird, is believed to forebode victory. (Vālmikī Rāmāyana, Aranya Kāṇḍa Sarga 69, Stanza 22).

VĀNDANA. A hermit mentioned in Rgveda. Once this hermit was pushed into a well by Asuras. But he was saved by the Aśvinidevas. (Rgveda, Manḍala 1, Anuvāka 1, Śūkt 116).

VĀNDANĀ. A river famous in the Purāṇas. (Mahābhārata, Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 9, Stanza 18).
VANDI (BANDI, VĀNDINA). A scholar and scientist in the palace of King Janaka. He defeated the hermit Kahodaka in an argument and dipped him in water. (For further details see under Aśāvakra).

VĀNDINA. See under Vandi.

VANEYU. A king who was the grandson of emperor Pūru and the son of Rudrāśva. Vaneyu was born to Rudrāśva by a celestial woman named Mitrakeśī. Ten sons named Vaneyu, Rceyu, Ka-development, Kṛpaneyu, Sthāndlye, Jaleyu, Satyeyu, Dharmeyu and Sānteyu, were born to this celestial woman. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 94, Stanza 8).

VAṆGA. An important state in ancient India. The present name of this country is Bengal. Several statements occur in the Purāṇas about Vaṅga. The following are the statements about Vaṅga given in the Mahābhārata.

(i) Arjuna visited this country during his pilgrimage. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 214, Stanza 9).

(ii) Bhīmasena attacked Vaṅga. (M.B. Sābhā Parva, Chapter 30, Stanza 23).

(iii) The Kings of Vaṅga visited Yudhiṣṭhira with presents. (M.B. Sābhā Parva, Chapter 52, Stanza 18).

(iv) Kaṃḍa conquered this country during his regional conquest. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 254, Stanza 8).

(v) In the Bhārata battle the King of Vaṅga confronted Gaḥotaka and was defeated. (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 92, Stanza 6).

(vi) Once Śrī Kṛṣṇa conquered the country of Vaṅga. (M.B. Drona Parva, Chapter 11, Stanza 15).

(vii) Paraśurāma exterminated the Kañṭaṇya of Vaṅga. (M.B. Drona Parva, Chapter 70, Stanza 12).

(viii) The low castes of Vaṅga attacked the sacrificial horse led by Arjuna who killed every one of them. (M.B. Aśvamedha Parva, Chapter 82, Stanza 29).

VAṆGRDA. An asura. It is mentioned in Rgveda, Manuśa, Anuvāka 1, Sūkta 10, that the Kings Atiṭhigva and Rījīvā, with their armies surrounded the cities of the asuras Kāraṇa, Paṇḍya and Vaṅgrda and that Indra helped the two Kings.

VAṆJULA. See under Vidura II.

VAPUS I. A daughter of Dakṣa. Dharmadeva married her. (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Amśa 1, Chapter 7).

VAPUS II. A celestial maiden. She made a futile effort to hinder the penance of the hermit Durvāsas, and by the curse of the hermit she had to take birth as the daughter of Kundhara by Menakā in the next birth. (Mārkandeya Purāṇa, 1, 49, 56; 41).

VAPUSMĀN. Son of Saṅkrandana, the King of Vidarbha. Dama, a famous king of Diśa dynasty carried away by stealth Sumanā, the daughter of Cāruvarma, the King of Daśārṇa, in consequence of which Vapusmān and Dama became enemies.

Vapusmān waited for an opportunity to take revenge and when a convenient moment came, he killed Nariṣyanta, the father of Dama. Indrasena the mother of Dama told him of his father's murder and then jumping into the funeral pyre of her husband, she died. Because of grief at the loss of his parents and anger towards the slayer, Dama started with a mighty army and engaged Vapusmān in a fierce battle. He killed Vapusmān in the battle and with his blood he made offerings to the spirits of his parents. (Mārkandeya Purāṇa, 135).

VAPUSMATI. Daughter of the King of Sindhu. She became the wife of Mārutta. (Mārkandeya Purāṇa, 133).

VAPUŚTAMA. The prominent queen of King Janamejaya. She was the daughter of Suvarnavarman, the King of Kāśī. (Devi Bhāgavata, Skanda 2). Vapusṭama had two sons, Satānīka and Saṅkukarṇa. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 95, Stanza 86).

VARADA. A warrior of Subrahmaṇya. (Mahābhārata, Śalya Parva, Chapter 45, Stanza 64).

VARADĀNA. A holy place near Dvārakā. It was here that Dvūvāsas gave Bhagavān Śrī Kṛṣṇa boons (Vara). From that day this became a holy place. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 82, that those who take bath in this holy place would obtain the fruits of giving a thousand cows as alms.

VARADĀSāNGAMA. A holy place. Those who take bath in this holy place would obtain the fruits of giving a thousand cows as alms. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 85, Stanza 35).

VARĀHA. An ancient hermit. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Sābhā Parva, Chapter 4, Stanza 17, that this hermit stayed in the palace of Yudhiṣṭhira.

VARĀHA II. A holy place in the middle of Kurukṣetra. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 83, Stanza 88, that Mahāviṣṇu stayed in this place for a while in the shape of Varāha (Boar) and that those who bathe in this holy bath would obtain the fruits of performing the sacrifice Agniṣṭoma.

VARĀHA III. (Boar). One of the ten incarnations of Mahāviṣṇu.

1) Need for this incarnation. Jaya and Vijaya, two doorkeepers of Mahāviṣṇu showed disrespect towards the famous hermits Sanaka and others who went to visit Mahāviṣṇu. The angry hermits cursed them to take birth as asuras. Accordingly Jaya and Vijaya took birth as two asuras Hiranyākṣa and Hiranyakaśipu and were born from Prajāpati Kaṣyapa by his wife Diti. Even their birth itself was inauspicious. Once, while Kaṣyapa was carrying on evening worship, his wife was filled with libido. She embraced Kaṣyapa. Because she got pregnancy in an inauspicious moment, two asura sons were born. At the time of their birth darkness spread over the whole of the world, and some ill omens were seen. The Devas (gods) trembled. The elder son was called Hiranyākṣa and the second son was called Hiranyakaśipu. As Hiranyakaśipu grew up he began to quarrel with the Devas. When the fight grew fierce, he picked up the earth in his hands as a ball and went under water. There was left only water. The Devas went to Mahāviṣṇu and prayed to him in order to get the earth back.

At this time Manu Śvāyambhuva, the son of Brahman, was living with his father looking after his welfare. The father, who was pleased with the services of his son said, "My dear son, you should worship Devī, who will be pleased with your devotion and will bless you. If she is pleased with you, you will become a famous Prajāpati." Hearing the words of Brahman, Śvāyambhuva worshipped Devī with ardent devotion, deep meditation and severe vows and penance, at which Jagadamba was pleased. She appeared before him and asked him what boon he wanted. Manu requested that he should be permitted to carry on creation without any obstruction. Devī gave him permission. Manu returned to his father Brahmā and said, "Father, point out to me a solitary place. I will sit there and create subjects by the blessings of Devī." Only when he heard the request of his son, did Brahmā begin to think about the exigency of providing his son with such a place. For, the earth was completely under water. For a long time even Brahmā was being subjected to much inconvenience to carry on creation. Only Bhagavān Adi Nārāyaṇa (Viṣṇu) could do anything in this matter. So Brahmā with the Manus, hermits and others began to meditate on Mahāviṣṇu.

2) Incarnation. Instantly the young one of a Boar jumped out of the nose of Brahmā through his breath. That divine figure of Boar stood in the air and began to grow. Within a few moments, it became a colossal Being. It grew up as big as an elephant. Soon it became as large as a mountain. Seeing this, Brahmā and the others stood in amazement. The Boar made a grunt in a loud roaring sound. The people of Janaloka, Satyaloka etc. understood that it was the sound of Mahāviṣṇu. They raised glory and praise to Bhagavān, who heard all these praises, but without condescending to tell anything, looked at all of them with grace and love, and with a mighty force jumped into the sea. It was immensely troubled by the manes of God Almighty. Varuṇa prayed to him to save him from them. Bhagavān folded his mane and went down to the deep water and made a search for the earth. The Boar walked smelling and snorting and found out the earth. He slowly lifted it on his tusks and started from there. On the way, the fierce and wicked Hiraṇyākṣa hindered him. Bhagavān Viṣṇu used his club Nandaka and killed Hiraṇyākṣa. It was besmeared with his blood; Mahāviṣṇu came up to the surface of water with the earth. He set the earth firm over the water. Thus Brahmā gave Manu a place in the earth which floated on the water like a lotus-leaf, and empowered him to perform creation.

3) Incarnation of Boar again. The goddess Earth, the deity of earth which was raised to the surface of water, fell in love with Mahāviṣṇu and embraced him. He embraced her in return. These mutual embraces continued for one complete Devavarsa (year of God) and consequently the goddess Earth became tired and weak and unconscious. So the earth slid down a little under water. Bhagavān took the form of a Boar again and lifted the earth to its original place and returned to Vaikuṇṭha. (Bhagavata, Skandha 3; Devī Bhagavata Standhas 8 and 9; Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 5; Padma Purāṇa, Bhūmikhaṇḍa, Chapter 91).

VARĀḤA IV. A mountain near Girivraja, the capital city of Magadhā. (Mahābhārata, Sabhā Parva, Chapter 21, Stanza 2).

VARĀḤAKA. A serpent born in the family of Dhṛtarāstra. This serpent was burned in the sacrificial fire of Janamejaya. (M.B. Adī Parva, Chapter 57, Stanza 18).

VARĀḤAKARNA. A Yakṣa (demigod). This Yakṣa remains in the palace of Kubera. (Mahābhārata, Sabhā Parva, Chapter 13, Stanza 16).

VARĀḤĀMBA. An asura. Mention is made about him in Mahābhārata, Śānti Parva, Chapter 227, Stanza 52.

VARĀḤA PURĀṆA. See under Purāṇa.

VARAṂAṆI. A beetle made of jewel. Brahmā had given a boon that only he who fought with this jewel-beetle in his mouth could kill Pāṭala Rāvana. This secret was known only to the giants, such as Rāvana, and others. This Varaṃāṇi was kept in an underground cell of a harem near the Kālī temple in the Pāṭala.

The battle between Rāma and Rāvana was going on. Hanumān made a fort coiling his tail like a spring and Rāma and Lākṣmana stayed inside this fort. While they were sleeping, Pāṭala Rāvana made a tunnel under the earth and carried away Rāma and Lākṣmana. Vibhiṣana knew this, only next day morning. Instantly he sent Hanumān to Pāṭala. In accordance with the advice of Vibhiṣana, Hanumān went directly to the cell in the harem, took Varaṃāṇi and put it in his mouth. Then he fought with Pāṭala Rāvana and defeated him. Thus with the help of the Varaṃāṇi Hanumān rescued Rāma and Lākṣmana. (Kamba Rāmāyaṇa, Yuddha Kāṇḍa).

VARĀṆASI. A river famous in the Purāṇas. It is mentioned in Vāmana Purāṇa that the river Varana which flowed from the right leg and the river Asī, which started from the left leg of Bhagavān, who lies in contemplation at Prayāga, are two holy rivers. (See under Varaṇaśī).

VARĀṆASI. A country in ancient Bhrārata. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Udyoga Parva, Chapter 19, Stanza 31, that the army of the Kauravas had surrounded this country.

VARĀṆASI (VARĀṆASI). Kāśī.

(Before reading the information given here refer to the details given about Kāśī under Kāśī and Divodāsa).

1) The name Varāṇasi. Formerly this place was known as Prayāga. Later it got the name Varāṇasi and then Kāśī. The name Varāṇasi is originated from two rivers. Bhagavān Yogāṣayī who stays in Prayāga was born from a portion of Mahāviṣṇu. From the right leg of Yogāṣayī the river Varana started and from his left leg the river Asī started. These two rivers are praised and worshipped all over the world. The temple of Yogāṣayī is situated in the place between these two rivers. As the place is situated between Varana and Asī it is called Varāṇasi. (Vāmana Purāṇa, Chapter 3).

2) Other information.

(i) Bhīma went to Kāśī and took Ambā, Ambikā and Ambālikā, the daughters of the King of Kāśī, to his kingdom by force. (M.B. Adī Parva, Chapter 102, Stanza 3).

(ii) Varāṇasi is a holy place of pilgrimage. By bathing in Kapilāhrada, a holy bath there, and worshipping Saṅkara, one could obtain the fruits of performing the sacrifice Rājasūya. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 84, Stanza 78).

(iii) The middle part of Varāṇasi is called Avimukta. Those who forsake their lives at Avimukta will obtain heaven. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 84, Stanza 79).

(iv) Once Śrī Kṛṣṇa made Varāṇasi a prey to fire. (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 48, Stanza 76).

(v) A very great scholar named Tulādhāra Vaiśya once lived in Varaṇasi. (M.B. Śānti Parva, Chapter 261, Stanza 41).

(vi) Once, in ancient days, Śiva imparted to the hermit Jaigaśu at this place, the eight miraculous attainments such as anjāma, garīma etc. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 18, Stanza 37).

(vii) Varāṇasi is equal to the capital city of Indra.
(Amaravati). (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 30, Stanza 16).
(viii) In ancient days a hermit named Sāṇivartta used to come here daily to worship Śiva. It was at this place that the emperor Marutta accepted the hermit Sāṇivartta as his priest. (M.B. Aśvamedha Parva, Chapters 6 and 7).
VARANAVATA. The place where Duryodhana built the wax-house for the Pañḍavas. It is believed that the modern village Varnava, 19 miles north east to Meerut in North India, is the place where this Purāṇic Vāraṇavata stood. Information about Vāraṇavata found in Mahābhārata, is given below:
(i) Once the ministers of Dhṛtarāṣṭra made a consultation about the festival in this city. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 192, Stanza 3).
(ii) Vāraṇavata was one of the five villages requested for by the Pañḍavas, on their return after their life in the forest. (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 31, Stanza 19).
(iii) Yuyutsu, the son of Dhṛtarāṣṭra, carried on a battle here for six months. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 19, Verse 58).
VARĀNGI I. The wife of Vajrāṅga, an asura. (For more details see under Vāraviḍa, Para 2).
VARĀNGI II. Wife of Sāṁyāti, a King of the Lunar dynasty. The father of this Varāngi was Drṣadva. A son named Ahaṁyāti was born to Varāngī. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 95, Stanza 14).
VARARUCI. An ancient Indian scholar in astronomy and astrology. (Some details regarding Vararuci are given under Bhārtrihari).
1) Birth. It is stated in Kāthāsārtsāgara, Kāthāpitha-labhakā, Tārāṅga 1, that Vararuci was the rebirth of a Gaṇanāyaka (guard of Siva) named Purṣpadanta. Once Siva happened to tell Pārvatī some previous stories of the Vidyādhara. Purṣpadanta eavesdropped and heard everything. Pārvatī understood this and cursed him to become a man. Accordingly Purṣpadanta was born in the city of Kauṣāmibi under the name Vararuci or Kāṭvāyana. (For details about the curse see under Ēnudāṣyāv).
2) Of sharp intelligence. Vararuci was born as the son of the Brahmin Somadatta at Kauṣāmibi. Agniśikha was another name of Somadatta. Vasudattā was the mother of Vararuci. In the previous birth, Vasudattā was a hermit maid. Due to a curse she lost her hermit-maidhood and took birth as a woman under the name Vasudattā and became the wife of Somadatta.
As his father died in his childhood, Vararuci was brought up by his mother. She was in great penury after the death of her husband. One day two travellers came to her house. While they were sitting on the veranda, the sound of a conch was heard. Then the mother called Vararuci and said to him, “Son, the dance of Nanda, the friend of your father, is about to begin.” Vararuci requested his mother to let him go to the temple and see the dance so that he might learn it. Hearing this, the guests were amazed. How can one learn dance by seeing only once? That was the doubt in the minds of the travellers. “Vararuci could learn anything by hearing only once”, his mother said. As a test, they recited to him a portion from the Vedas. Vararuci repeated the portion to them without any mistake. After this the guests took the boy and showed him the dance and brought him back. The boy performed every item of the dance he saw, before the guests. They were immensely pleased.
3) Getting a teacher. The guests had actually been searching for a boy who could understand anything at the first hearing. There was reason for it. In the great city of Nandarāja, there was a great Brahmin named Saṅkarasvāmi. He had two sons named Varṣa and Upavarsa. Both married and lived in separate houses. By and by Varṣa became cruel and wicked and poor. Upavarsa became learned and wealthy. The rainy season approached. In those days it was a custom for women to make a sweet food of rice flour with sugar and give it to cruel Brahmans. It was to prevent the extreme cold in the winter and the extreme heat in the summer from affecting them severely. The wife of Upavarsa made this sweet food and gave it to Varṣa. When he brought it home, his wife scolded him. Varṣa felt very sorry because of his foolishness. He gave up all his desires and began to worship Kumārasvāmi. Kumārasvāmi was pleased with him and blessed him with all kinds of knowledge. Kumārasvāmi had ordered him to teach all of this knowledge to one who could learn at first hearing. From that day onwards Varṣa had been waiting for a disciple who could learn at first hearing.
During this period there lived two Brahmans named Devasvāmi and Kārumbhaka in the city of Vetasapura. They were friends. A son was born to each of them. The son of Devasvāmi was named Vyāli. The name of the son of Kārumbhaka was Indradatta. When Vyāli was a child, his father died. Seeing their grief the father of Indradatta left the country. Both of the boys, having nobody to look after them, went to perform penance, before Subhrāmanyasvāmi. Subhrāmanya ordered them in their sleep to go to Varṣa in Pāṭāllikā, the city of King Nanda, and to learn every thing from him. The boys immediately went to the city of King Nanda and enquired about the teacher Varṣa. The people told them that Varṣa was a fool. They were sorry to hear it. Still they did not turn back. They reached the house of Varṣa, and entered the house which was the abode of rats and bats, the walls of which were crumbling due to rain as it had not been thatched for a long time. The courtyard was full of Cassiatora plants. Inside the house, here and there on the floor, Cyperus-grass was growing. The wife of Varṣa who was in utter penury stood up and welcomed them. She told them about her husband. “He is waiting for a disciple who would learn everything at first hearing.” Vyāli and Indradatta agreed to bring such a disciple and they started on a journey in search of such a boy. They were the two travellers who came to the house of Vararuci.
Vyāli said all about these things to the mother of Vararuci. She was very glad and said, “Everything fits well. At the birth of my son, an ethereal voice said: “At first hearing he will learn everything. He will learn everything from the teacher Varṣa. He will publish works in grammar and astronomy”. If he has interest in good things he will get the name Vararuci. So I had been thinking how and where to find this teacher Varṣa.”
Next morning, with the permission of his mother, Vararuci started for the house of Varṣa, with Vyāli and Indradatta. They reached the house of Varṣa. Next morning they smeared and purified the floor and the three sincere and simple disciples sat facing the east. The teacher Varṣa recited to them the divine spell ‘Om’, and instantly all the Vedas and the ancillaries of Vedas made their appearance. The teacher commenced teaching. The three disciples learned, Vararuci hearing only once, Vyāli hearing twice and Indradatta hearing thrice. Hearing these divine recitations and repetitions which were not to be heard anywhere else, Brahmans crowded to the place. King Nanda of Pātaliputra praised the teacher Varṣa and sent him plenty of wealth and conferred on him ranks and privileges.

4) Marriage. Vararuci learned everything from the teacher Varṣa. He went with his friends once to see the Indra-festival. There, Vararuci happened to see Upakośā the daughter of Upavarṣa and fell in love with her. That night he did not sleep. At last he slowly closed his eyes. A divine woman clad in white garments appeared before him. It seemed to him that the woman said to him, “You need not worry in this matter. Upakośā was your wife in the previous birth. She will marry only you. I am Sarasvati who pervades your body.” Vararuci woke up. Next day the elders came to know of this, and gave her in marriage to Vararuci.

5) Vararuci becoming a Minister. Education was finished. It was time for Vyāli and Indradatta to give presents to the teacher Varṣa. The teacher demanded a crore of Vilkas (a Venetian ducat used for neck-ornament). They were not having so much wealth. They went with Vararuci to Nanda, the King of Ayodhya, and the Brother-in-law of Vararuci. When they reached Ayodhya, they heard that the King had just died. Indradatta said, “By the practice of contemplation I shall enter the body of the King. Vararuci should come and beg money of me. Till my return Vyāli must keep my body.”

“The spirit of Indradatta immediately entered the King’s body. The dead King rose up. People were struck with wonder. They celebrated a festival. Vyāli kept the body of Indradatta within a temple. Vararuci went to the presence of the King and begged for a crore of Vilkas. The King called his minister Sakaṭāla and told him to give Vararuci a crore of Vilkas. Sakaṭāla, who was an intelligent man, felt some doubt in the coming to life of the King. He decided that some one might have entered the body of the King. He ordered that every dead body in the city should be burnt. Along with the bodies, the body of Indradatta also was taken by force from Vyāli. At this time the King compelled Sakaṭāla to give the beggar Vilkas. But till the dead bodies were burnt, Sakaṭāla did not obey him. Because his body was burnt Indradatta had to remain in the body of the King. Sakaṭāla gave Vararuci the required amount. But of what use was the money? Indradatta had become the King. The King and Vyāli made a secret consultation, as a result of which Vararuci was made the Prime Minister. Sakaṭāla was charged with Brahmahatāya and was put into a dungeon with his hundred sons. They were allowed fried and powdered grain and a ‘ceratu’ (a measure) of water as food for each.

Sakaṭāla said to his sons, “My sons, all of us cannot live with so little food. The most intelligent one among us should live by eating the whole food, to take revenge on the Yoga Nanda King. Who will do so?” Sons—We don’t think that we are powerful to do that. So you must live, father! So Sakaṭāla ate the whole food and lived while his sons, one by one, died of hunger before his eyes. Sakaṭāla sat in the middle of the Skeletons with the sole purpose of taking revenge. Vyāli gave the present to the teacher and went home.

Indradatta and Vararuci lived as king and minister.

6) Loss of ministership. By and by Vararuci had fallen into bad ways. The subjects were beset with famine. The people hated the king and the minister. They made a cry to bring Sakaṭāla back. They obtained the permission of the king and brought Sakaṭāla out of the dungeon. Sakaṭāla knew that so long as Vararuci was alive, he could do nothing to the King Yoga Nanda. So he decided to wait for an opportunity, and accepted an office under Vararuci. One day Yoga Nanda went out for a walk. He saw in the Ganges the palm of a hand with five fingers. He called Vararuci and asked him what the sight was. Vararuci showed two fingers in that direction. Immediately the palm of the hand disappeared. The King was amazed at this and asked him for its meaning. He said “The meaning of showing fingers was that if five men unite together, they could accomplish anything. I showed two fingers, to mean that if two men unite together they also could achieve anything.” At this reply the king was much pleased and Sakaṭāla felt miserable at the intelligence of Vararuci. On another occasion the King saw his wife looking at a Brahmin guest through the window. He got angry and ordered that Brahmin to be killed. When that Brahmin was being taken to the scaffold, a dead fish, placed for sale, laughed loud. The king asked Vararuci for its reason. Saying that he had to consider about it before giving a reply, he went out and meditated upon Sarasvati. Devi appeared and told him, “If you climb up to the top of this palm tree and sit there to night you will understand why the dead fish laughed.” Vararuci did as he was told. A fierce giantess came there with her young ones. The children began to ask her for food. The giantess told them that they would get the flesh of a Brahmin next day, and that he was not killed that day because the dead fish had laughed. The young ones asked her why the dead fish laughed. The giantess said “The wives of the kings are not chaste. In all harems men live in the guise of women. Without stopping this the king was going to kill an innocent Brahmin. That is why the dead fish laughed.”

Vararuci, who heard this conversation, got down when the giantess was gone. He went to the king and told him why the fish laughed. The king made a sudden search in the harem. He found out some men in the dress of women. The king honoured Vararuci and released the Brahmin. One day an artist who drew portraits, came to the palace. He drew a portrait of the king and the queen and placed it before the king. The picture was life-like. The king gave the artist several presents. Once Vararuci happened to enter the bed-room of the king. He saw the picture on the wall. The picture was beautiful. Still, considering the appearance of each part of her body the queen ought to have a mole on her loin. Vararuci put that mole in the picture. When Vararuci had gone the king entered the room and saw the mole in the picture. The king asked his servant, who that person was who had put that mole in the picture. He replied that it was Vararuci. The king thought that Vararuci had nocturnal connections with the queen. Perhaps it was in this way that Vararuci found out men in the dress of women. The king called Sakaṭāla to him and told him to kill Vararuci secretly. Sakaṭāla felt pity on Vararuci and hid him in a place. Vararuci told Sakaṭāla, “No body can kill me. My friend is a giant. He will come to me the moment I think of him. If I tell him, he will swallow the whole world.” When he heard this, Sakaṭāla desired to see the giant. Vararuci thought of him and the giant appeared. Sakaṭāla was terribly afraid of the giant. Vararuci made him disappear. Sakaṭāla asked him how he got the friendship of the giant. Vararuci replied, “While you were in the dungeon, a city chief was disappearing daily from this city. The king asked me to find out the reason. One night, while I was walking through the city, I saw this giant. He asked me, ‘Who is the most beautiful woman in this city?’ I replied, ‘Whoever falls in love with a woman, to him, that woman is the most beautiful. You who do not know this principle, are a fool.’ The giant had no answer. He said, ‘You alone have defeated me. I am glad of it. The moment you think of me, I will come and help you.’” Saying this the giant disappeared. Thenceforward we became friends.”

Sakaṭāla felt great respect for Vararuci. Hiranyakagupta, the son of Yoga Nanda, went for hunting. His horse ran fast and he was separated from his army and got into a deep forest far away. He ate some fruits and plums and got on a tree to rest for the night. At that time a lion chased a bear, which climbed on the same tree. The prince trembled with fear. The bear said, “Do not fear. I am your friend.” Both talked for a while and became fast friends. Shortly, the prince began to sleep. The lion asked the bear to push that man down. The bear said that he would not deceive his friend. The disappointed lion sat under the tree. Then the bear slept and Hiranyakagupta sat awake. The lion asked the prince to push the bear down. Thinking that he could save his life by complying with the request of the lion, he pushed the bear down. Fortunately the hold of the bear was firm and so it did not fall. The bear cursed Hiranyakagupta, “May you become mad.” The king was very sorry when his son returned a mad man. The king repented that he had killed Vararuci. For this was the time when the king needed him most. Sakaṭāla went to the presence of the king and said, “Vararuci was still alive. In accordance with the order of the king, Sakaṭāla brought Vararuci. The king showed him his mad son. By the blessing of Sarasvatī, Vararuci understood that the prince had deceived his friend, and informed the king of what had happened. Immediately the prince was cured of his madness. Yoga Nanda asked Vararuci, how he knew the cause of the madness of the prince. He replied, “A man of intelligence can understand anything by symptoms and inference.” He also said that in this way he knew about the mole of the queen. When the king heard this he bowed down his head. After this Vararuci left the palace. He did not stop to accept the favours of the king. Nor did he pay any heed to the compulsion of the king to stay. He reached his house. Everybody who saw Vararuci began to cry. Not knowing the reason, he stood dumbfounded. Upavāra came to him and said that when the news about the slaughter of Vararuci reached home, Upakosā got into fire and his mother died of broken heart. The grieves stricken Vararuci went to the forest for penance. After this Sakaṭāla waited for an opportunity to bring Indradatta (Yoga Nanda) down. Once he had been walking out side the city when he saw a Brahmin digging a pit. Sakaṭāla asked him why he was digging the pit. He replied, “I stumbled on this Darbha grass. So I am rooting it out.” Sakaṭāla resolved to make use of this Brahmin to achieve his purpose. His name was Cāṇaka. Sakaṭāla took Cāṇaka to the palace. A ceremony of offerings to the manes was being conducted in the palace. Another Brahmin named Subandhu also came there. The king ordered ‘aṇgrabhojana’ (first meal) to be given to Subandhu. Cāṇaka trembled with fury. At that time his lock of hair was loosened. He took a vow that only after pacifying his anger by killing Yoga Nanda within seven days, would he tie up his lock. Cāṇaka began practising sorcery against the king. The king caught burning fever and died on the seventh day. Sakaṭāla killed Hiranyakagupta. After this Sakaṭāla made Candragupta, the son of the real Nanda who died earlier, the king. Making Cāṇaka his minister, Sakaṭāla went for penance.

7) Sons. See under Pākkanār.

8) The end. Vararuci began to perform penance in the Vindhya mountain. At that time a brahmin came to the hermitage of Vararuci. He informed Vararuci of the death of Yoga Nanda. Thinking about the littleness of the pleasures of the world, he began to walk through the Vindhya mountain when he saw the devil called Kāṇabhūti. Telling everything to the devil Kāṇabhūti, Vararuci started for Badaryāsrama to discard his body. On the way he saw a hermit who lived on water alone. In the meanwhile his finger was cut with the tip of Darbha grass and blood oozed from the wound. Vararuci, by his attainments changed the blood into the juice of Sāntītīrtha. The hermit cried out, “Oh, I have become a man of attainments.” With a laugh Vararuci said, “You have not yet overcome your egoism. I did so to test you. First of all you must overcome your egoism and become wise.” After saying this Vararuci went to Badaryāsrama and reached there. He did penance there and Devī appeared. According to her advice he made a fire by contemplation and burned his body in it. Then Vararuci became the old Puspadanta and went to the presence of Siva.

VARASTRI. A sister of Brhaspati. The Vasu named Prabhāsa married Varastrī. This woman who was an expounder of the Vedas, pervaded all the creations by the power of harmony with the Supreme Spirit. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 60, Stanza 96: Vāyu Purāṇa, 84, 15).

VARATANTU. The preceptor of a hermit called Kautsa. (See under Kautsa).

VARATANU. A King of the Kurus. Because of his sinful deeds in the previous birth he was denied the happiness of getting children in the next birth. In the rebirth his name was Śrīdhara. He lived with his wife Prabhāvati for a long time, but did not get children. When the hermit Vāṣa came to his palace once, the King asked him for the reason of his remaining childless. Vyása replied “Oh King, hear why you have only one wife and why you do not get children. In the previous birth you had been a brahmin named Varatanu. Your wife was called Saikari. When both of you were going somewhere once, you happened to see a low-caste child falling into water. Without paying any heed to it, you went on your way. The child was drowned. Though both of you have taken births in royal families due to the several good deeds of yours, you have become childless because of that one sinful act.”

According to the instruction of Vyása, he gave Brahmins alms of gold, clothes, oxa, pumpkin etc. and performed B à l a vr a t a, the rite for the sake of children. Thus he got remission of his sin. Within a year he got a son loved and respected by everyone. That handsome prince became an emperor who came to be the founder of a dynasty. (Padma Purāṇa, Brahma Khaṭṭa, Chapter 6).

VARATRI. One of the four sons of Śuka. The other three were, Pṛthūraśmi, Bhṛdaṇaḍīgaras and Rajata. Devedra killed them because they were against sacrifice.

It is stated in Brahmapāṇḍa Purāṇa that after a while from the severed heads of these sons date palm trees grew up.

VARAYA. A King born in the family of Mahanajas.

(Mahābhārata, Ud yoga Parva, Chapter 74, Stanza 15).

VARCAS I. Son of Śoma, one of the eight Vasus. Manohara was the mother of Varcas. Abhimanyu, the son of Arjuna was the next birth of Varcas. (For further details see under Abhimanyu).

VARCAS II. The son of Sucetas, a brahmin born in the family of Gṛtsamadā. This Varcas had a son called Vīhavya. (M.B. Anuśāna Parva, Chapter 30, Stanza 61).

VARDHAKŚEMI. A mighty King of Vṛṣṇi dynasty.

The following details about him are taken from Mahābhārata.

(i) He was a great warrior who fought on the side of the Pândavas against the Kauravas. (M.B. Ud yoga Parva, Chapter 171, Stanza 17).

(ii) He was present at the Svayaṇivara (marriage) of Draupadī. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 185, Stanza 9).

(iii) He confronted the Teacher Kṛpā in the Bhrārata battle and was killed by him. (M.B. Karna Parva, Chapter 6, Stanza 21).

VARDHAMĀNA. A character in the story of Pañcatantra. (See under Pañcatantra).

VARDHANA. One of the sons born to Śrī Kṛṣṇa of his wife Mitrāvinādī. (Bhāgavata, Skandha 10).

VARENYA. One of the seven sons of Bhṛgu. The seven sons of Bhṛgu were Cyavana, Śuci, Auvra, Śukra Vajraśīrṣa, Savana, and Varenya. (M.B. Anuśāna Parva, Chapter 85, Stanza 126).

VARGĀ. A celestial maid. There is a story in Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 220, describing how Vargā and her friends were changed into crocodiles and had to live in water for a long time.

Once there lived an ‘apsaras’ (celestial maid) named Vargā in Devārāya. She had four friends called Saurabhēyi, Sāmicī, Budbudā and Lātā. Once they were going to the house of Kubera their patron. On the way they saw a hermit. They saw the whole forest shining with the radiance of the power of penance of the hermit. They decided to entice the hermit somehow. With this intention they entered his hermitage. Seeing their dalliance and coquetry, the hermit got angry and cursed them to become crocodiles for a hundred years. They implored him with tears, for liberation from the curse. The hermit told them that in due course a noble man would come and get them out of water and that then they would obtain their original form. They walked towards a lake.

On the way they saw Narada. They told him everything. He told them, “On the coast of the southern ocean there are five āmratas (holy baths) known as Agastya, Saubhadra, Pauloma, Kārandhama and Suprasanna. You may go to these lakes and live there as crocodiles one in each. In due course Arjuna, the son of Pāṇḍu will come and redeem you.”

According to the words of Narada the five celestial maids walked to the south and reached the Pañcatirtha (five holy baths) and each of them entered a lake as a crocodile. After this nobody dared to live near the holy baths. After some time Arjuna started on his pilgrimage. He passed through many places and reached the Pañcatirtha. He inquired why the place was forsaken by people. The hermits told him that there was a crocodile in each of the five baths and that they would eat anybody who got into the bath. Arjuna got into a lake. Immediately a crocodile came and caught hold of him. With great difficulty he drugged it out of the lake. Instantly the crocodile changed into a beautiful damsel. The celestial maid Vargā told the amased Arjuna her story and she added that her four friends were lying in the neighbouring four lakes. Arjuna redeemed every one of them. After this, Vargā and her friends went to Devārāya and Arjuna to Maṇḍalūra. From that day onwards the five āmratas came to be known as Nārītirthas.

VARĪ. An eternal God concerned with offerings to the manes. (M.B. Anuśāna Parva, Chapter 91, Stanza 33).

VARISENA. A King. This King stays in the Palace of Yama and worships him. (M.B. Śaṇhī Parva, Chapter 8, Stanza 20).

VARĪŚTHA. The son of Manu Cākṣuṣa. The following story, how Varīśtha cursed the hermit Gṛtsamadā, occurs in Mahābhārata, Anuśāna Parva, Chapter 18. Indra once performed a sacrifice which lasted for a thousand years. Varīśtha and Gṛtsamadā, as friends of Indra were present at the sacrifice. Gṛtsamadā committed some mistakes in the recitation of Sāmans. Varīśtha got angry and cursed Gṛtsamadā that he would wander in the forest as an animal for ten thousand one hundred and eighteen years. Accordingly Gṛtsamadā wandered through forests in the form of an animal for a very long time.

VARĪTĀKṢA. An asura. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Śaṃti Parva, Chapter 227, Stanza 52, that he had been a King once and that fate made him an asura.

VARKSĪ. Daughter of the hermit Kaṇḍu. It is stated in (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 195, Stanza 15, that she became the wife of the ten Pracetāsa. It is stated in Bhāgavata, Skandha 6, that Dakṣa was born from this Varkṣī.

VARMĀ. In ancient days it was the custom to add the word ‘Varmā’ to the names of Kṣatriyas. Brāhmaṇas had to add the word Ĝarma.  Kṣatriyas the word Varma Vaiśyas the word Gupta and Śdras the word Dāsa to their names according to rules. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 153).
VARMACIT. A King of the Lunar dynasty. (Bhāgavata Skandha 9).
VARṇa. Caste. The four castes of Brāhmaṇa, Kṣatriya, Vaiśya and Śdra and the eleven castes produced by the intermingling of these four castes, only these are taken into account when we speak of Varṇa. To understand about the four castes of Brāhmaṇa, Kṣatriya, Vaiśya and Śdra, see under Cāturvarṇa.
To know about the eleven mixed castes that originated from the four castes, see under Ėkādaśaśaṅkara Varṇas.
VARṇASAṄKARA. See under Ėkādaśaśaṅkara Varṇas.
VARŚA I. The teacher of Vararuci. (For details see under Vararuci).
VARŚA II. See under Kālamāṇa.
VARŚAGANYA. An ancient hermit. The Gandharva King Viśvāvasu learned about the connection between the individual soul and the Universal soul, from this hermit. (M.B. Sānti Parva, Chapter 318, Verse 59).
VARŚAKETU. A King of the Pūrū dynasty. The father of Varsaketu was Kṣenaka, and his son was Vipu.
(Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 278).
VARŚNEYA I. A charioteer of King Nala. It was Vārśneya who took the prince Indrasena and princess Indrasena to Kunḍinapura when Nala, after being defeated in the game of dice, went to the forest with Damayanti. After this, Vārśneya went to Ayodhyā and became the charioteer of King Ėruparna. Vārśneya played an important part in finding out Nala. (For more details see under Nala).
VARŚNEYA II. Another name of Mahāvīśnu. (M.B.
Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 27, Stanza 37).
VARŚNEYA III. An ancient country. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Sabhā Parva, Chapter 51, Stanza 24, that the King of Vārśneya brought presents to the imperial consecration-sacrifice (Rājasūya) of Yudhisṭhira.
VĀRTA. A King of ancient India. This King stays in the palace of Yama praising and worshipping him.
(M.B. Sabhā Parva, Chapter 8, Stanza 10).
VARUṆA I. One of the eight guardians of the quarters.
1) Birth. Varuṇa was the son of Prajāpāti, Kaśyapa born of Aditi. He was one of the twelve sons of Aditi.
So he is considered to be one of the twelve Ādiyās (Sons of Aditi). The twelve Ādiyās are Dhātā, Aryaman, Mitra, Śakra, Varuṇa, Arīśa, Bhaga, Vivasvān, Pūṣa, Savitri, Vāsistha and Viṣṇu. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter
65, Stanza 15).
These twelve Ādiyās were the twelve Devas (gods) known as Tuṣitas in the Manvantara of Manu Cākṣuṣa.
A statement occurs in Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Arīśa 1, Chapter 15, that when Vaivasvata Manvantara was about to begin after the end of Cākṣuṣa Manvantara, the famous Tuṣitas united together and took birth as the sons of Kaśyapa.
2) Kingship of the waters. In Kṛtayuga the Devas approached Varuṇa and said to him. "You must be the lord of all the waters, as Indra is our protector. You can live in the heart of the ocean. All the rivers in the world, and the ocean which is their husband will obey
you. You will wax and wane along with Candra (Moon)." Varuṇa agreed to comply with their request.
All of them anointed Varuṇa as the King of the waters. (M.B. Śalya Parva, Chapter 47).
3) The Guardian of the quarter west. Brahma appointed Varuṇa as the guardian of the western zone. Vaiśravaṇa once did penance before Brahma, and when Brahma appeared before him, he made a request that he should be appointed as one of the guardians of the quarters.
Brahma replied. "I have already selected Indra, Varuṇa and Yama as guardians of the points. I was thinking who, the fourth, should be, when you came. So from this day onwards, Indra shall be the guardian of the East, Yama that of the South, Varuṇa, that of the West and you Vaiśravaṇa shall be the guardian of the North." After saying this, Brahma disappeared. Thus Varuṇa became the guardian of the West. (Uttara Rāmāyaṇa).
4) Family. Varuṇa had several wives and children.
Prominent among them were Gaurī and Varuṇā. Two Mention is made about the sons Śuseṇa, Vandi and Vasiṣṭha and daughter Vārṇi. Cārṣanī was another wife of Varuṇa. Prajāpāti Bhṛgu, who died in the sacrifice of Daśa took birth as the son of Varuṇa and Cārṣanī. Devi Jyeṣṭhā, the daughter of Priest Sukra was another wife of Varuṇa. The children of Jyeṣṭhā were Bala, Surā the Suranandini and Adharmaka the destroyer of the elements. The semen of Varuṇa fell on Valmika (White-ant-hill) from which the great hermit Vālmiki was born. Besides them, Daśaśāvānī, the ninth Manu was the son of Varuṇa. Puṣkara was another son of Varuṇa. The handsome Puṣkara was received as husband by the daughter of Soma (Candra).
Vandi, who was defeated by the hermit Ėṣṭavakra at the palace of Janaka was the son of Varuṇa.
(M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 117, Stanza 9; Ādi
Parva, Chapter 66, Stanza 52; Ādi Parva, Chapter
99, Stanza 5; Vana Parva, Chapter 134, Stanza 24;
Vālmiki Rāmāyaṇa, Bālākānda, Sarga 17, Stanza 13;
Vālmiki Rāmāyaṇa, Bālākānda, Sarga 46, Stanza 36).
5) Carrying away Utathya's wife. Bhadrā, the daughter of Soma (Moon) was extremely beautiful. Soma gave her in marriage to the hermit Utathya. Varuṇa carried her away. Utathya got angry and drank up the ocean dry. Varuṇa returned Bhadrā to Utathya. (For further details see under Utathya).
6) Theft of Varuṇa's cow by Kaśyapa. Kaśyapa once decided to perform a sacrifice. He made all preparations. But he did not get the required cow at the stipulated time. So he got the Homadhenu of Varuṇa by theft and began to perform the yāga (sacrifice).
Varuṇa knew this. Instantly he went to Kaśyapa and demanded his cow. But Kaśyapa refused to return the cow. Varuṇa complained to Brahma, who sent for Kaśyapa and asked him about the cow and both Brahma and Varuṇa cursed Kaśyapa that he who had taken the cow by stealth would take birth as a cowherd in Ambādī. (For further details see under Kaśyapa and Nandagopā).
7) Curing Hariścandra. For detailed story see under Hariścandra.
8) Other information.
(i) The Vaiṣṇava bow received by Śrī Rāma from Bhāgavata Rāma, was given to Varuṇa. (Vālmiki Rāmāyaṇa, Bālā Kāṇḍa, Sarga 77, Stanza 1).

When Abhimanyu entered Cakra-vyūha of the army formed by Drona this King took a vow that he would commit suicide if he did not kill Abhimanyu and then ran to the scene of the battle. In the fight between Vasáti and Abhimanyu, Vasáti was killed. (M.B. Drona Parva, Chapter 43, Verses 8-10).

VASÁTIKA. A warrior who fought on the side of the Kauravas against the Pāṇḍavas. He was killed in the fight with Abhimanyu. (M.B. Drona Parva, Chapter 44, Stanza 6).

VÁSAVADÁTÁ. Wife of Udayana. (See under Udayana).

VÁSAVARTI. A group of devas (gods). It is said that in the third Manvantara there were five groups of Devas, each group containing twelve persons, known as the Sudhāmās, the Satyas, the Japas, the Pratardanas and the Vāșavartins. (For more details see under Manvantara).

VÁSAVI. Another name of Satyavatī the mother of Vyāsa. (Mahábhárata, Ádi Parva, Chapter 63).

VÁSÁYU. A son born to Purúravas by Urváśī. (Padma Purāṇa, Srįti Khanda, 12).

VASIŚṬHA. A hermit who was the son of Brahmā.

1) The three births of Vasiśṭha. Vasiśṭha with the radiance of Brahmā, is very famous in the Purāṇas. He had three births.

i) First birth.

a) Birth. Vasiśṭha is one of the mental sons of Brahmā. This is the first birth of Vasiśṭha.

"Nārada was born from the lap, Daksā was born from the right thumb, Vasiśṭha from the breath (prāṇa) Bhrigu from the skin, Kratu from the hand of Brahmā." In this birth, Arundhāti was the wife of Vasiśṭha. Arundhāti was known by the name Ûrjā also. There is a Purāṇic story behind the marriage of Vasiśṭha and Arundhāti.

In her previous birth the name of Arundhāti was Sandhyā. She was born from the passion of Brahmā. As soon as she was born she grew up. Seeing her exquisite beauty the Prajāpatis were filled with excitement. Even Brahmā, her father, was some-what excited at her sight. Siva, who understood this, teased Brahmā. Sandhyā was ashamed. Even after Siva, Brahmā, Prajāpatis and the others had gone their ways, she remained there blaming her birth. She said to herself: "The moment I was born, I grew up to be a young woman. My father and my brothers looked at me with desire. I also looked at them excitedly. As an atonement for this sin, I will burn my body in fire. I do not want a body desired by my father and brothers. With this decision she went to the mountain Candrabhāga, which is the source of the river Candrabhāga, and began to perform penance. Brahmā who came to know of this, was filled with pity and sent Vasiśṭha to her. He went there in the form of a Brahmin boy and taught her how to perform penance. After the return of Vasiśṭha she continued the severe penance to Visṇu. Her penance became the subject of talk and wonder everywhere. After a short while Visṇu appeared before her sitting on his conveyance Gauraḍa. She praised Visṇu. Visṇu was pleased with her and asked what her desire was. She said: "Lord, creatures should not be sexually excited at their birth. They should have sexual desire only when they are grown up. The three worlds must know that I am chaste. In all my births I should not look at anybody except my husband with sexual desire. The man who looks at me with sexual desire should lose his manliness and become a hermaphrodite."

Mahāvīṇu agreed to her request. It was from that day onwards that sexual desire appeared in creatures in their grown-up stage only, after they have passed the stages of infancy and childhood. Mahāvīṇu told her. "It is preordained that this body of yours will be burnt in fire. Medhātithi, (Meghātithi), the son of Priyavrata is performing the great sacrifice called Jyotistoma which is to be completed in twelve years. It is coming to a close. There is none equal to him because of this sacrifice. That great hermit's sacrifice is being performed in the basin of this river Candrabhāga. Unseen by the hermits, you should go there and get into the fire. Because of my blessing you will be born from that fire as the daughter of Medhātithi. You should go into the fire thinking of him whom you want to be your husband in this birth."

Mahāvīṇu touched Sandhyā with the tip of his finger. Sandhyā walked to the sacrificial hall. Seen by none, she got down into the fire. She was burnt in the blazing fire. By the order of Visṇu; the God fire placed Sandhyā who was burnt in the sacrificial fire, in the Solar region. The sun divided that body into two and placed them in his chariot. The upper portion became the prātassandhyā (dawn) between the day and the night and the lower portion became the Sāyantana Sandhyā (the evening twilight). At the end of the sacrifice, from the centre of the sacrificial fire a girl, like the flame of fire rose up. Medhātithi took that child in his hands and called her Arundhāti. The child became famous throughout the three worlds, as the name stood for the principle that on no reason what-so-ever will righteousness be obstructed. (Rohda means obstruction. So Arundhāti is one who cannot be obstructed). In some other Purāṇas Arundhāti is given as the daughter of Prajāpāti Kardama and Devahūti.

b) Marriage. Arundhāti grew up in the hermitage of Medhātithi. Candrabhāga holy bath which was the playfield of Arundhāti, is even today, known as Arundhātitirtha. Arundhāti became five years of age. Brahmā saw her when she was playing on the ground after having taken her bath. At the instruction of Brahmā, Arundhāti was entrusted to Sāvitrī and Bahulā for education. Sāvitrī is the wife of the Sun. Arundhāti lived in Mānasala lake with Sāvitrī, Gāyatṛi, Bahulā, Sarasvatī, Drupadā and such other celestial women and completed her education. One day Arundhāti happened to see Vasiśṭha who was shining with radiance. They fell in love with each other. Parents and relatives and the elders came to know of this. Sāvitrī putting Arundhāti blessed her to become the wife of Vasiṣṭha. The marriage of Arundhati with Vasiṣṭha was conducted in the presence of the Gods.

c) Sons. Seven sons, named Citraketu, Purociś, Viraca, Mītra, Ulbaṇa, Vasubhrīdyaṇa and Dyumāṇ were born to Vasiṣṭha by Arundhati. All the seven of them were Brahmarṣis.

d) The meaning of the names Vasiṣṭha and Arundhati. The meaning of the name Vasiṣṭha is given by Vasiṣṭha himself as follows:—

I am known as Vasiṣṭha for two reasons. I am 'Vasumān'. The Śrutis say that Air, Earth etc. are Vasus. I have become Vasiṣṭha because I have brought under control the Vasus beginning with Animā (the power of reducing the body to an atom). See what Arundhati herself says, about the meaning of the name Arundhati.

"I consider mountains, earth and heaven as elements in which I live, only after considering my husband as the element in which I live. My husband is the first and foremost element in my life. Moreover I conform (anuruddha) with the mind of my husband. So know me as Arundhati."

e) Conjugal fidelity of Arundhati. The Saptarṣi (the seven hermits) once left Arundhati alone in a forest and went to the Mountain Himalayas to gather fruits and roots. In those days, due to severe summer, the earth became a wilderness. So the hermits lived in the Himalayas. Arundhati all alone did penance in the forest. On one day Śiva took the form of a Brahmin and going near Arundhati requested her for alms. She replied: "There are only Ziziphus fruits here, and nothing else to eat." The Brahmin asked her to boil them. She placed the pot of Ziziphus fruits on the oven and sat there hearing the good stories told by the Brahmin. Thus without thinking about her hunger or thirst she sat there for twelve years hearing the stories narrated by the Brahmin. When the hermits returned from Himalayas, Śiva assumed his original form and said, "Hermits! This woman, sitting in the hermitage, has acquired more penance than you have acquired in the Himalayas. Good woman! What boon do you want?" She requested that that place should be known as the holy place called Badarapacana (cooking of Ziziphus fruits). Śiva allowed it. Even today that place is considered a holy place.

f) Death. When so many devas were dead at the sacrifice of Dakṣa, Vasiṣṭha also died along with them. Arundhati followed her husband. After death both of them entered the firmament and became two stars.

g) Seeing Arundhati. In India there is a custom of showing the women, the star Arundhati. Arundhati is the first of the women who took only one husband in her life. The meaning of this custom is this that this mentality of Arundhati should be acquired by the married women of India. Moreover, if the star stands in front of the star Vasiṣṭha, it is considered to forebode calamities in the world. (Kaṁkā Purāṇa).

ii) Second birth.

General information. Vasiṣṭha who died at the sacrifice of Dakṣa took birth again from the sacrificial fire of Brahmacārya. Aśvamāla was the wife of this Vasiṣṭha. Aśvamāla was the rebirth of Arundhati. So, in some Purāṇas, both are shown as one. This birth of Vasiṣṭha was terminated by the curse of emperor Nimi of the Ikṣvāku dynasty. (For details see under Nimi).

(iii) Third birth. In the third birth Vasiṣṭha was born from a pot as the son of Mitrāvaruṇa. In this birth Vasiṣṭha was the brother of Agastaṇa. (For detailed story see under Agastaṇa, para 2). In this birth the wife of Vasiṣṭha was an Arundhati, who was the sister of Nārada. Thus according to the Purāṇas, it took three births for Vasiṣṭha to complete his life. It is difficult to ascertain, in which particular birth, a particular story, stated in the Purāṇas, took place. It is probable that a large number of episodes might have taken place in the second and third births.

Stories connected with the life of Vasiṣṭha are given below:

2) Vasiṣṭha and Viśvāmitra. Vasiṣṭha and Viśvāmitra were two hermits who quarrelled with each other throughout their lives. The quarrel between Vasiṣṭha a Brahmin hermit and Viśvāmitra a royal hermit, is given below:

(i) Reason for the enmity. Viśvāmitra was a King who cared much for the welfare of his subjects. Once he went with his army to hunt. He became tired by the hunt and reached the hermitage of Vasiṣṭha who welcomed them with hospitality. He told them that food would be ready when they returned after a bath. The King and his men bathed quickly and when they returned, a grand feast was ready for so many thousands. The King was in great perplexity. After the meal Viśvāmitra approached the hermit Vasiṣṭha and asked him how he got such a grand feast ready. He replied that the cow Kamadhenu in his hermitage was capable of granting any wish. The king desired to have the cow. He asked the hermit to exchange the cow for a crore of ordinary cows. Vasiṣṭha did not agree to this. Viśvāmitra said that the noble and superior things of the country belonged to the King. The hermit did not agree to that also. Finally Viśvāmitra was about to take away the cow by force. Thus the quarrel began. Understanding the wish of Vasiṣṭha Kamadhenu held her horns and tail up and stood as a fierce and cruel figure. From the various limbs of the cow so many thousands of warriors jumped out and a fierce battle ensued in which the hundred sons and the huge army of Viśvāmitra met with defeat. At last Viśvāmitra tried to launch a direct attack against Vasiṣṭha. But the arrows of Viśvāmitra were changed to flowers when they touched the body of Vasiṣṭha. At last the King admitted that the power of the penance of a Brahmin hermit was the real power and he admitted defeat from Vasiṣṭha. From that day onwards a deep-rooted, hatred against Vasiṣṭha arose in the heart of Viśvāmitra. He left the administration of his Kingdom in the hands of his relatives and went to the south where he erected a hermitage and began to do severe penance. He acquired great powers of penance and became a royal hermit of immense attainments and the quarrel between the two great hermits Vasiṣṭha and Viśvāmitra began. (Vālmiki Rāmāyana, Bāla Kanda, 5 sargas from 51).

(ii) Second confrontation. The next contest between the two hermits was due to the king Triśāṇku of the Solar dynasty. Triśāṇku wanted bodily attainment of heaven. Vasiṣṭha tried to discourage the king. Viśvāmitra took up the matter. He began to perform a sacrifice to lift up the king bodily to heaven, and Triśāṇku began to rise up higher and higher. But Indra did not allow him to enter bodily into the heaven. At last Viśvāmitra, by the power of his penance created an artificial heaven midway between the heaven and the earth and placed Triśāṅku in that heaven. With this the gap between the two hermits widened. (For more details see under Triśāṅku).

(iii) Third confrontation. By the blessing of Varuṇa, a son named Lohita was born to Hariścandra. He had promised Varuṇa to sacrifice his son Lohita. But Lohita came to know of this and he left the palace. Hariścandra was in a difficult situation. Vasiṣṭha advised him to buy a son and to sacrifice him. Accordingly a Brahmin boy named Sunāṣṭepha was bought. Vasiṣṭha decided to sacrifice him. Viśvāmitra said that he could not be sacrificed. Hariścandra was loved by Vasiṣṭha. So Viśvāmitra tried to harm him as far as possible. Hariścandra fell in the trap of Viśvāmitra and lost his country, city, etc., everything and had to live in funeral places. (For detailed story see under Hariścandra.)

(iv) Fourth confrontation. Vasiṣṭha did not like the deception practised by Viśvāmitra, on Hariścandra. Once Viśvāmitra and Vasiṣṭha met in the forest by chance. Vasiṣṭha scolded Viśvāmitra, who had only the guise of a hermit, thus: "You wicked Viśvāmitra! Why do you put the truthful Hariścandra into so much misery? You are deceiving him as the stork sits in meditation and deceives the fish. So you will become a stork."

Viśvāmitra looked at the hermit Vasiṣṭha who had cursed him and said, "So long as I am a stork you shall be Kingfisher. Thus they cursed each other. Both of them became birds and went to the shore of Mānasa lake and each building a nest on the top of trees began to live there. There was nothing but quarrel between the two birds daily. Both pecked and scratched each other to such an extent that they were covered with bleeding wounds. They looked like an Erythrina tree filled with flowers. Everybody who saw them was filled with sadness. Thus they lived there for a long time.

Once the Kind-hearted Brahman, the father of Vasiṣṭha, saw their sorry plight. Having pity on them he came there with the other gods and delivered them both from the curse. (Devi Bhāgavata, Skandha 6).

(v) Fifth confrontation. Viśvāmitra called the river Sarasvati and asked her to bring Vasiṣṭha along with her current. Sarasvati did not like the idea. Still, fearing the curse of Viśvāmitra she agreed to do so. The river-basin where Vasiṣṭha had been performing penance was pulled down by the current of the river, and taking Vasiṣṭha in the current carried him down. Sarasvati did not wish to leave Vasiṣṭha at the mercy of Viśvāmitra. So when they reached the door of the hermitage of Viśvāmitra, she carried him further down in a swift current. Viśvāmitra got angry and cursed Sarasvati. "Let blood flow through the river." With that the water of Sarasvati changed to blood-colour. The gods were perplexed at this. They all gathered on the banks of the river. In the presence of the gods, both the hermits came to a compromise. Thenceforward that place became a holy tirtha under the name Vasiṣṭhāpavāha. (M.B. Sālya Parva, Chapter 42).

3) Other details.

(i) Vasiṣṭha changed Ilā a woman, into a man. (For details see under Ilā 1).

(ii) Wives and children. Seven sons Rajas, Gotra, Ērdhvabāhu, Savana, Anagha, Sutapas and Sukra, were born to Vasiṣṭha by his wife Urjā. These seven pure and just persons were the Saptarṣis (seven hermits) in the first Manvantara. (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Aṁśa 1, Chapter 10).

(Rāja, Gātra, Ērdhvabāhu Savana, Alaghu, Sukra (and Sutapas are the names given in Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 20, of the sons of Vasiṣṭha born by his wife Urjā).

(iii) Vasiṣṭha and emperor Nimi. (See under Nimi)

(iv) The Rgveda of Vasiṣṭha. There are ten Maṇḍalas in Rgveda, of which the seventh Maṇḍala was composed by the sages of Vasiṣṭha's hermitage.

(v) Cursing Rāvana. Once Rāvana asked Vasiṣṭha to come as his teacher and teach him the Vedas and the other scriptures. Vasiṣṭha did not comply with his request. The angry Rāvana got Vasiṣṭha a captive. But the King Kuvālayāśva of the Solar dynasty, liberated Vasiṣṭha from captivity. The rescued Vasiṣṭha cursed Rāvana. You and your family will be exterminated by those born of the Solar dynasty." (Kamba Rāmāyaṇa, Yuddha Kāṇḍa).

(vi) Vasiṣṭha jumped into the river. See under Adṛṣṭanti.

(vii) In uniting Tapati and Sāmīvarana Vasiṣṭha played a very prominent part. (See under Tapaṭi).

(viii) It was Vasiṣṭha who put a stop to the sacrifice for the extermination of the Rākṣasas (giants) performed by Parāśara. (See under Parāśara).

(ix) Vasiṣṭha and Mucukunda. See under Mucukunda.

(x) Vasiṣṭha told Śrī Rāma the history of the dynasty of Ikṣvāku. (Vālmiki Rāmāyaṇa Bāla Kāṇḍa, Sarga 73).

(xi) The hermitage of Vasiṣṭha was situated in the valley of mount Mahāmeru. (Mahābhārata, Adi Parva, Chapter 29, Stanza 6).

(xii) The cow of Vasiṣṭha was stolen by the eight VasisSee under Aśtvāvasus.

(xiii) Vasiṣṭha was the teacher of Bhīṣma. (Mahābhārata Adi Parva, Chapter 103, Stanza 45).

(xiv) Vasiṣṭha participated in the Birth festival of Arjuna. (M.B. Adi Parva, Chapter 122, Stanza 51).

(xv) Vasiṣṭha tried to commit suicide. (See under Adṛṣṭanti).

(xvi) Vasiṣṭha shone in the assembly of Brahman. (M.B. Sābhā Parva, Chapter 11, Stanza 19).

(xvii) In the Bhārata-battle an effort was made by Vasiṣṭha to dissuade Droṇa from the battle. But it was in vain. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 190, Stanza 33).

(xviii) Vasiṣṭha was one of the hermits who came to visit Bhīṣma on his bed of arrows. (Sānti Parva, Chapter 47, Stanza 7).

(xix) Once rain failed in the world and creatures became miserable. At that time Vasiṣṭha fed the creatures. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 137).

(xx) Once Indra lost the Devaloka (the world of the Devas) and he became gloomy and miserable. Vasiṣṭha went to him and comforted him. (M.B. Sānti Parva, Chapter 291, Stanza 91).

(xxii) Vasiṣṭha was one of the hermits who were Brahmin tribal workers. (M.B. Sānti Parva, Chapter 296, Stanza 17).

(xx ii) Once Vasiṣṭha imparted knowledge to King Janaṇa. This exhortation is given in Mahābhārata, (Sānti Parva, six chapters from 302).
(xxiii) Vasiṣṭha was one of the twentyone Prajāpatis. (M.B. Sānti Parva, Chapter 334, Stanza 36).
(xxiv) Vasiṣṭha is considered to be one of the Citraśikhāṃdiś (Saptāśīrś—seven hermits) (See under Citraśikhāṃdiś).
(xxv) Once Vasiṣṭha talked about Puruśārthas (the objects of life) to Brahmā. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 6).
(xxvi) Vasiṣṭha talked to Saudāsa about giving cows as alms. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 78, Stanza 5).
(xxvii) On another occasion Vasiṣṭha gave advice to Paraśurāma and talked about the origin of Gold. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 84, Stanza 44).
(xxviii) Vasiṣṭha once told Arundhatī how weakness was caused. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 93, Stanza 31).
(xxix) Vasiṣṭha avowed that he was not one of them who had stolen the lotus flowers of Agastya. (Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 23, Stanza 114).
(xxx) Āpava, Arundhatipati, Brahmarsi, Devasrī, Hairanyagarbha, Māitrāvaruṇī, Vārunī, and such other words are used as synonyms of Vasiṣṭha, in the Mahābhārata.

VASIṢṬHA. An Agni (fire). (Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 220, Stanza 1).

VASIṢṬHA (M). Vasiṣṭha tirthā. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 84, that he who bathes in this tirthā would become a Brahmin.

VASIṢṬHA PARVATA. A mountain famous in the Purāṇas. It is mentioned in Ādi Parva, Chapter 214, Stanza 2, that Arjuna came and sat on this mountain during his pilgrimage.

VASIṢṬHĀPAVĀHA. An ancient holy bath on the banks of the river Sarasvati. (See under Vasiṣṭha, fifth confrontation).

VASIṢṬHĀŚRAMA. A holy place near Nīścīrāsaṅgama. This holy bath is famous throughout the three worlds. Those who bathe in this place will enjoy the fruits of performing Vājaṇaya yajña. (Drinking sacrifice). (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 87, Stanza 140).

VASORDHĀKĀ. Wife of the Vasu named Agni. (Bhāgavata, Skanda 6).

VASSTRĀPA. A group of Kṣatriyas. The princes belonging to this group brought presents to Yudhīṣṭhira. (M.B. Sābhā Parva, Chapter 52, Stanza 15).

VĀSTUPURUṢA. In days of yore a ghost of immense size, who was feared by all other ghosts into existence. This ghost was buried inside the earth by the Devas. This ghost is called Vāstupuruṣa. He is the deity of whatever we build on the earth. The offering made to this Vāstupuruṣa on completion of a house is called "Puravāstubali". (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 40).

VASU I. A King named Uparicaravasu. For further details see under Uparicaravasu).

VASU II. Aṣṭavasus. (The eight Vasus). (For further details see under Aṣṭavasus).

VASU III. A son born to Kuśa, King of Kanyākubja by his wife Vaidarbhī. Kuśa had four sons, Kuśāmba, Kuśāṃbhā, Aṣṭtarajas and Vasu. Of them Kuṣāmba built the city of Kuṣāmbi, Kuśāṃbhā the city of Mahodayapura, Aṣṭtarajas the city of Dharmāranya and Vasu the city of Girivraja which is erected in the middle of five hills. The river Māgadhi flows around this city. (Vālmiki Rāmāyaṇa, Bālākāṇḍa Sarga 32).

VASU IV. A Vasu is mentioned in Brahmāṇḍa Purāṇa Chapter 58, as the brother of Paraśurāma. Vasu, Rumaṇvān, Suṣeṇa, Viṣvāvasu and Paraśurāma were the five sons born to Jamadagnī by his wife Reṇukā.

VASU V. A son of Murāsura. The sons of Murāsura were, Tāmra, Antariṣka, Śrāvastī, Vasu, Viśvāvasu, Nabhasāvan and Aruṇa. (Bhāgavata, Skanda 10).

VASU VI. A mighty King of the Kṛṣṇa dynasty. (Mahābhārata, Udyoga Parva, Chapter 74, Stanza 13).

VASU VII. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 94, Stanza 17, that the King Īlīna had five sons, Duṣyanta, Śūra, Bhīma, Pravasu and Vasu by his wife Rathantarī.

VASU VIII. A scholarly Brahmīn-hermit. The hermit Paila was the son of this Vasu. (M.B. Sābhā Parva Chapter 33, Stanza 35).

VASU IX. Vasu is used as a synonym of Śiva in Mahābhārata, Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 17, Stanza 140.

VASU X. A name of Mahāvīṣṇu. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 149, Stanza 25).

VASU XI. A King. He was born to Uttānapāda by Sūnītā. A controversy arose among hermits once, about cow-sacrifice and for a solution of the problem the hermits approached this King Vasu, who told them his perception that the sacrifice of cow was, strictly speaking, a matter of slaughter and as such it was to be forbidden. As the hermits could not agree with the King, they cursed him "Let the King go to Pātalā (underworld). Vasu then did very severe penance and attained heaven. (Matsya Purāṇa, 143, 18-25).

VASUCANDRA. A King who was the supporter and helper of Yudhīṣṭhira. He was as mighty as the powerful Indra. (M.B. Drona Parva, Chapter 150, Stanza 40).

VASUDĀMĀ. An attendant of Subrahmaṇya. (M.B. Salya Parva, Chapter 46, Stanza 5).

VASUDĀNĀ I. A Kṣatriya King. This King who was a member of the council of Yudhīṣṭhira was the ruler of Pārśu. It is stated in Mahābhārata that this King presented Yudhīṣṭhira with twenty-six elephants and two thousand horses. (Sābhā Parva, Chapter 52, Stanza 27). In the Bhārata battle this King was the support of Yudhīṣṭhira and Dhṛṣṭadyumna. But he was killed by the arrow of Droṇa. (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapters 151 and 171; Drona Parva, Chapters 23 and 190; Karṇa Parva, Chapter 6).

VASUDĀNĀ II. A prince of Pāṇcāla, who fought on the side of the Pāṇḍavas. He was killed by Droṇa-cāya. (M.B. Drona Parva, Chapter 21, Stanza 55).

VASUDĀNĀPUTRA. A King who had taken the side of the Kauravas and fought against the Pāṇḍavas. He killed Abhībhu, the son of King of Kāśī. (M.B. Karṇa Parva, Chapter 4, Stanza 74).

VASUDATTĀ I. Mother of Vararuci. (See under Vararuci).

VASUDATTĀ II. (VASUDEVA). Father of Sudevā, a woman who had taken rebirth as a hog. (See under Sudevā III).

VASUDEVA I. Being the son of Vasudeva, Śrī Kṛṣṇa was called Vāsudeva.

VASUDEVA II. See under Paundrakavāsudeva.

VASUDEVA. Father of Śrī Kṛṣṇa.
1) Genealogy. See under Kṛṣṇa.
2) Precious birth and current birth. Vasudeva was the rebirth of Prajāpati Kaśyapa. Aditi and Surāśī, the wives of Kaśyapa took birth as Devaki and Rohini respectively. (For details see under Kaśyapa.)
3) Marriage and Family. Rohini, the wife of Vasudeva, gave birth to Balarāma, the fighter Sārāṇa, Durdhara, Dama, Pāyḍāraka and Māhāhanu. Of Devaki who was also called Māyā and Amāvās, the younger son Kṛṣṇa and his beautiful sister Subhadrā were born. Vijaya, Varcamāna, Vardhamāna and Deva were sons born by Upaḍaṇyā. The two sons Agāvaha and Mandaga, otherwise called Angada were born of Vṛka-devi. Revanta who could not be defeated in battle, was born from Saptamādevi. The first son of Vasudeva was Kaśiṭā, whose birth was from a Vaiśya woman called Śraddhā Devi when Vasudeva was travelling in the forest. Kapila, a mighty son was born to the queen Śrutandharā. Subhadrā head of the archers and Abhava were born by his wife Janā. (Padma Purāṇa, P. 1314).

4) Other details.
(i) Vasudeva was the son of Śūrasena, and the husband of Devakī, the father of Śrī Kṛṣṇa, the brother of Kunū, and the minister of Ugrasena. It was Vasudeva who sent the priest Kaśyapa to Sataṛṅga to perform the purification ceremonies such as naming etc. of the Pāṇḍavas. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 123, Dākṣiṇāyapāṭha).
(ii) After the Bārata-battle, Vasudeva asked Śrī Kṛṣṇa and learned from him the detailed news about the battle. (Āśvamedha Parva, Chapter 60).
(iii) Vasudeva fell into a swoon when he heard that Subhadrā had become unconscious. (M.B. Āśvamedha Parva, Chapter 61, Stanza 5).
(iv) The ceremony of offering to the manes (Śraddhā) of Abhimanyu was performed by Vasudeva. (M.B. Āśvamedha Parva, Chapter 62, Stanza 1).
(v) When the Yādavas fought among themselves after drinking liquor, Śrī Kṛṣṇa went to Dvārakā and visited Vasudeva, and requested him to protect his wives who were awaiting Arjuna. Then after kissing the feet of Vasudeva, Śrī Kṛṣṇa and Balabhadra Rāma went to do penance. (M.B. Māusala Parva, Chapter 4, Stanza 9).
(vi) When the dynasty of Vṛṣṇi was completely destroyed Vasudeva thinking about the Supreme soul in his heart forsook his body. (M.B. Māusala Parva, Chapter 7, Stanza 15).
(vii) Arjuna performed the funeral rites of Vasudeva and aided his four wives to enter the funeral pyre. (M.B. Māusala Parva, Chapter 7, Stanza 19).
(viii) Vasudeva entered heaven and took his place among Viṣṇudevas (gods concerned with offering to the manes). (M.B. Svargārohaṇa Parva, Chapter 3, Stanza 17).
(ix) The synonyms of Vasudeva, used in Mahābhārata are Anukadandubhi, Śauri, Sūraputra, Śurasānu, Yaduvahā and so on.

VĀSUDEVABHĀṬṬATIRI. A Sanskrit poet of Kerala. Vāsudēvabhāṭṭatirī was a poet who used alliteration abundantly. His important works are Yuddhisthira-vijaya, Tripurārdhaka Śūrikathā, Vāsudeva Vijaya, Gajendramokṣa, Nalodaya etc.

VASUDHĀ. Daughter of Narmādā, a Gandharva woman. Narmādā had three daughters Sundarī, Ketumati and Vasudhā. (For more details see under Puspottakā).

VĀSUDHĀRĀ. A holy place. Those who visit this place could enjoy the fruits of performing horse-sacrifice. If one gives offering to the manes after getting oneself purified by bathing in this holy tirtha (bath), one will attain the world of Viṣṇu. There is a lake of the Āṣṭavās (eight Vasus) in this place. By bathing there, one could become the subject of the love and regard of the eight Vasus. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 82, Stanza 63).

VĀSUHOMA. A King of the country of Aṅga. Once he gave advice to Māndhātā on righteousness. (M.B. Śānti Parva, Chapter 122, Stanza 1).

VĀSUJYESTHA. A King. This King was the son of Puṣyamitra. (Matsya Purāṇa, 272, 29).

VĀSUKI. One of the famous Nāgās (serpents).
1) Birth. The uragas and nāgās (serpents) were born to Prajāpati Kaśyapa by his wife Kadrā. Vāsuki, the eldest son of Kadrā spent his childhood with his parents.
2) Difference of opinion. Viṇātā and Kadrā staked on the colour of the tail of Uccaśīravas (A horse obtained at the burning of the sea of Milk. To win the stake, Kadrā asked her sons to hang on the tail of Uccaśīravas as black hairs. But the truthful Vāsuki was not prepared to do so. Kadrā cursed Vāsuki and the others who sided with him. From that day onwards Vāsuki and those who were cursed, separated from their mother and formed into a serpent group. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapters 37 and 48).
3) The length of Vāsuki. The Devas and the asuras decided to get Amṛta (Ambrosia—the celestial honey of immortality) by burning the sea of milk. The Devas went to bring Mandara-mountain, to be used as the churning rod. Their attempt was futile. The asuras made a trial with the same result. The Bhuṭtaganas (Guards) of Śiva also made a vain attempt. On the instruction of Viṣṇu, Garuḍa went and brought the mountain as easily as an eagle takes away a frog. Now Vāsuki should be brought. The Devas and Gandharvas failed in that attempt also. Garuḍa who was haughty of his strength and speed, went to the city of the nāgās (serpents) and requested Vāsuki to come to the sea of Milk. Vāsuki replied that if the matter was so urgent he had no objection for being carried to that place. He took the middle part of Vāsuki in his beak and flew up higher and higher and reached beyond the horizon. Still the lower half of Vāsuki was lying on the ground. So he took Vāsuki in his beak as folded in two. Still the result was the same. Garuḍa became aware of the impossibility of carrying Vāsuki and returned, ashamed and disappointed. Viṣṇu rebuked him for his arrogance. After this, Śiva stretched his hand to Pātāla. Vāsuki became a small bangle on that hand. Thus Vāsuki was brought to the shore of the sea of Milk. (Kamba Rāmāyaṇa, Yuddha Kāṇḍa).

4) Other details.
(i) For the safety and protection of the Nāgās (serpents) Vāsuki gave his sister Jaratkaru as wife to the hermit Jaratkaru. (See under Jaratkaru).
(ii) The nāgās anointed Vāsuki as their King. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Dākṣiṇāyapāṭha, Chapter 36).
(iii) When Vāsuki saw the serpents, born of his family, falling into the sacrificial fire of Jamanejaya and dying

VĀYU I. One of the eight guardians of the world. (Dīkṣāyaka).

1) General information. Vāyu was born from the breath of Viṣvavapuruṣa. (Rgveda 10, 90). Tvaṣṭā was the son in-law of Vāyu. The eight dīkṣāyakas are Indra, Vahni (Fire), Yama, Nirṛti, Varuṇa, Vāyu, Kubera and Śiva. Vāyu is the guardian of the North West zone. The palace of Bhagavān Vāyu is known as Gandhāvatī.
2) Confrontation with Vāsuki. Once Vāyu and Vāsuki tried to find out who of the two was mightier, in consequence of which, Trikūṭaparvata, a peak of Mount Himālaya, was broken from its bed and thrown into the southern ocean near Laṅkā. Later, the city of Laṅkā was built on this mountain. (For details see under Trikūṭa.)

3) Children. Bhīmasena and Hanumān are said to be the prominent sons of Bhagavān Vāyu. It is mentioned in Rgveda, Maṇḍala 1, Anuvāka 7, Sūkta 112, that Agni was the son of Vāyu. To make fire from wood by attrition, the hards obtain strength by the help of the life breath called Vāyāna (a breath or vāyu). It is from this, that the idea that fire is the son of Vāyu, came into existence. To know how Vāyu obtained the paternity of Bhīma and Hanumān see under Bhīma and Hanumān. It is stated in Brahma Purāṇa that a group of celestial maids called ‘Mudā’ owes its origin to Vāyu.

4) Love of Vāyu. Once Bhagavān Vāyu happened to see the six beautiful daughters of Kuśānābhā, a king, and he was excited sexually. As the princesses refused to satisfy his desire, Vāyu changed the damsels into hunchbacks, by a curse. (For detailed story see under Kuśānābhā.)

5) The Vāyu (breaths) in the body. (See under Nāḍīcakra.)
6) Curbing the arrogance of Silk-cotton tree. Long ago a silk-cotton tree grew up on the top of the Himālayas. It grew up to be a big tree spreading its branches in all directions. Birds built their nests on the branches of that big tree and hermits and animals found shelter under its shade. The silk-cotton tree became arrogant. Once Nārada came there and praised the tree:—“How gigantic, this silk-cotton tree is! Even in a great storm its branches do not move.” The praise of Nārada made the tree more haughty. It told Nārada that the storm etc. were its servants. Nārada told Vāyu, what the silk-cotton tree said to him. Vāyu got angry and coming to the tree, said thus:—“You, wicked silk-cotton tree, in days of yore, when Brahmā was carrying on creation he took rest on you for a while. That is why I keep motionless when I come to you. It is not because I am afraid of you. I knew that you belittled me before Nārada. If you are bold enough, come and fight with me.”

The silk-cotton tree accepted the challenge. Next day Bhagavān Vāyu changed into a storm and blew against the tree. The tree lost leaves, flowers and fruits and stood bare. Thus within a very short time the arrogance of the tree was curbed.

This story was told to Yudhiṣṭhira by Bhīma, to show that rendering help to a foe, will only make him haughty. (M.B. Sānti Parva, 3 Chapters from 154.)

Other details.

(i) When Indra cut off the wings of the mountains, Bhagavān Vāyu saved the mountain Maināka from this danger, by hiding it in the ocean. (Vālmiki Rāmāyaṇa, Sundara Kānda, Sarga 1, Stanza 126.)

(ii) The image of Bhagavān Vāyu should be consecrated as sitting on the haunch of a deer, holding a flag. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 51.)

(iii) Indra sent Vāyu also along with Menakā to hinder the penance of Viśvāmitra. While Menakā was dancing in front of Viśvāmitra, Vāyu displaced her cloth. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 72, Stanza 1.)

(iv) It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 19, Stanza 22, that Vāyu is the messenger of the gods.

VĀYUVEGA III. One of the sons of Dhytaraṣṭra. He was present at the Swayanvar (marriage) of Draupadi (M.B. Aranyā: Chapter 177, Verse 2).

VAYA. A royal hermit of the period of Rgveda. Mention is made about the royal hermits such as Vāyu, Karkandhu and others in Rgveda, Maṇḍala 1, Sūkta 112.

VEDA. The sun of the hermit Ayodhadhaumya. (For further details see under Ayodhadhaumya.)

VEDA (S).

1) Introduction. The root ‘Vid’ in Sanskrit means ‘to know’. The books composed of the knowledge of the Aryans, collected and compiled were called the Vedas.

2) The origin and importance of the Vedas. It is said that Brahmā was the creator of the Vedas. Many say that, for the performance of sacrifices Brahmā created from Agni (fire), Vāyu (Wind) and Rāvi (the Sun), the three Vedas Rg, Yajus and Śāman which are eternal and in accordance with regulations.

The Vedas have two sides, the spiritual and the mundane. Moreover all the explanations of the Vedas from the Brāhmaṇas to the Bhashya of Śaṅkara, pertain to sacrifices. The literary meaning of Veda is mundane. Considering these two points and the facts that they are religious books and that they reveal the mental and social outlooks of the early Aryans, and as the origin of all the thoughts of Indians, all the Vedas, especially the Rgveda, hold a lofty place.

3) Parts of the Vedas. Mahāvīśu incarnation as Vyāsa in Dwāpara Yuga and divided the Vedas. The first Veda consisted of four pādas and a hundred thousand granthas. Vyāsa divided it into four parts known as, Rgveda, Yajurveda, Śāma and Atharvaveda. The sage and seer Vyāsa thus created by Rg, “Hautra” (a collection of lyrics in praise of different Gods, to be recited by the priest styled the ‘hotri’), by Yajus “Adbhuryava”, (a book of sacrificial prayer, of prose formulas to be uttered by the ‘Adbhury’ priest, who performed the manual work involved in a sacrifice), by Śāman, “Audgātra”, (Songs meant to be sung at the Soma sacrifice by a special class of priests ‘Udgātr’) and by Atharva “Brahmatavam”, (a collection of songs, spells and incantations, for the healing of disease, the restoration of harmony, the exorcism of evil spirits and to celebrate the power and omniscience of God) and established them separately. Paila, a scholar in Rgveda, and a disciple of Vyāsa, gave the original Veda to Indrapramit and its Sāmhitā (collections) to Bāskala as gifts. Bāskala divided the Sāmhitā into four, and gave each of them to Baudhya and others. Yajurveda was divided into twentyfour branches. They were composed by Vaiśampāyana of extraordinary intelligence, a disciple of Vyāsa. Kāndas (Chapters) such as Vāja-saneyas etc. were composed later by hermits such as Yajñavalkya and others in the form of Śrītis (tradition, as handing down only the tradition derived from ancient sages, to whom the Vedas were ‘revealed’). Jaimini the disciple of Vyāsa, divided Sāma and Vyāsa into different branches. Sumantu and Sukāmū composed separate Sāmhitās (collections) from them. Sukāmū composed thousand Sāmhitās. Sumantu the disciple of Vyāsa took the Atharvaveda and taught it to thousands of Paippalāda disciples. By the blessings of Vyāsa, Viṣṇu made the Purāṇa Sānhitā (the collection of Purāṇas). (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 150).

4) Branches of the Vedas. It has already been mentioned that the Vedas are four in number called Rg, Yajus, Śāma and Atharva. Each of these Vedas has branches called Sāmhitās (collections) and Brāhmaṇas (treatises relating to prayer and sacrificial ceremony). Aranyakas are appendices to the Brāhmaṇas. Upaniṣads (secret or esoteric doctrines) are appendices of the Aranyakas. Thus each of the Vedas has Sāmhitā, Brāhmaṇas, Aranyakas and Upaniṣads. All these are, in a way, expositions of the Vedas. In all these expositions there are numberless Śūktas. All these taken together are called Vedic literature.

In the Sāmhitās there are lyrics in praise of different gods. All these are spells and incantations (mantras) in the form of songs. The under-currents of all these spells are Vedas and stories from the Vedas. Generally speaking the Brāhmaṇas contain prose texts giving practical observations on sacrifice which are mentioned in the songs of praise. Here and there stories from Purāṇas and epics occur. The Aranyakas (forest-texts) got that name, because they are books of instruction to be given in the forest or writings meant for wood-dwelling hermits. As they contained esoteric spells and incantations which might cause injury even to those who were not concerned with them instruction in them was not given in towns or villages. The contents of the Aranyakas are the allegorical signification of the rites and sacrifices and the mystical meaning of the Vedas. It has been mentioned that the Upaniṣads are appendices of the Aranyakas. Still there is not much difference between the two and hence they cannot be separated from one another so easily. The Upaniṣads are called Vedāntas, (The aim and completion of the Vedas), because they are the end of the Vedas. The Vedāntas belong to the later period of the Vedic age. Instruction in Vedāntas was given only after completing the study of the mantras (Vedas) and the Brāhmaṇas.

The Upaniṣads contain philosophical speculations about the conception of Brahmā and the Vedas. The word Veda includes the Vedāṅgas also. Vedāṅgas (Ancillaries of the Vedas) are Śikṣa (phonetics), Vyākaraṇa (grammar), Chandas (metrics), Nirukta (etymology), Joyitä (astronomy), and Kalpa (ritual). At first instruction is given in the study of Brahmā and the study of Vedas. When more discussions and expositions on them are needed, the study of Brāhmaṇas and Aranyakas are resorted to. In course of time the Brāhmaṇas and Aranyakas, which contain discussions and expositions of the Vedas became independent branches of study under these names. That is why they contain mainly prose texts.

There are one lakh of mantras or spells and incantations in all the Vedas taken together. They are for blessing everybody and to make the four objects of life easily attainable. Sāṃkhya and Āśāvālaus sorted and grouped the mantras. Accordingly there are two thousand one hundred and ten mantras known as Brāhmaṇas. Dvāpiyana and other hermits have stated the number of granthas (verses) in Rgveda. It is said that there are one thousand nine hundred and ninety nine mantras in Yajurveda. There are one thousand eighthysix branches also. The branches in Yajus are known by the names Kāṇvi, Madhyandini, Kāthi, Madhyakaṭhi, Maitrāyaṇi, Taittiriya, Vaiśampāyanikā and so on.

In Śāma Veda there are branches such as Kāthumī, Āravanāyinī and so on; and songs such as Aranyakam, Uktham, Īham and so on. The number of Śāmavedic verses are nine thousand four hundred and twenty-five.

Sumantu, Jānjali, Ślokāyana, Saunaka, Pippalāda, Muñjakaśa and such others were responsible for the sorting and grouping of the mantras in the Atharvaveda. Altogether there are one thousand six hundred Upaniṣads. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 271).

5) Expositions of the Vedas. The religion of the Aryans became an established one when Vyāsa had created the VEDAS. The aim of Vyāsa was to bring about uniformity in the religious observances by performing rites and rituals, religious ceremonies such as sacrifices, etc. without any flaw. Following this a very wide Vedic literature grew up. The study of the Vedas, critical review of meaning, the connection between mantras and tantras (chants and rituals), Grammar, etymology, all these became inevitable. As the Vedas could be looked at from different points of view, from very early days, various types of expositions of the Vedas came out. Seven types of commentaries, Nairukta, Yajñika, Vaiyākaraṇa Jyanta, Sāṃpradāyika Ādhyātmika, Aitihāsika (pertaining to etymology, sacrifices, grammar astronomy, customs of a tribe, Brāhma or Spiritual legends and ancient lore) were the prominent among them. When the westerners began research work in the Vedas, another branch of literature also took form, known as the Āgāmikas (the historical). Even in the time of Yāska, who was an authority on Nirukta (etymology) the Vedas were expounded on the basis of legends and ancient lore. Hints to this effect are seen in Yāska's works. Mention is made about other types of expositions also, in them. The last book of importance in the Sāṃpradāyika type of exposition, was Vedārthaprakāśa, of Sāyāna. But the commentary of Skandavamī, the books Rgārtalahāpyī and Udgīthabhāṣya of Mādhavācārya etc. have spread the sāṃpradāyikya type of speculations in India. There is another cult in India which believes that everything seen in the Vedas is spiritual and that the spells and incantations are esoteric.

6) The gods of the Vedas. All the gods known today are not found in the Vedas. Even those who are found do not have the prominence that is given to them now. For example, the deity Viṣṇu, worshipped as one of the three godheads today, is not as omnipotent as the Indra of the Vedas. Though Viṣṇu is praised in five spells in Rgveda, when compared with other deities, he was not of much prominence. In the Vedas the incarnation of Vāmana is not given much importance. Even though Rudra is a recognized deity and mention occurs about Kaśyapa, in the Vedas, there is not a song of praise of Śiva in the Rgveda. There is no mention at all, about the worship of the Phallus, Devī and so on in the Vedas. The Vedas celebrate the Omniscience of Varuṇa, Indra, Agni, Mitra, the Maruts and so on. The lustre of Indra was gradually dimmed with the eﬄux of time and he became a mere libertine in the Purāṇas. The importance of many deities such as Varuṇa, Agni, Mitra, Aśvin and so on was greatly diminished in the Purāṇas. Thirtythree deities pertaining to Earth, Ether and Sky are praised in the Vedas.

7) The rites concerning instruction in Vedas. Manu has given certain instructions as to how the teaching of Vedas should be conducted.

8) The teachers of Veda. Sec under Guruparamparā.

9) The period of the Vedas. The Indians believe that the spells and incantations and the Brāhmaṇas are not man-made, but are revelations by God. So they are considered to be beginningless and endless. The hermits are considered to be seers of the spells. It is mentioned “Mantradraṣṭāraḥ na tu Kartāraḥ”. (They are seers of Mantra, not makers). In the opinion of one party, according to this maxim, it is not necessary to search for the creators or the period of creation, of mantras. They hold that only the Sūtras (thread, clue, guide, rule, aphorism) are made by man.

The westerners and the modern thinkers of India do not agree completely with this view. They believe that the early Āryans who entered India, first settled down in the Punjab and that the local civilization which they had assumed, broke out as songs of praise. In course of time, these songs of Praise took the form of Rgveda mantras (saying, song, formula). In the beginning there was only one Veda. Many believe that this state continued up to B.C. 1500. It is a fact universally acknowledged, that this Vedic literature is the most ancient literature of the world. There is difference of opinion as to the period of origin of this Vedic literature. Prof. Macdonell and Prof. Jacob are foremost among those who have made their opinions. In the opinion of Prof. Macdonell, the Vedic literature originated in the period between B.C. 1500 and 1200. But Jacob's opinion is that all the Vedas were made before B.C. 4000.

VEDADĪṢA. The son of Brhadhrata, the King of Cedi. Mention is made about him in Bhāgavata, Skanda 9.

VEDAGARBHĀ. A name of Devī. When Devī killed Sumbha and such other Asuras, Indra got pleased with her and praised her as follows:

“Aryā, Durgā, Vedagarbha, Ambikā, Bhadrakāli; Bhadrā, Kṣeyyā, Kṣemakari, Naikabāthu, I praise you.”

(Āgni Purāṇa, Chapter 12).

VEDAKALPA. A section of Atharvaveda. The hermit Muṇjakesa divided Atharva Veda into five Sāṁhitās (collections) called Nakṣatra Kalpa, Veda Kalpa, Saṁhitā Kalpa, Āṅgirasa Kalpa, and Sānti Kalpa.

VEDĀNĀ. A goddess who caused pain to living things. Adharma married Hitēśa. Two daughters named Nṛtā and Nṛtā were born to them. From them Bhaya, Naraka, Māya and Vedenā were born. Mṛtyu was the daughter of Māya. Duhkha was the son of Vedenā.

(Āgni Purāṇa, Chapter 20).

VEN I. An ancient King who was notorious for his bad rule.

1) Genealogy. Descended from Viśu in the following order: Brahâna - Sâyambhuva Manu - Uttânapâda - Dhrûva-Sîishi-Ripu-Câkṣuṣa Manu-Kuru-Âṅga-Vena.

2) Birth. Ten sons including Kuru, were born to Manu Câkṣuṣa by his wife Nâdvalâ. Agneyi, the wife of Kuru gave birth to six sons Âṅga and others. Âṅga married Sunîthâ. The son Vena was born by Sunîthâ. It is mentioned in Viśu Purâṇa, Âmśa I, Chapter 13, that Sunîthâ, the mother of Vena was the eldest daughter of Yama, and in Vâmana Purâṇa Chapter 47, that this Sunîthâ was the daughter born to Kâla and Mṛtyu. Vena who was born as the son of the daughter of Yama was born a wicked man because of the badness of his grandfather.

Vena grew up as a great sinner. A story occurs in Padma Purâṇa about an incident which caused Vena to become a great sinner.

The story says that Sunîthâ was the mother of Vena. In her play she used to imitate her father's job which was hurting others. One day when she went to the forest for play with her maids she saw Susâṅka the son of a Gandhara named Gitakolâhala. That youth who was handsome in every part of his body, was doing penance meditating on the goddess Sarasvatî for the attainment of the art of music. Sunîthâ began to annoy him daily. Susâṅka bore this annoyance patiently. He said only this "Go away, go away." But she did not pay heed to his appeals. Once she became angry and struck him. Getting angry at this, Susâṅka called out, "You wicked girl! Why do you annoy me? You have beaten me, who am engaged in penance, for no cause." That righteous Gandhara youth cursed his anger considering that she was a woman.

She told him "My father will beat everybody in the three worlds. He will harm the wicked, and will not do any harm to the good. So he rules the country rightfully." Sunîthâ told all about the story to her father. Though Yama, the incarnation of righteousness, heard all that his daughter said he did not give any reply.

She again went to the forest and struck him with a whip. Susâṅka rose up, shivering with pain and cursed her thus:

"You wicked girl! When you become a house-holder and join your husband you will get a son who will be a scoffer of Devas and Brahmins and an all-round sinner." Thus cursing her he continued his penance. Vena was born according to this curse.

3) The wicked rule of Vena. The hermits anointed Vena as the King. He became lord of the whole earth. He made a proclamation thus:—"Sacrifice is prohibited. Giving alms, is prohibited. Offerings of no kind should be made. Who else, other than I, can be the Yañña-puruṣa? (the deity who eats the food of sacrifice)? I am the only lord and consumer of sacrifices".

Hearing this proclamation, the hermits approached him and told him that the Vedas were the basis of righteousness, that sacrifices were ordained in them, and that if no sacrifice was performed the Devas would not be pleased and so on. But this did not make any change in his behaviour.

The hermits became angry. They all gathered together and recited spells and struck him with Darbha (poa) grass and killed him. As there was no King the world fell into darkness. Because of the troubles caused by plunderers, people gathered round the hermits. Hermis joined together and churned the left hand of Vena, from which a man of short stature came out, to whom the hermits said, 'Niṣûdâ' (sit). Because the hermits said Niṣûda', Niṣûda came into existence from that dwarf born of the sins of Vena. Then the hermits churned the right hand of Vena. At this churning a person as big as a mountain with divine signs came out. He had bow and arrows and in his palm there were marks of a wheel and flag. Seeing this the Devas VENÄ. A river famous in the Purânas. Information about this river, taken from Mahâbhârata, is given below:

VETRIKA. A country in India. Duryodhana had sent the army of the kingdom of Vetrîka for the protection of Bhiṣma. (Mahâbhârata, Bhiṣma Parva, Chapter 51, Stanza 7).

VIBHAÑDÅKA (VIBHAÑDAKA).

1) General information. A hermit, born in the family of Kaçapa. Once he happened to see Urvâśî. When he pondered over her, seminal flow occurred to him. An antelope swallowed it and gave birth to a son. That son was known as the hermit Kṣitigarbha, when he grew up. (For details see under Kṣitigarbha).

2) Other details.

(i) Vibhāndaka stays in the palace of Indra and glorifies him. (M.B. Sakhā Parva, Chapter 7, Stanza 18).

(ii) Vibhāndaka is as radiant as Prajāpati. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 110, Stanza 32).

VIBHĀVĀRĪ. A mental daughter of Brahmā. She is considered to be the personification of Night. It is mentioned in Matsya Purāṇa, Chapter 154, that according to the instruction of Brahmā, Vibhāvari entered the body of Umā and from that day onwards the body of Umā became dark.

VIBHĀVASU I. A hermit who got angry quickly. This hermit cursed his brother Supratiṣṭha. (See under Garuḍa, para 5).

VIBHĀVASU II. A hermit. This hermit respected Yudhiṣṭhira much. (Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 26, Stanza 24).

VIBHĀVASU III. One of the sons born to Prajāpati Kaśyapa by his wife Danu. Vibhāvasu also was present at the battle between Vṛtrāsura and Indra. (Bhāgavata, Skandha 6).

VIBHINDU. A king who was very liberal. It is mentioned in Kṛgyeda, Manḍala 8, that this king had given Medhātithī a gift of forty-six thousand cows.

VIBHĪṢĀNA I. Brother of Rāvaṇa. The son Viśravas was born to Prajāpati Pulastya. Rāvaṇa, Kumbhakarṇa and Vibhīṣāna were born to Viśravas by his wife Mālīni. A daughter named Śurpanākha also was born to them. Kumbhakarṇa and Vibhīṣāna went to do penance under the leadership of their eldest brother Rāvaṇa. They did severe penance and obtained various boons. The boon given to Vibhīṣāna was to live as a righteous man. After that they came back and defeated Kubera, the ruler of Lāṅka and brought Lāṅka under their control. Rāvaṇa became the ruler of Lāṅka. Kumbhakarṇa and Vibhīṣāna lived with their brother in Lāṅka. Rāvaṇa married Mandodari. Kumbhakarṇa took Vajrayāvālī the daughter of Mahābali and Vibhīṣāna took Sārālā, the daughter of Sālīṣha a Gandharva as their wives, according to Uttara Rāmayāna. Rāvaṇa conquered the three worlds and was ruling as the emperor of the whole world, when Śrī Rāma and Lāṅka entered the forest, with Sītā. Rāvaṇa carried Sītā away to Lāṅka. Śrī Rāma and Lāṅka, with the help of the monkey-army entered Lāṅka. At this time Rāvaṇa called together his ministers to consider the details about the battle with Śrī Rāma. Every one present except Vibhīṣāna voted for the battle. Vibhīṣāna advised Rāvaṇa to return Sītā, the stolen property and beg Śrī Rāma for pardon. Rāvaṇa got angry and expelled Vibhīṣāna from Lāṅka. Vibhīṣāna joined the side of Śrī Rāma and informed him of all the military secrets of Rāvaṇa. In the battle which ensued Rāvaṇa was killed and Vibhīṣāna was made the king of Lāṅka by Śrī Rāma. It is stated in Kāmarāmāyaṇa, Yuddha Kandaḥ that according to the instruction of Śrī Rāma and at the instance of Indra, Viṣvakarṇa came to Lāṅka and renovated the city of Lāṅka. Śrī Rāma returned to Ayodhyā and became the king. One day Candragupta, the second son of Sahasramukha Rāvaṇa (Rāvaṇa with thousand heads) stole away the daughter of Sugrīva and the daughter-in-law of Vibhīṣāna. Vibhīṣāna informed Śrī Rāma of this. Śrī Rāma, with Lāṅka, Vibhīṣāna, Sugrīva, Hanumān and the monkey-army went to the city of Sahasramukha Rāvaṇa in the middle of the Sea. A fierce battle ensued which lasted for three days. All the Rāksasas were killed. (See under Sahasramukhaśāna).

It is mentioned in Kāmba Rāmaṇya that in the horse sacrifice performed by Śrī Rāma, the control of the army was in the hands of Sugrīva and financial control was vested in the hands of Vibhīṣāna.

VIBHĪṢĀNA II. Mention is made in Mahābhārata, as given below, about another Vibhīṣāna who had ruled over Lāṅka.

Once Ghatotkaca went to the palace of Vibhīṣāna as the messenger of Sugrīva. Vibhīṣāna who heard from Ghatotkaca about Yudhīṣṭhīrān honored the messenger greatly and gave him a large quantity of valuable presents.

VIBHĪṢĀNA. An attendant of Subrahmanya. (M.B. Śalya Parva, Chapter 46, Stanza 22).

VIBHRAJĀ. A King who was the descendant of Yāyatī. It is stated in Bhāgavata, Skandha 9, that he was the son of Kṛṣṇa and the father of Anuha.

VIBHRAJĀRĀJA. Father-in-law of the hermit Sūka. Sūka, the son of Viśwa married Pīvī, who gave birth to four sons named Kṛṣṇa, Gauraprabha, Bhirī and Devaśruta and a daughter named Kṛṣṇī. This daughter Kṛṣṇī was married by Anuha the son of King Vibhīṣāna. Brahmadatta was the son born to Anuha by Kṛṣṇī. (Devi Bhāgavata, Skandha 1).

VIBHU I. A King of the family of Bharata. It is mentioned in Bhāgavata, Skandha 5, that he was the son of Prastotā and the father of Prthuṣeṇa.

VIBHU II. Indra of the age of the fifth Manu. (See under Manvantara).

VIBHVĀ. A son of Sudhanvā who was the son of Atri. The three sons of Sudhanvā were Rhūḥu, Vibhīva and Vāja. (Rgveda, Mandala I, Sūkta 111).

VICAHKNU. An ancient King of India. He was a protagonist of non-killing. He was of opinion that liquor, alcoholic medicine, honey, flesh, etc. should be avoided. It is not ordained in the Vedas that these things should be used. (M.B. Sāntī Parva, Chapter 265, Stanzas 3-12).

VICAṆ. One of the sons born to Śrī Kṛṣṇa by Rukminī. (Bhāgavata, Skandha 10).

VICITRA. A Kṣatriya King. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Adi Parva, Chapter 67, Stanza 61, that this King was born from a portion of the asura Krodhavaśa.

VICITRAVĪRYA. Father of Dīrgharāṣṭra. (For further details see under Dīrgharāṣṭra).

VIDAIṋ. A devil. In the previous birth, this devil was a Kṣatriya King named Harīhara. This King lived as a godless man in consequence of which, he was born as a devil in his next birth. (Padma Purāṇa, Pāṭāla Khaṇḍa, Chapter 95).
VIDALLA. Minister of the king Dhruvasandhi. (For further details see under Dhruvasandhi).

VIDĀṆḌA. A king in ancient India. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 182, Stanza 12, that Vidaṇḍa and his son Daṇḍa were present at the Swayārīvara (marriage) of Draupadi.

VIDARBAHA I. A brother of Bharata. It is stated in Bhāgavata, Ṣandhi 5, that Kauśāvarta, Ilāvarta, Brahmāvarta, Āryāvarta, Bhadraketa, Śena, Indraspīk, Vidarbha, and so on were brothers of Bharata the son of Rṣabha. Nimi was his son.

VIDARBAHA II. See under Jyāmāgha.

VIDARBAHA III. An ancient country in India. The information about this Purāṇicly famous country obtained from Mahābhārata, is given below:

(i) Once Sahadeva, during his regional conquest, captured Bhojakata, a part of Vidarbha and expelled the king Bhiṣmaka from the country. (M.B. Sābhā Parva, Chapter 31, Stanza 11).

(ii) By the blessing of hermit Damayanti, three sons, Dama, Dānta and Damana and a daughter, Damayanti, were born to Bhiṣmaka the king of Vidarbha. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 58, Stanza 5).

(iii) Having heard about the Swayārīvara (Bride selecting a suitable husband from the candidates present) of the princess Damayanti of Vidarbha, the gods Indra, Agni, Varuna and Yama came to Vidarbha; (see under Damayanti).

(iv) Damayanti is called Vaidarbha because she was born in Vidarbha. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 55, Stanza 12).

(v) Rukmīṇi, the wife of Śrī Kṛṣṇa, was the daughter of a king of Vidarbha. Bhagavān Śrī Kṛṣṇa carried Rukmīṇi away by force. (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 158, Stanza 13).

VIDEGHA MĀṬHAVA A king born of the dynasty of Mathu. There is an interesting story about this king in the Sātapatha Brāhmaṇa. It is as follows.

Videgha put Agni in his mouth and lived without talking, fearing that Agni might jump out. His priest Rahugana tried to extinguish the fire, but he could not extinguish the fire from the mouth of the king.

Once by chance the word Gṛta got out of the mouth of Rahugana. Instantly the fire in the mouth of the king blazed into a big flame and burst out of the mouth. That fire gradually increased and began to consume the world, Rivers became dry. It seemed that even Videgha and his priest would be burnt to ashes in that blazing fire. At last Videgha got into the river Sādanīrā, which flowed through the boundary of his own kingdom, with the intention of not becoming a prey to the ever-increasing fire. With this the fire abated.

VIDEHA I. Another name of emperor Nimi. (See under Janaka).

VIDEHA II The kingdom of Mathilī. This country which lies on the North East part of India was ruled by Kṣatriya kings of the dynasty of Videha. It is stated in Mahābhārata, Sābhā Parva, Chapter 29, that Bhīmasena had during his eastern regional conquest, conquered this country. About this kingdom which is the native country of Sītā, the following information is available in Mahābhārata.

(i) The hermitage of Parasurāma was on the North of Videha. (M. B. Vana Parva, Chapter 130, Stanza 13).

(ii) The army of Videha attacked Arjuna in the battle of Bhārata. (M. B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 117, Stanza 32).

(iii) Karṇa defeated the Kṣatriya princes of the country of Janaka (M. B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 4, Stanza 6).

(iv) Parasurāma cut the Kṣatriyas of this country into pieces with his sharp arrows. (M. B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 70, Stanza 11).

(v) This country had been giving tribute to Karṇa. (M. B. Karga Parva, Chapter 9, Stanza 33).

VIDHĀṬA. A son born to Bhrigu. By his wife Khyāti two sons Dhātā and Vidhāṭā and a daughter named Lakṣmī were born to Bhrigu. Lakṣmī was given in marriage to Viṣṇu. The daughter of Meru, Āyati, was married by Dhātā and Niyaṭi by Vidhāṭā. The son Mrkaṇḍu was born to Vidhāṭā by Niyaṭi. This Mrkaṇḍu was the father of Mṛkaṇḍeya. (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Amśa 1, Chapter 10).

The following statements occur about Dhātā and Vidhāṭā in Mahābhārata.

(i) At Nākakolaka (heaven) Dhātā and Vidhāṭā took the form of women and allowed hermit Uttanika to see them. (M. B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 3, Stanza 166).

(ii) Dhātā and Vidhāṭā stood above the city of Virāṭa to see the battle between Arjuna and Kṛpa. (M. B. Virāṭa Parva, Chapter 56, Stanza 11).

(iii) Dhātā and Vidhāṭā lived with Manu. (M. B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 65, Stanza 42).

(iv) Dhātā and Vidhāṭā gave to Subrahmanyā two followers named Suvrata and Sukarmā. (M. B. Śalya Parva, Chapter 45, Stanza 42).

VIDHĀVA A woman whose husband is dead. In ancient India, it was ordained how a widow should live. It was allowed for a widow to get a son by her younger brother -in-law to continue the family line in case the death of her husband occurred before the couple had children. The procedure about this is given in Manusmṛti, Chapter 9.

"He who goes to accept the widow with the permission of great people, should beshear his body with ghee and go to her bed in the night in a dark room. She should have only one son in this manner. After she has become pregnant, they should behave to each other as a teacher and a younger brother-in-law."

VIDHRTI. Son of Khagana and the father of Hiranya-nābha. He was a King. (Bhāgavata, Ṣandhi 9).

VIDĪṢĀ. A river. Mention is made in Mahābhārata, Sābhā Parva, Chapter 2, Stanza 12, that this river stays in the palace of Varuṇa serving him.

VIDRĀVĀṆA. One of the sons born to Kaśyapa by Manu. (Matsya Purāṇa 6:18).

VIDRUTA. A King born in the family of Yayāti. He was the son of Rucaka. (Bhāgavata, Ṣandhi 9).

VIDULĀ. A heroic Kṣatriya woman of India. In Mahābhārata, Udyoga Parva, there is a story, how this Vidulā sent her son, who had fled from the battle-field because of fear, back to the battle-field again. The Pāṇḍavas, who had completed forest-life and Pseudonymity successfully and returned to Hastināpura were again deceived and put to shame. Śrī Kṛṣṇa’s argument as a mediator was not successful, in the palace of the Kauravas. Śrī Kṛṣṇa came away from the palace of Duryodhana and entered the house of Vidura and visited Kuntī. Śrī Kṛṣṇa asked her opinion on the idea of waging a war against the Kauravas. It is not met and right on the part of a heroic mother to welcome a son who comes home being defeated in battle. To substantiate this point, she told Śrī Kṛṣṇa the story of Vidulū, as given below.

Vidulū was a brave woman, who lived in ancient India. Her son Sañjaya fought with the King of Sindhu and was defeated. When he came home Vidulū did not receive him. She emboldened him by saying that she would be more proud of a son, who had sacrificed his life in the battlefield than one who returned home defeated. All his arguments which were excuses for his cowardice, were reluted by his mother. At last Sañjaya engaged again in a battle with the King of Sindhu.

On hearing this story told by Kuntī Śrī Kṛṣṇa became immensely pleased. (M.B. Udyoga Parva, 3 Chapters from 134).

VIDURA I.

1) General information. Vidura was a superhuman being, very famous in the story of Mahābhārata, as a brother of Dhṛtarāṣṭra, as a man of colossal intelligence who had been closely watching the goings and comings of the Kauravas and the Pândavas, as the adviser of Dhṛtarāṣṭra, and as a man of immense learning and wisdom.

2) Incarnation of Dharma Deva. There is a story in Mahābhārata, Adi Parva, Chapter 107, which describes Vidura as born from a portion of Dharma Deva. The story is given below.

Long ago there was a hermit called Māndavya in India. As he was standing in deep meditation near his hermitage, the men of the King chased some thieves and came to the place where the hermit stood. The robbers placed the stolen property near the hermit and ran away. The king’s men caught the hermit, and the thieves. The King ordered them to be placed on a trident. The thieves died on the trident. But Māndavya was not dead. The King saw the trident and got Māndavya down. The hermit went to Dharma Deva and asked him what his blame was for suffering the punishment of the trident on him. Dharma Deva replied that the punishment was inflicted for a cruel deed he had done in his childhood. He had caught some flies and made a bunch of them by piercing them with the rib of a coconut-palm leaf. But Māndavya argued that Dharma Deva was not right in punishing him because the Sāstras and rules of righteousness said that mistakes committed by boys below the age of twelve could not be considered to be sins. Further he cursed Dharma Deva that he would take birth on the earth from the womb of a Ādī. Accordingly Dharma Deva took birth from the womb of the servant of Ambikā and Ambalīkā.

3) Birth. Vidura was born as the brother of Dhṛtarāṣṭra and Pāṇḍu. (For detailed story see under Dhṛtarāṣṭra 1, para 2).

4) Up to marriage. Dhṛtarāṣṭra, Pāṇḍu and Vidura spent their younger days in Hastinapur as inseparable brothers. Their teacher was Bhīṣma. Vidura learned the Vedas, Sāstras, Purāṇas, Itihasas etc. also, along with the education given to a prince such as archery, club-fight, sword-fight, wrestling, controlling elephants etc. He understood that to be righteous was far better than fighting. It is stated in Mahābhārata, Adi Parva, Chapter 108, that Vidura got the sense of righteousness, and education in fighting, at the same time.

Childhood ended. As Vidura was born to a Brahmin by a Sūdrā woman he had no right to become King. When he grew up, the duty to find a wife for him fell on Bhīṣma. At that time a damsel born to a Brahmin by a Sūdrā woman was being brought up in the palace of King Devaka. With the permission of Devaka, Bhīṣma brought the girl and gave her in marriage to Vidura. It is stated in Mahābhārata, Adi Parva, Chapter 114, that sons and daughters were born to the couple.

5) Partiality towards the Pândavas. Vidura was the most intelligent and wisest man of his time, and he always favoured righteousness. Though he viewed the Kauravas and the Pândavas with equal favour, in his heart he felt some partiality towards the Pândavas, because they were virtuous, whereas the Kauravas were becoming more and more wicked. As this partiality arose from his sense of righteousness, nobody could blame Vidura for this. His aim was the prosperity of the Lunar dynasty of Kings.

Many ill omens were seen at the time of the birth of Duryodhana. Vidura understood that if that infant grew up he would be a comet to the Lunar dynasty. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Adi Parva, Chapter 115, that Vidura advised Dhṛtarāṣṭra that it would be better for him to throw away that infant.

The death of Pāṇḍu drew Vidura closer to the Pândavas. Vidura took the lead in performing the funeral rites and other ceremonies which followed. The Pândavas were very sad and miserable at the death of their father. It was at this time that Duryodhana poisoned Bhīma sena, tied him with a rope and threw him into the river Ganges. Bhīmasena was carried to the world of nāgas (serpents). Kunti felt grieved at the loss of her son Bhīma, but Vidura consoled her.

It was due to the wisdom of Vidura that the Pândavas escaped from the disaster in the lac-house. As soon as Duryodhana had completed the lac-house, Vidura understood the deception lying hidden under it, and he informed the Pândavas of everything about it. Moreover he sent a man named Kahanaka and made an underground passage from the lac-house. When the lac-house was burnt down, the Pândavas escaped by the under-ground passage and reached the banks of the Ganges. Vidura had sent a ferryman secretly to take them to the other side of the Ganges. When Bhīma got the news that the Pândavas had been burnt to death in the lac-house he became very sad. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Adi Parva, Chapter 149, that Vidura informed Bhīma secretly that the Pândavas were not dead.

After this event the Pândavas come into the scene only at the Svayamvara (marriage) of Pāṇḍu, Bhīma and Droṇa proposed that the Pândavas should be brought back and be given half of the kingdom. Vidura, by his arguments convinced Dhṛtarāṣṭra that the proposal of Bhīma and Droṇa was correct. Dhṛtarāṣṭra asked Vidura to bring the Pândavas back. Vidura went to the city of Drupada and brought the Pândavas back and consoled their mother Kuntī. After this Yudhiṣṭhira performed Rājaśūya (sacrifice of royal consecration). Vidura took part in it and took the charge of financial part of the sacrifice. It was after this that Duryodhana challenged Yudhiṣṭhīra for a game of dice. Vidura saw beforehand that this move on the part of Duryodhana was dangerous. So he talked forcibly against this, and gave warning to all concerned. As Duryodhana did not agree with Vidura, he was scolded. But Duryodhana was firm and the game was conducted. Pāṇḍāli was harassed by means of stripping and the Pāṇḍavas went to the forest. It is stated in Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 3, that Vidura had been witnessing all these scenes with wet eyes.

6) Separated from the Pāṇḍavas. When the Pāṇḍavas were driven to the forest, Dhṛtarāṣṭra felt sorry. He became more afraid of the people than he was sorry for the Pāṇḍavas. He understood that his subjects would unite and rise against his sons. He called Vidura and asked him for a remedy. Vidura who was full of impatience, made a speech against the wickedness of the sons of Dhṛtarāṣṭra and advised him to forsake his own sons and to bring the Pāṇḍavas back and give them the kingdom. Dhṛtarāṣṭra did not like this approach. He said that Vidura was partial to the Pāṇḍavas and asked him to go away from the palace. Vidura became grieved at this. He followed the Pāṇḍavas, and walking a long distance, reached the forest Kāmyaka and met the Pāṇḍavas.

When Vidura had gone Dhṛtarāṣṭra felt miserable. He sent for Vidura and when he returned Dhṛtarāṣṭra begged for pardon. Vidura again became the adviser of Dhṛtarāṣṭra. (M. B. Vana Parva, Chapter 6).

7) Adviser of Dhṛtarāṣṭra. The advice of Vidura is famous in Mahābhārata. The main duty of Vidura was to console Dhṛtarāṣṭra by speaking about righteousness when he became troubled in mind because of the constant quarrels between his sons and the Pāṇḍavas.

Vidura fulfilled his duty well. Duryodhana was firm on the point that not a dot of land would be given to the Pāṇḍavas. Śri Kṛṣṇa came to Hastināpura as mediator. Duryodhana showed disrespect to him. Vidura said in strong words that it was wrong on the part of Duryodhana to have done so and compelled Dhṛtarāṣṭra to show due respect and hospitality to Śri Kṛṣṇa. Accordingly Dhṛtarāṣṭra welcomed Śri Kṛṣṇa and showed respect and hospitality. Knowing this, Duryodhana and his brothers tried to make Śri Kṛṣṇa a captive. Vidura harshly scolded them for this attempt. Seeing all these impudent actions on the part of his sons, Dhṛtarāṣṭra became distressed. Vidura consoled him by good exhortations. He told Dhṛtarāṣṭra about the transience of life and the importance of the soul. When the battle was fiercely going on in the battleground of Kurukṣetra, Vidura recited with Dhṛtarāṣṭra consoling him and giving him good advice. The death of Bhiṣma was an unbearable grief to Vidura. He took part in the funeral of Bhiṣma. He himself placed the body on the funeral pyre. (M. B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 168, Stanza 11).

8) Pilgrimage. When Vidura failed in his attempt to ward off a pitched battle between the Kauravas and the Pāṇḍavas he felt extremely miserable. Without taking part in the battle, he started on a pilgrimage. Getting the news at Prabhāṣakṣetra about the end of the battle, he went to the basin of river Yamunā. On the way he heard the news of the passing away of Śri Kṛṣṇa, from Uddhava. Before death Śri Kṛṣṇa had revealed that Vidura had heard Uddhavagītā from Maitreya. This book which is in the form of a conversation between Vidura and Maitreya contains the talk between Kapila and Devabuḍḍi. Description of the line of Manus, sacrifice of Daśaka, story of Dhruva, story of Prṣu, story of Puruṣājana etc. were the subjects of the talk. (Bhāgavata, 3-4).

9) End. The Bhārata-battle came to an end. The Kauravas were exterminated. Efforts were begun to establish law and order. In all these efforts Vidura was a help to the Pāṇḍavas. Still he spent most of his time with the old Dhṛtarāṣṭra. Yudhiṣṭhīra came to Dhṛtarāṣṭra and both embraced each other. Seeing this Vidura cried aloud. Vidura advised Yudhiṣṭhīra how to carry on the administration of the new government. After this he decided to go to the forest to spend his last days. Dhṛtarāṣṭra, Gāndhārī, Kunṭī, Vidura and Sākuni went to the forest. The Pāṇḍavas tried in vain to prevent them from going. When Dhṛtarāṣṭra, Gāndhārī, Kunṭī, Vidura, Sānjaya and others started for the forest, even Bhumāsena cried aloud. Pāṇḍavas and the people of the city went along with them up to the river Ganges. On the bank of the Ganges near the hermitage of Satāyūpa, a hermitage was erected and Vidura and the others lived there.

They lived there for nearly six years. The Pāṇḍavas became unable to bear the separation from their elders. Once Dharmaputra dreamt about his mother. Next day the Pāṇḍavas went to the banks of the Ganges. Pāṇḍali, Subhadrā, Uttarā and many people of the city followed them. They went to the Satāyūpa-hermitage and saw Dhṛtarāṣṭra and the others. But the great Vidura was not there. When asked about it he got the reply that having become abstemious and having no more desires he was wandering about. Yudhiṣṭhīra was greatly troubled.

Next day at dawn when Yudhiṣṭhīra went to bathe in the Ganges, on the way he saw Vidura sitting in contemplation with a stone in his mouth. Yudhiṣṭhīra stood with joined palms before the lean and weak form of that sage and said “Look, Dharmaputra bows before you.” He repeated this several times. But there was no change in Vidura. Yudhiṣṭhīra’s disappointment did not last long. For, in a short while Dharmaputra saw that a divine radiance emanated from the body of Vidura and passed on to his body and that the body of Vidura fell lifeless on the ground. This union took place because both Vidura and Yudhiṣṭhīra were portions of Dharmadeva. After this Dharmaputra made preparations to burn the body of Vidura. Then an ethereal voice said “Vidura is abstemious. His body should not be burned.” Dharmaputra went to the hermitage and informed all, about the death of Vidura. (M. B. Aśramavāśīka Parva, Chapters 26 to 28).

Mention is made in Mahābhārata, Svarga-rohaṇa Parva, Chapter 5, Stanza 22, that Vidura entered Svarga (heaven) and stays there in the form of Dharmadeva.

VIDURA II. A Kṣatriya who lived in Pāṇcāla. The story of this Vidura, who had killed a Brahmin because of his want, is given in Padma Purāṇa, Bhūmikhaṅga, Chapter 91. The story is given below:

Long ago there lived a Kṣatriya, named Vidura, in Pāṇcāla. Because of penury he killed a Brahmin. After that the Kṣatriya discarded his lock of hair and Brahmastring and went to every house saying "Look, here am I, a slayer of Brahmin. Please, give alms to the drunkard and killer of a Brahmin." Saying thus he walked from house to house and took alms. But he did not get remission of Brahmahatyā (killing of a Brahmin).

Filled with grief and sorrow and mental worry the sinner Vidura sat in the shade of a tree. At that time Candraśarmā, a Brahmin of Magadha came there. He was a wicked man who had killed his teacher because of inordinate lust in consequence of which he had been forsaken by his own people. Vidura asked Candraśarmā who wore no sign of a Brāhmaṇa, what he was. Candraśarmā told his story to Vidura who in return told him his sinful acts.

At this time another Brahmin named Vedāśarmā came there. He also was a sinner. The three of them told each other about their sinful acts. At this time Vallāla, a Vaiśya came there. He was a drunkard who had killed cows. These four desperate sinners travelled together and visited several śṛṭhas (holy baths). But they did not get remission of their sins. At last they started for Kālānjaragiri.

While these desperate sinners were living in Kālānjar a poor Brahmin came there. He asked them why they were so sad. They told him everything. When he heard their stories he felt pity for them. The old Brahmin said "You sinners should go to Prayāga, Puṣkara, Sarvatūrtha and Vārāṇasi and bathe in the Gāṅgā on New Moon days and you will become free from sin." They obeyed the old Brahmin and went to the holy places told by him. Thus Vidura and his friends became sinless.

VIDŪRA. A king of the Kurus. He was the son born to the great king Kuru by Subhārīgī, a damsel of Dāśārha family. Vidūra married Sāmpriyā, a princess of Madhu royal family. A son named Anaśvā was born to her. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 95, Stanza 39-40).

VIDURĀGAMANARAJYALABHAPARVA. A sub-section of Ādi Parva, comprising chapters 199 to 217, in Mahābhārata.

VIDURĀTHA I. A king of the Vṛṣṇi dynasty. Information got from Mahābhārata about this king is given below.

(i) Vidūratha also was present at the Svayāhvara marriage of Draupadi. (M. B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 185, Stanza 19).

(ii) In Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 218, Stanza 10, mention is made that the brightness of this king increased after his participation in the festival conducted on mount Raivata.

(iii) Vidūratha was one of the seven famous and mighty kings of the Yadu dynasty. (M.B. Sābhā Parva, Chapter 60, Stanza 14).

(iv) Vidūratha was a close friend of Śiṣupāla, Śalva, Jaśarandha and so on. Jaśarandha employed this Vidūratha as the guardian of the Eastern entrance of the city of Mathurā. When Śri Kṛṣṇa killed his brother Dantavakra, Śalva, Śiṣupāla and others, Vidūratha ran to take revenge on Kṛṣṇa. But he was killed by Śri Kṛṣṇa. (Bhāgavata, Skanda 10).

(v) It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Śvargarohaṇa Parva, Chapter 5, Stanza 16, that after death he joined the Viśvadevas.

VIDURĀTHA II. A king of the Puru dynasty. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 49, Stanza 75, that Ṛksavān hid the son of this king in a mountain and saved him from the Kaśṭriya-extermination of Pararūrāna and at that time spotted leopards brought up this child.

VIDURĀTHA III. A king who was the friend of the hermit Bhalanda. This king had two sons named Sunitī and Sumati and a daughter named Mudāvati. One day while Viduratha was hunting in the forest, he saw a cleavage on the earth caused by the yawnning of Kujaṃbhāsura. The king stood there for a while looking at the cleavage. Then the hermit Svuravā who had been standing close by approached the king and said: "This asura Kujaṃbha has a divine pestle with him. Because of the possession of this pestle he has become invincible and is a threat to the whole world."

Viduratha, who knew everything from Svuravā, lived cautiously. One day his daughter was carried away by this Kujaṃbhāsura. Sunitī and Sumati confronted the asura to rescue their sister but were made captives. Finally Vatsapri, the son of the hermit Bhalanda killed the Rākṣasa (giant) and liberated princess Mudāvati. (Mārkaṇḍeya Purāṇa, Chapter 113).

VIDURĀTHA I. A king born in the family of Bharata, the son of Duṣyanta. The father of this king was Suratha and his son was Sārvabhauma. (Bhāgavata, Skanda 10).

VIDURĀTHA II. Brother of Dantavakra. When Śri Kṛṣṇa had defeated Dantavakra, his brother Vidurātha came to fight with Śri Kṛṣṇa and was killed in the fight. (Bhāgavata, Skanda 10).

VIDUṢA. A king of the Aṅgā dynasty. Gṛhṭa was the father of king Viduṣa and Pracetas was his son. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 277).

VIDYĀ I. A maid of Devī Umā. (Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 231, Stanza 48).

VIDYĀ II. A deity. This deity is worshipped as the deity of three Vedas which are the most important of the religious or Vedic literature. Mention is made about this deity in the preface of Rgvedabhāṣya by Sāyaṇa, as follows.

Once Vidyā approached a Brahmin and said "I am your wealth. Your duty is to impart me to disciples who are pure, celibate, law-abiding and active, and who protect the treasure. I hate disciples who are jealous."

VIDYĀDHARA(S). A group of semi-gods. Vidyādhāras, Apsaras (celestial maids), Yaksas, Rākṣasas, Gandharvas, Kinnaras and so on are semi-gods. Of these Kinnaras are lute-players, and Vidyādhāras wear garlands, and all these groups live in the sky. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 51). It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 56, Stanza 8, that when attracted by spells and incantations, Indra went to the Sarpasatras (serpent sacrifice) of Janamejaya, the Vidyādhāras walked behind him (Indra).

VIDYĀNĀTHA (AGASTYA). A Sanskrit writer on rhetoric. He was also called Agastya. He is the author of Pratāparudrīya. The real name of Pratāparudrīya is Partāparudrayāsabhāṣyanam.

He was a member of the court of King Pratāparudrādeva who ruled over the Kingdom of Wāraīgal from 1295 to 1323 A.D. He has written a drama of five acts, under the name "Pratāparudra. Kalyāṇa." Pratāparudrīya is a book on rhetorical figures.
Vidyāsāgara. Father of Bhārtṛhari. See under Bhārtṛhari.

Vidyātīrtha. A holy place in India. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 34, Stanza 52, that those who bathe in this tīrtha (bath) would get knowledge.

Vidyota. The son born to Sage Dharma, by his wife Lambā, the daughter of Dākṣa. (Bhāgavata, Skandha 6).

Vidyotā. A celestial maid of Alakāpūri. Mention is made in Mahābhārata, Anuśasana Parva, Chapter 19, Stanza 45, that Vidyotā took part in the dance performed in honour of Aṣṭāvakra, the hermit.

Vidyuddhara. A Deva Gandharva. (See under Nāhuṣa).

Vidyudrūpa. A Yakṣa who was the favourite of Kubera. This Yakṣa married Madanikā, the daughter of Menakā. Once when these two were sitting on mount Kailāsa and drinking liquor the bird Kaṅka born of the family of Garudā came there. Vidyudrūpa killed Kaṅka after a small fight. Hearing about the death of Kaṅka, his brother Kandara came to avenge the death of his brother. A fierce battle ensued between the two, in which Vidyudrūpa met with death. After this Madanikā accepted Kandara as her husband. (Mārkaṇḍeya Purāṇa, 2, 4, 38).

Vidyudvargas. An eternal god concerned with offerings to the manes. (Mahābhārata, Anuśasana Parva, Chapter 31).

Vidyujjihva i. A Rākṣasa (giant). This Vidyujjihva was a friend of Ghaṭotkacā. He was killed by Duryodhana in the battle of Bhārata. (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 91, Stanza 20).

Vidyujjihva ii. Husband of Sūrpanakha. A son named Sambhukumāra was born to the couple. As this son Sambhukumāra was standing like a young tree in the forest Danḍakārṇya, Lāksmaṇa cut it down by his sword. Thus Sambhukumāra died. (Kamba Rāmāyaṇa, Aranya Kāṇḍa).

Vidyujjihva iii. One of the important Rākṣasa followers of Rāvaṇa. This giant, by his sorcery and witch-craft, showed Śītā, the head cut off from the body of Śrī Rāma and his broken bow, to make her consent to become the wife of Rāvaṇa. He repeated this stratagem on several occasions. (Vālmiki Rāmāyaṇa, Uttarā Kāṇḍa, Sarga 12).

Vidyujjihva iv. One of the sons born to Viśravas by his wife Vākā. Mention is made in Vāyu Purāṇa that this Rākṣasa lives in the city called Arvākātala in Pātāla (underworld) known as Mahātala.

Vidyumnālī i. A son of Tārakāsura. He was one of the Tripuras. (For details see under Tripura).

Vidyumnālī ii. A mighty and brave Rākṣasa who was a friend of Rāvaṇa. After the death of Rāvaṇa, this asura, who lived in the Pātāla (underworld) stole away the sacrificial horse of Śrī Rāma to avenge the death of Rāvaṇa. Satrughna killed Vidyunmālī and redeemed the sacrificial horse. (Padma Purāṇa, Pātāla Khaṇḍa).

Vidyutā. A celestial maid of Alakāpūri. It is stated in Mahābhārata, Anuśasana Parva, Chapter 19, Stanza 45, that this celestial maid performed a dance in honour of the hermit Aṣṭāvakra.

Vidyutākṣa. A warrior of Subrahmanya. (M.B. Salya Parva, Chapter 45, Stanza 62).

Vidyutkesa. A Rākṣasa (giant). (For details see under Praheṭi).

Vidyutkesi. A Rākṣasa King. The notorious Sukeśi was the son of this King. (See under Sukeśi).

Vidyutparṇā. A celestial maid born to Kaṣyapa–prajāpati by his wife Pradūhi. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Adī Parva, Chapter 63, that celestial maids such as Alambuṣa, Vidyutparṇā, Miṣrakesi, Titotumā and such others were famous for their beauty.

Vidyutprabhā i. See under Mukṭapalajāketu.

Vidyutprabhā ii. A hermit. (Mahābhārata, Anuśasana Parva, Chapter 125).

Vidyutprabhā iii. A Dānava (Asura). This asura pleased Rudradeva by penance and acquired from him the control of all the three worlds for one lakh of years, the recognition as a follower of Śiva and the kingdom of Kuśādvipa, as boons. (M.B. Anuśasana Parva, Chapter 14).

Vidyutprabhā i. Ten celestial maids of Northern quarter. (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 111, Stanza 21).

Vidyutprabhā ii. Grand-daughter of Mahābāli. (See under Sridatta).

Vīghana. A famous King, born in Mukta Vāniśa. (Mahābhārata, Udyoga Parva, Chapter 74, Stanza 16).

Vīghana. A giant on the side of Rāvaṇa. (Vālmiki Rāmāyaṇa, Sundara Kāṇḍa, Sarga 6).

Vīgraḥa i. One of the two attendants given to Subrahmanya by the ocean. The other one was Saṅgraḥa. (M.B. Salya Parva, Chapter 45, Stanza 50).

Vīgraḥa ii. One of the six attributes of Kings. (See under Sadguna).

Vīgraḥa iii. (Image).

1) General information. God, who is not discernible to the outward senses, is given embodiment and consecrated in places of worship by people. These figures are called Vīgraḥas (idols or images). People worship Śālagrāma, (a kind of ammonite found in the river Gaṇḍaki), Bānaliṅga (Phallus), mystical diagrams, animals, birds, trees, rivers, lakes, places of death etc. and so many other things.

2) The different kinds of Vīgraḥas. Vīgraḥas are of three groups. They are : (1) Mysterious (2) Evident-mysterious (3) Evident. Śālagrāma, Phallus etc. belong to the group mysterious. The Mukhaliṅga, considered to be the image of Trimūrti (Brahmā, Viṣṇu, Siva) in the Elephanta cave, belongs to the group Evident. The image of Phallus is Evident-mysterious. In the first, there is no form or figure. In the second there are parts of the figure. The image which shows the entire figure is Evident.

Some gods and goddesses possess two appearances, peaceful and fierce. Those who wish to succeed in performing cruel deeds and to vanquish enemies, worship fierce gods whereas those who wish for peace, worship peaceful Gods. Viṣvarūpa, (assuming all shapes), Narasimha (the man-lion), Vaṭapatraśāyī (as lying on banyan-leaf) and Parasurāma are fierce forms of Viṣṇu. Destroying Kāma (cupid) Gaja and Tripura are fierce forms of Viṣṇu worshipped by some people. Generally temples with images in this form are erected outside the village or city.

Owing to the differences, in the making and the materials used, the images are divided into three groups.
They are portraits, half-portraits and corrupted portraits. The whole of the figure will be made in (portraits) citras. In half-citras only the front view will be completed. Corrupted Citras are images done on the wall or rock.

3) Main images. Main images are mostly Saivite or Vaishnavite. There will be one or two other images. Worship of Devi (Goddess) is one of them. The Saivites will worship Parvati also after Siva and the Vaishnavites a Mahalakshmi also after Visnu. In South India the worshippers are Saivites and Vaishnavites.

4) Saivites. In India a large number of people worship Siva. There is not much difference in the mode of worship of these various people. There are worshipers which are in accordance with the Vedas and which are not.

Forms of worship which are Sattvika (of goodness) and which are not, could be seen. The Saiva worship called Paraśupada is very ancient. The phallus at Gūḍīmallā is considered to be as old as B.C. 2nd century. From this it could be inferred how old, the Saivite worship is in India.

5) The Śaivite images. Of the emblems denoting Śiva, the most important is the Phallus, which is of two kinds, movable and immovable. Risen by itself and or erected and set firm and consecrated inside temples are immovable; that which is made of earth, metal, jewel, wood or stone, is movable. There are Phalluses made for the time being. They are fixed on platforms or pedestals. They are of different sizes and shapes. The Phallus is made of male stone and the pedestal of female stone.

6) The portions of Śiva. There are various kinds of images meant to reveal various attributes of Siva. Līgodbhāva (originated from Phallus), Candrasēkharavara, Raudra, Umāsamhitā (with Umā) etc. are some of them. Kāmāntaka (killing Kāma or Cupid), Gajāri (enemy of Gaja), Kālāri (Enemy of Yama) and Tripurādhakā (burning Tripura) are figures of extermination. Śiva has the figures of blessing Candēśa, Viṣṇu, Nandīśvara, Vighuneśa and Arijuna also. There are a large number of images in various dancing poses.

There are four other figures of Dakṣināmūrti, such as the explanation, knowledge, yoga (or meditation, contemplation and other ways of union with the Universal Soul) and Viṃādha (carrying a lute). A few other forms are Bhikṣātaka (begging alms), Kapālavairi (wearing skulls), Gāndhāra (bearing the Ganges), Ardhānārīśvara (God half of whom is a woman), Vṛṣabhavāhana (seated on a bull), Viṣabhakṣaka (eating poison) etc. The figures of Saṭādeva, Maheśa, Ekaḍaśarudras (eleven Rudras), Vidyeśvara and Mārtyaṣṭaka are seen occasionally here and there. There are scriptures describing these figures.

7) The Devas (gods) connected with Śiva. Among the gods connected with Śiva, first place is given to Gaṇapati. Worship of Gaṇapati was in vogue from 6th or 7th century B.C. Perhaps the images that we see today were made after this period.

In South India temples dedicated to Gaṇapati are not scarce. The position of Gaṇapati is at the entrance of villages and fortresses, at the foot of banyan trees, at the entrance of temples and at the south-west corner of Śaivite temples.

There are images of Gaṇapati in the postures of standing and dancing. Main images are the trunk turned to the right and to the left. The trunk is turned to the right in some and to the left in others.

8) Subrahmanyas. Subrahmanyas is worshipped only in South India. Subrahmanyas is known by various names such as Kumāra, Muruka, Kārttikeya, Skanda, Arumukha, Guha, and so on. Temples dedicated to Subrahmanyas are seen in plenty in Tamil Nadu. They are all situated on the tops of hills.

There is sufficient proof in the poetic works of the Saṅgha period, to the fact that Subrahmanyas-worship was prevalent in South India. On excavation at the place Nāgārjunakoṇḍa in the District of Guntur, images of Subrahmanyas were found under the earth. They were as old as 3rd century B.C.

Images of Subrahmanyas are seen in various postures and shapes such as sitting, with six faces, with one face, with two hands, with four hands, sometimes with wife, in the state of having finished investiture with the Brahma-string etc. There are figures sitting on the peacock also.

9) Other images. Images of Śakti, Lakṣmi, Earth-goddess, Sarasvatī, Saṃśāta (Seven Mothers), Jyeṣṭhā, Viṣṇu, the ten incarnations, the planets such as the sun etc. the deities of the weapon like the thunderbolt, Śakti (lance), Nandikēśvara, Cāndēśvara, Sāstā, Kṣetrapāla, Brahmā, Guardians of the zones, Aśvinīdevas, half gods, etc. are also dedicated and worshipped in temples.

Vihārī. A serpent (nāga) born in the race of the Nāga Airāvata. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 57, Stanza 12, that this serpent fell in the sacrificial fire of the serpent-sacrifice performed by Janamejaya and was burnt to death.

Vihārīgama. A soldier of the giant Khara. This Khara who confronted Rāma and Lakṣmanaruṣa (forest Dāndakāranya) had twelve army captains under him, including Vihārīgama, (Vālmiki Rāmāyaṇa, Aranya Kāṇḍa, Sarga 26).

Vihārya. The son of Varcas who was born in the dynasty of Gṛhasthā. Vitatya was the son of this Vihārya. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 30, Stanza 61).

Vihūnda. An asura. This asura was the son of the mighty and great Asura Hūnda. At the time of the fierce battle between the devas and the asuras, this mighty asura Hūnda and Nahuṣa confronted each other and Hūnda was killed. After this Vihūnda, the son of Hūnda fought with Nahuṣa. In the earlier part of the battle Vihūnda and his army suffered defeat. Vihūnda began to do penance in order to defeat the Devas who got terrified at this and went to Mahāviṣṇu and prayed for protection. Viṣṇu consoled them saying that he would take necessary steps. When the Devas were gone, Viṣṇu took the form of a beautiful woman and went in search of Vihūnda. They met each other in the garden Nandaṇa. Vihuddha fell in love with her. He wanted to marry her. She said, "Oh, Handsome Vihūnda, I have no objection to be your wife. But there is a condition, you, must gather seven crores of Kāmōda flowers and offer them as oblation to Śiva, and then make a garland of Kāmōda flowers and put it on my neck. From that day onwards I am yours."

Vihūnda agreed to it. He went for the flowers. He wandered over forests and mountains. Nobody had any idea of such a tree or flower. Thinking that this condition, laid by the damsels, was a deceit played upon him, he stood perplexed when the hermit Ṣukra saw him.
He told the hermit everything. Then Sukra told him, "Kāmodā is neither a tree nor a flower. She is goddess who came up from the sea of Milk at the time of the churning. She dwells at Gaṅgādvāra. When she laughs pure white fragrant flowers fall from her lips, on the water of Gaṅgā, every moment. When she is sad, the flowers that fall from her lips will be red."

Vihūṇḍa started for Gaṅgādvāra. Nārada knew this. He came to Vihūṇḍa and said, "It is difficult to reach Gaṅgādvāra and please Kāmodā, and obtain the flower. So the easiest way is to gather the flowers that come down through the water of Gaṅgā." Vihūṇḍa agreed.
He took his seat on the bank of Gaṅgā and waited for the flowers to come.
Nārada decided to cause harm to Vihūṇḍa. So he went to Kāmodā and by way of telling her news, he informed her that the hermit Bṛgu had cursed Mahāvīṣṇu and changed him into a man. On hearing this Kāmodā began to cry. Red flowers fell from her lips. They were carried down in cluster by the water of Gaṅgā. Vihūṇḍa gathered them and went to the dwelling place of Sīva.
Sīva and Pārvati saw this by their inward eyes. Pārvati did not like the idea of offering red flowers at the feet of her beloved husband. Sīva found out a remedy for it. He advised Pārvati to offer pure white flowers at his feet standing as a boy. Vihūṇḍa came with red flowers. Pārvati appeared in the form of a boy. Both began to vie with each other in offering flowers at the feet of Sīva. Gradually it changed to a fight between the boy and Vihūṇḍa. In the fight Vihūṇḍa was killed. (Padma Purāṇa, Bhūmi khaṇḍa, some chapters from 119).

VIJAYA I. A minister of Daśaratha. (Vālmiki Rāmāyana, Bālākāṇḍa, Sarga 7, Stanza 3).

VIJAYA II. A gate-keeper of Vaikuṇṭha. (See under Jaya).

VIJAYA III. A Son of Purūravas. It is mentioned in Bhāgavata, Skanda 9, that Ayuṣ, Śrutiāyus, Satyāyus, Raya, Vijaya and Jaya were the sons born to Purūravas, by Urvāśī.

VIJAYA IV. A King of Kosala. It is stated in Brahmāṇḍa Purāṇa, Chapter 75, that this King Vijaya of Kosala confronted Paraśurāma and was defeated.

VIJAYA V. This was the secret name given to Arjuna by Dharmaiputra during the time of their pseudonymity. (M.B. Virāṭa Parva, Chapter 5, Stanza 35).

VIJAYA VI. One of the hundred sons of Dvārakā. He joined with Jaya and Durjaya, two Kauravas and fought with Nila, Kāśya and Jayaṭesana. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 25, Stanza 45).

VIJAYA VII. The name Vijaya is used as a synonym of Śiva in Mahābhārata, Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 17, Stanza 51.

VIJAYA VIII. The name Vijaya is used as a synonym of Viṣṇu in Mahābhārata, Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 146, Stanza 21.

VIJAYA IX. A King who ruled over the city of Vāraṇasī. Vijaya destroyed the city of Khāṇḍavī and the forest Khāṇḍava rose there. Later he gave the forest to Indra. The most powerful King of this dynasty was Upāricara (Kālikā Purāṇa, Chapter 92).

VIJAYA X. A country of ancient India famous in the Purāṇas. (Mahābhārata, Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 9, Stanza 45).

VIJAYA XI. The trident of Śiva. During the journey to Bhdravaṭa, of Subrahmanya, this trident Vijaya of Śiva went behind King Yama. This trident had three prongs. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 231, Stanza 37).

VIJAYA XII. A Bow of Indra. This is as bright as Gāndiva and as strong as the bow Sārīgadhānus of Śrī Kṛṣṇa. The bows of the Devas, considered to be most divine, are Vijaya, Gāndiva and Śrīgāndiva. Vijaya belongs to Indra, Gāndiva to Varuṇa and Sārīgāṇḍiva to Viṣṇu. Once Druma, a Kimpuruṣa (demi god) who lived in the mountain Gandhamadāṇa got Vijaya from Indra. After that Rukmi, his disciple got this bow from Druma. (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 150, Stanza 3).

VIJAYA XIII. The divine bow of Karṇa. It is said that this bow was the most divine of all weapons. This bow which was made by Viśvakārmā, originally belonged to Indra. At that time Indra had defeated many asuras with the help of this bow. Indra gave this bow to his trusted disciple Paraśurāma. Karṇa got it from Paraśurāma. It is said that this bow was superior to Gāndiva. It was with the help of this bow that Paraśurāma conquered the Kṣatriyas twenty-one times. (M.B. Karṇa Parva, Chapter 31, Stanza 42).

VIJAYA I. The daughter of King Dāśārha. The emperor Bhumānava married her. A son named Suhotra was born to the couple. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 95, Stanza 33)

VIJAYA XI. Daughter of Dyutimān, the King of Madradaśa. This Vijayā was the wife of Sahadeva the son of Pāṇdu. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 95, Stanza 80, that a son named Suhotra was born to Sahadeva by Vijaya.

VIJAYA III. A synonym of Devī Durgā. (M.B. Virāṭa Parva, Chapter 6, Stanza 16).

VIJAYADĀSI. A festival of Indians. As this festival is celebrated for nine nights from the 1st to the 9th in the bright lunar fortnight of the month of Kanni (September-October) it is known as Navarātri (Nine nights) and as it continues up to Daśamī (the tenth night) it is called Dāśarī. The Hindus believe that the Vijayadāsim (the victorious tenth) was the day on which Devī Durgā killed Mahiṣāsura and got victory. So this day is considered to be a suitable moment to begin the learning of all the arts which would enable one to carry on a successful life. Sarasvatī is considered the transfiguration of Durgā. As people became less sophisticated, they began to consider the story of killing Mahiṣāsura as a metaphorical saying, to mean the killing of ignorance. So the day of victory of Devī Durgā (the same as Sarasvatī) is considered to be the auspicious moment for the beginning of learning. The warrior places his weapons, the man of literature his books and pen, the musician his musical instruments, at the feet of Devī and with devotion and worship receives them back from Devī on the Vijayadāsī day at an auspicious moment.

This is a festival celebrated everywhere in India. In several native states this festival used to be celebrated under the patronage of the royal family as a State festival. As it is believed that Mahiṣāsura had lived in Mysore the celebration of Dasara in that State generally is on a grand scale. In Kerala, from olden times this festival was celebrated under the patronage of the Vaṇci Royal family.

VIJAYALAKŚMI. One of the eight Laksmis. The duty of Vijayalakṣmī was keeping the treasury of Brahmā. Once she showed carelessness in her duty. So Brahmā cursed her to go and guard the gate tower of Rāvana. Accordingly Vijayalakṣīmi guarded the gate of Lankā under the name Lakālaṅkā. When she was hit by Hanūmān she obtained her original form and returned to the world of Devas. (See under Lakālaṅkā).

VIJITĀŚVA. One of the five sons of emperor Prthu. Vijitāśva decided to perform one hundred horse-sacrifices and completed ninety-nine. Seeing this Indra feared that he might be depose. So he stealthily took away the sacrificial horse of Vijitāśva. There was a fierce battle between Indra and Vijitāśva in which Indra was defeated, and Vijitāśva recovered the stolen horse from Indra. It was from that day onwards that this son of Prthu got the name Vijitāśva.

Being pleased with the King, at this expert fighting, Devendra taught him the art of vanishing. (Bhāgavata. Skandhi 4).

VIJVALA. Son of the bird Kuñjala which was a famous scholar. (For further details see under Subāhu. XIV).

VIKADRU. A noble Yadava. It was this Vikadru who brought to the notice of Śrī Kṛṣṇa the fact that Jārāsandha had dared to attack Mathurāpurī for the eighteenth time. (M.B. Saṅhā Parva, Chapter 17).

VIKALPA. An ancient country of India famous in the Purāṇas. (Mahābhārata, Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 9, Stanza 59).

VIKĀṢṬAPARVATA. A mountain in the vicinity of Mount Meru. (Devi Bhāgavata, Skandhi 8).

VIKARNA I. One of the hundred sons of Dhṛtarāṣṭra. The following information is available in Mahābhārata about this valiant fighter.

(i) Vikarna, the son of Dhṛtarāṣṭra was one of the eleven mahārathas. (great warriors). (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 63, Stanza 39).

(ii) Among the disciples of Drona, who attacked Droupada, Vikarna was one. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 137, Stanza 19).

(iii) Vikarna was present at the Svayamvara (marriage) of Draupadi. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 182, Stanza 1).

(iv) Vikarna was one of those kings who stood silent and sad, being unable to answer the questions put by Draupadi when she was about to be stripped of her clothes. (M.B.Saṅhā Parva, Chapter 68, Stanza 1).

(v) Once Karna reviled at Vikarna. (M.B. Saṅhā Parva, Chapter 68, Stanza 80).

(vi) At the time of the theft of the cows of king Vīrāta by Duryodhana and his brothers. Vikarna fought against Arjuna. (M.B. Vīrāṭa Parva, Chapter 54, Stanza 9).

(vii) A severe fight followed in which the defeated Vikarna fled from the battle-ground. (M.B. Vīrāṭa Parva, Chapter 54, Stanza 41).

(viii) Hit by the arrow of Arjuna, Vikarna was wounded and he fell down from the chariot. (M.B. Vīrāṭa Parva, Chapter 51, Stanza 41).

(ix) On the first day of the battle of Bhārata, Vikarna entered in a combat with Śrutasoma. (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 45, Stanza 58).

(x) He fought with Sahadeva. (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 71, Stanza 21).

(xi) Abhimanyu defeated Vikarna. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 78, Stanza 21).

(xii) Ghataotkaca defeated Vikarna. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 92, Stanza 36).

(xiii) There was a combat between Nakula and Vikarṇa. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 110, Stanza 11).

(xiv) He fought with Bhīmasena. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 113).

(xv) He fought with Śīkhandi. (Drona Parva, Chapter 96, Stanza 31).

(xvi) He fought with Nakula and was defeated. (Drona Parva, Chapter 107, Stanza 30).

(xvii) Bhīmasena killed him. (Drona Parva, Chapter 137, Stanza 29).

VIKARṇI A. A hermit devoted to Śiva. Mention is made in Mahābhārata, Anuśāna Parva, Chapter 14, Stanza 99, that Śiva was pleased with the devotion of this hermit and appeared before him granted him boons.

VIKARṇA III. A country of ancient India. The warriors of this country joined the army of Sākuni and fought against the Pāṇḍavas. (Mahābhārata Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 51, Stanza 15).

VIKARTANA. A king of the Solar dynasty who was afflicted with leprosy. It is stated in Padma Purāṇa, Uttarākhaṇḍa, Chapter 135, that he got recovery from the disease by bathing in the river Sābhramati.

VIKĀṬA I. A brother of Prahasta. (See under Akamaṇa).

VIKĀṬA II. A character in the story of Pañcatantra. (See under Pañcatantra).

VIKĀṬA III. (VIKAṬĀNA). One of the hundred sons of Dhṛtarāṣṭra. In the Bhārata-battle, fourteen sons of Dhṛtarāṣṭra joined together and wounded Bhīmasena. Vikāṭa was one of them. This Vikāṭa was killed by Bhīmasena. (Mahābhārata, Karna Parva, Chapter 51).

VIKĀṬA. A giantess in the harem of Rāvana. She tried to entice Sītā for Rāvana. (Valmiki Rāmāyaṇa, Sundara Kānda, Sarga 23, Stanza 15).

VIKĀTHINI. An attendant of Subrahmanya. (M.B. Śalya Parva, Chapter 46, Stanza 18).

VIKRAMĀDITYA. Vikramāditya, who is believed to be one of the mighty emperors of Bhārata, was an extraordinarily wise, righteous and valiant ruler. There are several stories in all the languages of India, prevalent everywhere. They are generally called Vikramāditya stories. Vikramāditya was the son of Mahendrāditya, King of Ujjayini. Mahendrāditya and his wife Saumyadarśanā were in great distress as they were childless. Sumati, the Prime Minister, Vajrayudhā, the army commander, and Mahidhara, the priest, were as distressed as the royal couple. The King and the queen engaged themselves in fast and prayer.

In the meanwhile, the Devas found life extremely difficult due to the wicked deeds of the barbarians, and they went to Kaḷāśā and told Rudradeva of their grievances. They said, "Oh! Lord! All the asuras exterminated by yourself and Mahāviśu, are born on the earth as Barbarians. They commit great sins such as killing the Brahmins, obstructing sacrifices carrying away hermit damśels etc. The sacrificial offerings in the sacred fire with Vedic Mantras by Brahmins, is the food of Devas. Because of the troubles caused by the Barbarians in the earth, the sacrifices are hindered and the Devas are in trouble due to lack of food. So a being, mighty and strong enough to exterminate all the Barbarians on the earth, should take incarnation."

Śiva agreed and sent the devas back to their world. Then he called Mālyavan and told him to take birth as the son of Mahendrāditya in the city of Ujjayini.
Śiva added. “You should exterminate all the Barbarians and reinstate rituals and ceremonies. The Yaksas, Rākṣasas, ghosts etc. will be under your control. You will be an emperor there with divine powers.” Accordingly Mālyāvān took birth as the son of Mahendrāditya. That infant was Vikramāditya who became a mighty emperor later. (Kathāsaritśāgara, Viṣamaśila-lambaka, Tārānga 1).

VIKRAMĀŚILA. A King praised in the Mārkaṇḍeya Purāṇa. Kālindī was his wife and Durgama his son.

VIKRANTA. A King who was the father of Śudhrti and the son of King Dama. It is mentioned in Vāyū Purāṇa, Chapter 86, that Vikranta was an ideal King who loved and cared for his subjects.

VIKRṬA. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Śānti Parva, Chapter 196, that this was the name adopted by Kāmadeva (Cupid) when he argued with Ikṣvāku, in the form of a Brahmin.

VIKRṬI. A King of the family of Yayati. This King's father was Jimita, and his son was Brhmaṇaratha. (Bhāgavata, Skanda 9).

VIKṢARA. A noble asura born to Kaśypa Prājāpati by his wife Danu. The most powerful of the Dānavas (asuras) given birth to by Danu, were Vikṣara, Bala, Vīra and Vṛtra. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 65, Stanza 33). Of these Vikṣara took rebirth later as King Vasumitra. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 67, Stanza 41).

VIKṢUKI. A son of Ikṣvāku. It is said that Ikṣvāku was born from the spittle of Manu. It is stated in Devī Bhāgavata, Skanda 7, that after the death of Śaryati, the Rākṣasas (giants) attacked Ayodhyā and the sons of the King having fled to different directions, Ikṣvāku continued the dynasty of Saryati in Ayodhyā. Hundred sons beginning with Vikṣuki, were born to Ikṣvāku. Of these hundred sons fifty were employed to rule over the regions of East and North and fortyeight, to rule over the regions in the south and the west. With the remaining two sons the King stayed in Ayodhyā, and carried on administration.

One day King Ikṣvāku resolved to conduct the great sacrifice of offering to the manes called Mahāpralaya-śrāddha, for which preparations were speedily made. The hermits such as Vasiṣṭha and others arrived according to invitation. He sent his son Vikṣuki to the forest to bring the required amount of flesh for the sacrifice. Vikṣuki entered the forest and hunted hare, hog, deer etc. and collected the required quantity of flesh; but on the way home, he became tired of hunger. To appease his hunger he took a small hare from the collection cooked it and ate it. He took the balance to the King who was much pleased with his son and gave the animals to Vasiṣṭha the family priest for prokṣaṇa (sprinkling of holy water on the animals before sacrifice). But Vasiṣṭha got angry and said, “flesh which constitutes remains is not acceptable.” The King understood the truth only then. He was filled with anger and distress. He expelled Vikṣuki from his country for this misdeed. Thus because he had eaten a Saśa (hare) Vikṣuki got another name Saśāda. Saśāda not at all caring about the misfortune that befell him, went to the forest and lived on fruits and roots and worshipped Devi, with ardent devotion. Ikṣvāku died. Saśāda knew this and returned to Ayodhyā and assumed reign. He performed several sacrifices on the banks of river Sarayū. The famous Kakutṣtha was the son of this Vikṣuki. (Devī Bhāgavata, Skanda 7).

VIKUNḌALA. A Vaśya who obtained heaven by bathing during the month Māgha in the waters of Kālindī. This Vaśya was a deplorable sinner. Still the men of Kāla (Yama) sent Vikunḍala to heaven without minding his sins. This story occurs in Padma Purāṇa, Ādi Khaṇḍa, Chapter 30, as follows: In days of old there lived a Vaśya named Hema-kundaḷa in the great kingdom of Nisadha. He was a devotee and worshipper of devas and Brhmaṇas. He carried on trade and agriculture and by plundering he amassed much wealth. Hemakundaḷa grew old. He thought about the frailty of life and spent a sixth part of his wealth for charitable purposes. For remission of the sins committed throughout the whole of his life, he gave alms as stipulated in the Purāṇa. After entrusting the family affairs to his sons Śrikundaḷa and Vikuṇḍala, he went to the forests for penance.

His sons were young. They turned away from righteous ways and followed a path of pleasures and wickedness. They refused to pay any heed to the advice of their elders. Drinking and going to other women became their routine. Within a short time they lost their wealth. They had nothing to eat. Their friends and favourites all deserted them. Being forsaken by every body, they engaged themselves in theft or robbery. They were afraid of the king and the people, and so they shifted to the forest. They lived by hunting. At this time the elder brother was caught by a tiger. The younger brother was bitten by a snake. Thus, on the same day, both sinners met with death. The messengers of Yama took both of them to the world of Yama. According to the order of King Dharma, Vikuṇḍala got heaven and Śrī Kunḍala got hell.

Vikuṇḍala who was glad at obtaining heaven asked the men of Yama on the way, why he was given heaven. They replied, “There was a Brahmin who was well-versed in all branches of knowledge. He was the son of Harimitra. His hermitage was on the southern bank of Yamunā. Yourself and the Brahmin became friends in the forest. Because of that friendship you were enabled to take bath in two Māgha months in the holy waters of Kālindī which is capable of washing all the sins away. By the first Māgha bath you got remission of your sins. By the second Māgha-bath you became eligible for the attainment of heaven.”

VIKUNḍA. An ancient country in India. Mention is made in Mahābhārata, Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 56, Stanza 9, that it was the warriors of this country who stood with the king Bhṛładala on the left wing of the Garuda Vvīva of the army formed by Bhīṣma, in the battle of Bhārata.

VIKUNḌHA (VAIKUNḌHA). A group of Devas (gods) in the Manvantara of Raivata. There were fourteen Devas in this group. The mother of these gods was Vikuṇḍha. (Brahmāṇḍa Purāṇa, 2, 36, 57).

VIKUNḌHAṆA. A son born to Hasti, a king of the Lunar dynasty by Yaśodhara the princess of Trigarta. Sudevā, a princess of the dynasty of Daśārṇa was his wife. Ajāmīṇḍha was the son born to Vikuṣṭhāna by his wife Sudevā. (M. B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 95, Stanza 35).

VILĀSA. A hermit who was the friend of Bhāsa. This hermit did penance in Paścimāta. It is mentioned in Yogavāsiṣṭha that Vīlāsa and Bhāsa attained heaven by pure knowledge.

VILOHITA. A Rākasā (giant) who was the son of Kaśyapa. It is mentioned in Vāyu Purāṇa, Chapter 69, that Vilohita had three heads, three legs and three hands.

VILOHITA (M). A hell. (See the section Naraka under Kāla).

VILOMA (VILOMA). A King. In Bhāgavata, King Vīloma is stated as the son of King Vahni (Fire) and in Vīṣṇu Purāṇa, as the son of Κapotaromā.

VIMADA. A truthful King. Once a princess named Kamadīyā accepted Vīmada as her husband at her Svayamvara marriage. The Kings and princes who were present became jealous of Vīmada and prepared for war. The helpless Vīmada praised the Āśvinīdevas. The gods defeated the enemies and gave the bride to Vīmada. (Rgveda, Maṇḍala 1, Anuvāka 17, Sūkta 117).

VIMALA I. A King. Vimala who was the King of South India was the son of Sudyumna. (Bhāgavata, Skandha 9).

VIMALA II. A King of the city of Rāmātā. At the time of the horse-sacrifice of Śrī Rāma, this King rendered a good deal of help to Śaṭrughna. (Padma Purāṇa, Pātāla Kāṇḍa, Chapter 17).

VIMALA. A female calf born from Rohini, the daughter of Surabhi. Rohini had two daughters called Vimalā and Anālā. (M. B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 66, Stanza 67).

VIMALAPĀDA. A nāga (serpent) born to Prajāpati Kaśyapa by his wife Kadrū. (M. B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 33, Stanza 8).

VIMALĀṢKATIRHĀ. A holy place. It is stated in Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 14, Stanza 69, that he who spends a night in this holy place, observing celibacy, would attain heaven.

VIMALATIRHĀ. A holy place. In the lakes of this place, fishes having the colour of gold and of silver play. Mention is made in Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 82, Stanza 87, that those who bathe in this holy bath wouldgettall of their sins and would get to the world of Indra.

VIMALODĀKA. Once Brahmā performed a sacrifice on the Himālayas. Sarasvatī attended this sacrifice, on which occasion she adopted the name Vimalodāka. (M. B. Salya Parva, Chapter 88, Stanza 29).

VIMOCANA. A holy place on the boundary of Kuruksetra. By taking bath in this tīrtha and leading a life without anger, the sins incurred by receiving bribes would be remitted. (M. B. Vana Parva, Chapter 83, Stanza 161).

VIMŚA. The eldest son of King Ikyāku. It is stated in Aśvamedha Parva, Chapter 4, Stanza 4; that he had a son named Viśviniśa.

VIMUCA. A South Indian hermit. (Mahābhārata, Sānti Parva, Chapter 208, Stanza 28).

VIMUKHA. A hermit of ancient India. This hermit is member of the assembly of Indra. (M. B. Sabhā Parva, Chapter 7).

VINĀD. A river of India famous in the Purāṇas. (M. B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 9, Stanza 97).

VINĀSAṆA I. A tirtha (holy bath). It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 82, that in this holy bath Sarasvatī lives in invisible form.

VINĀSAṆA II. Another holy place. In Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 84, Stanza 112, mention is made that one could obtain remission of all sins and the fruits of Vājapeyayajña by visiting this holy place.

VINATA. A captain of the monkey army which fought for Śrī Rāma. Under Vinata, the son of Svetā, there were eight lakhs of monkey-soldiers. (Vālmiki Rāmāyana, Yuddha Īštaka, Sarga 26).

VINĀTĀ. A wife of Kaśyapa. Kaśyapa took the daughters of Dakṣa such as Vinatā, Kadru and others as wives. Two sons, Aruṇa and Garuḍa and a daughter, Sumati were born to Vinatā. (Details relating to Sumati are given in Chapter 19 of Brahmāṇḍa Purāṇa). The Nāgas (serpents) were born to Kadru. For details see under Garuḍa.

VINĀTĀṢVA. The son of Ila (Sudyumna) and the grandson of Vaivasyavat Manu. After the time of his father, he became the ruler of the Western Empire. (Vāyu, 85:19).

VINĀYAKA I. A devatā of the Gaṅas (guards of Śiva). (Mahābhārata, Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 150, Stanza 25).

VINĀYAKA II. Gaṅapatī.

VINĀYAKACATURTHI. One of the important festivals of the Hindus. This is called the day of worship of Gaṅeṣa. The Caturthi (4th day) of the bright lunar fortnight in the month of Simha is the birth day of Gaṅapatī. It is a famous festival in North India. They make the images of Gaṅapatī, every year, and make offerings to them on this particular day.

It is believed, that he who sees the moon on Vināyaka Caturthi, will be subjected to dishonour and derision. This belief is based on the following story.

Gaṅapatī is very fond of sweetmeat especially KozhukKate (globular solid sweetmeat; called Modaka). It is the custom in North India to worship Gaṅapatī by offering these sweetmeats, even today, with all kinds of festivities. On one birthday Gaṅapatī went from house to house and ate belly-ful of modakas and returned home on his conveyance, the rat. On the way the rat saw a snake and began to tremble with fear. Due to the shivering of its legs Gaṅapatī fell down. The belly of Gaṅapatī was broken due to the fall and a large quantity of modakas came out. Gaṅapatī gathered everything that fell out of his belly and stuffed them again in the stomach and joined the cut edges entwined the snake tightly round the stomach. Candra who was standing in the sky seeing all these things laughed with contempt. At this, Gaṅapatī got wild and plucked his tusk and throwing it at the moon cursed him. "Let nobody look at you on the Gaṇapati-festival day.”
(Brahmavaivarta Purāṇa). This story is slightly different according to Gaṇeśa Purāṇa. That story is, that Śrī Paramेṣvara gave a plum to his elder son Subrahmanya without the knowledge of his younger son Gaṇapati, on the 4th day of a bright lunar fortnight and the moon who smiled at it, was cursed.

VINDA I. One of the hundred sons of Dhētarāṣṭra. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Droṇa Parva, Chapter 127, Stanza 34, that Vinda was killed by Bhīmaśena in the battle of Bhārata.

VINDA II. A prince of Avantī. It is stated that this Vinda had a brother called Anuvinda. The information obtained about Vinda from Mahābhārata is given below:
(i) Sahadeva defeated this Vinda at the time of his southern regional conquest. (M.B. Sabhā Parva, Chapter 31, Stanza 10).
(ii) Vinda helped Duryodhana by fighting on his side with an aksauhini of army. (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 19, Stanza 24).
(iii) Bhīṣma once said that Vinda was a noble warrior. (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 166, Stanza 6).
(iv) Vinda was one of the ten commanders of Duryodhana in the battle of Bhārata. (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 16, Stanza 15).
(v) On the first day of the battle of Bhārata, Vinda fought with Kuntibhoja. (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 45, Stanza 72).
(vi) When Śveta, the prince of Virāṭa, surrounded Śalya, the King of Madra, Vinda helped Śalya. (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 47, Stanza 46).
(vii) Once Vinda and his brother Anuvinda together attacked Irāvān. (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 81, Stanza 27).
(viii) In the Bhārata-battle, Vinda fought with Bhīmaśena, Arjuna and Virāṭa. Vinda was killed in the fight with Arjuna. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 99, Stanza 17).

VINDA III. A prince of the kingdom of Kekaya. In the battle of Bhārata he took the side of the Kauravas and fought with Sātyaki, in which fight Sātyaki killed Vinda. (M.B. Karna Parva, Chapter 13, Stanza 6).

VINDUMĀN. A King born of the dynasty of Bhārata. He was the son of Marici and the father of Madhu. (Bhāgavata, Skanda 5).

VINDHYA. One of the seven chief mountain chains. This mountain which separates South India from North India is famous in various ways in the Purāṇas.
(i) Agasīya kicked Vindhya down. (See under Agasīya).
(ii) Sunda and Upasunda, two asuras, did penance on Vindhya and got booms. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 208, Stanza 7).
(iii) Because of the fierce penance of Sunda, the mountain Vindhya became hot and from that day onwards smoke comes out from Vindhya. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 208, Stanza 10).
(iv) The deity of Vindhya stays in the palace of Kubera serving him. (M.B. Sabhā Parva, Chapter 10, Stanza 31).
(v) On this mountain there is the eternal abode of Devī Durgā. (M.B. Virāṭa Parva, Chapter 6, Stanza 17).
(vi) Vindhya is one of the seven chief mountain chains. (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 9, Stanza 11).

(vii) In Tripuradahanā (the burning of Tripuras) Vindhya appeared behind the chariot of Śiva as the emblem on his flag. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 202, Stanza 71);
(viii) Vindhya once became the axle of the chariot of Śiva. (M.B. Karna Parva, Chapter 34, Stanza 22).
(ix) This mountain gave Subrahmanya two attendants named Ucchřiṣṇa and Atiṣṇiṣṇa. (M.B. Śalya Parva, Chapter 45, Stanza 49).
(x) Mention is made in Mahābhārata, Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 25, Stanza 49, that he who does penance on the Vindhya, for a month without killing any living creature, could obtain all attainments.

VINDHYACULIKA. A Country in ancient India. (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 9, Stanza 62).

VINDHYĀVALI. Wife of Mahābali. A son named Bāna and a daughter named Kumbhinasi were born to Bali by Vindhyāvali. (Matsya, 187, 40).

VIPĀMPĀ. An eternal Viśvadeva (Semi-god concerned with offering to Manes). Mention is made about this Viśvadeva in Mahābhārata, Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 91, Stanza 30.

VIPĀŚĀ. A Purāṇically famous river in the region of five rivers (Punjab). Viśvā is stricken with grief at the death of his son Saṅkṣi and jumped into this river with the help of a rope to commit suicide. The waves of the river united the knots of the rope and saved him. From that day onwards this river came to be known as Viņāśā. (See under Kalmāṣapāda) Other information about this river given in the Purāṇas is given below:
(i) Viņāśā stays in the palace of Varuṇa serving him. (M.B. Chapter 9, Stanza 19).
(ii) Two devils named Bāhi and Viṅka live in this river. (M.B. Karna Parva, Chapter 44, Stanza 41).
(iii) If offering to the Manes is made in this river and celibacy is observed there for three days without anger, one could get away from death and birth. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 25, Stanza 24).

VIPASCIṬI. The name of the Indra of the age of Manu Svārociṣa. (See under Manvantara).

VIPASCIṬI II. Husband of Pivari, the princess of Vidarbha. It is mentioned in Markandeya Purāṇa, that because of the sinful acts done by this man towards his wife he had to go to hell.

VIPĀṬA. A brother of Karna. Arjuna killed him in the battle of Bhārata. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 32, Stanza 62).

VIPĀṬHA. An arrow. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 138, Stanza 6, that this arrow was larger and more powerful than other arrows.

VIPRA. A King born in the family of Dhrūva. Two sons named Śiṣṭi and Bhavya were born to Dhrūva by his wife Śambhū. Suchhāya the wife of Śiṣṭi gave birth to Rūpī, Rūpūjaya, Vipra, Vṛkala and Vṛkatejas. (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Aṁa 1, Chapter 13).

VIPRACITTI.
1) General information. A Dānava (asura) born to Prajāpati Kaśyapa, by his wife Danu. Danu had given birth to thirtythree notorious asuras (demons). Vipracitti was the eldest of them. His younger brothers were Śambara etc. (M.B. Ādi Parva Chapter 65, Stanza 25).

2) Other details. (i) Śiṃhikā was the wife of Vipracitti. This Śiṃhikā was the sister of Hiranyakaśipu and Hiranyakäsa and the daughter of Kaśyapa and Diśi. (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Āmsa 1, Chapter 15).

(ii) It was this Vipracttī who took rebirth later as Jarasandha. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 67, Stanza 4).

(iii) Vipracttī stays in the palace of Varuṇa praising and glorifying him. (M.B. Sābhā Parva, Chapter 9, Stanza 12).

(iv) When Mahāvisuṇa took the form of Vāmana and began to measure the three worlds, Vipracttī with some asuras surrounded Vāmana. (M.B. Sābhā Parva, Dāksinātāya pātha, Chapter 38).

(v) In Mahābhārata, Sālya Parva, Chapter 31, Stanza 12, a statement occurs to the effect that in days of old, Mahāvisuṇa took the form of Indra and killed Vipracttī.

(vi) In the war between Devas and asuras, Vipracttī was killed by Indra. (M.B. Sānti Parva, Chapter 47, Stanza 11).

VIŚṬU. A Kṣatriya of Viṣṇu dynasty. The following information is available about him in Mahābhārata.

(i) Viśṭu was present at the Svayamvara marriage of Draupadi. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 185, Stanza 18).

(ii) He participated in the festival conducted on the mountain Raivatā. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 218, Stanza 10).

(iii) Viśṭu was a member of the group of Yādavas who took the dowry to Hastināpura in the marriage between Arjuna and Subhadra. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 220, Stanza 32).

(iv) Viśṭu stayed in the Palace of Yudhisthira. (M.B. Sābhā Parva, Chapter 4, Stanza 30).

VIŚṬU II. An ancient king in India. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Sānti Parva, Chapter 294, Stanza 20, that Viśṭu had been the emperor of the world.

VIṢṬULA I. Brother of Balabhadrarāṇa. The sons born to Vasudevā by Rohiṇī were Balabhadrarāṇa, Gada, Sāraṇa, Durdama, Viṣṭu, Dhruva and Kṛta. (Bhāgavata, Skanda 10).

VIṢṬULA II. A mountain near Girivṛja, the capital city of Magadha. Mention is made about this mountain in Mahābhārata, Sābhā Parva, Chapter 21, Stanza 2.

VIṢṬULA III. A hermit who was born in the dynasty of Bhṛgu. There is a story showing how this hermit protected the wife of his teacher from Indra while he was the disciple of the hermit Devaśārmā, in Mahābhārata, Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 40. The story is given below: Ruci, the wife of the hermit Devaśārmā, was extremely beautiful. Devaśārmā was aware of the fact that Indra had often looked at his wife with covetous eyes. He had to perform a sacrifice. But he feared that if he went away from the hermitage his wife would be carried away by Indra. At last he called his beloved disciple Viṣṭu and revealed the secret to him. The teacher told his disciple that Indra was a libertine as well as a magician and that he would appear in various forms to seduce Ruci, and asked him to protect Ruci even at the cost of his life. Then Devaśārmā left the hermitage for the sacrifice.

Viṣṭu followed the wife of his teacher, wherever she went. He feared that Indra might come even unseen by anybody. So he decided to get inside Ruci by supernatural powers of Yoga. He made Ruci to sit in front of him and stare into his eyes and through the rays of her eyes he entered inside her.

Knowing that Devaśārmā had left the hermitage, Indra came in front of Ruci. By the power of Stambhana (suppressing the use of faculties by mantra) Viṣṭu made Ruci stand motionless staring into the face of Indra. She did not give any reply to the questions of Indra. At last Indra looked into Ruci with inward eyes and saw as in a mirror Viṣṭu sitting inside her. With shame Indra left the place instantly.

When the teacher returned on completion of the sacrifice Viṣṭu told him all that had taken place. The teacher was pleased and told his disciple that he might ask for any boon.

He got the boon to be a righteous man throughout his life and left the hermitage.

It was during this period that the marriage of Prabhāvati, the sister of Ruci, took place. The marriage of Prabhāvati with Citraraṇa, the king of Anā, was settled. A messenger from Anā informed Ruci about it. Then some flowers fell from the sky near Ruci. She wore them and went to the marriage. Prabhāvati wanted to have the same flowers. Viṣṭu was sent to bring flowers of the same kind. As Viṣṭu was returning with the flowers, he saw two men turning a wheel. Each of them claimed that he had turned more than the other, and quarrelled with each other. One of them pointing at Viṣṭu, said that he who told lies would get what Viṣṭu would undergo in hell. Viṣṭu was worried at hearing this. He proceeded on his journey. He saw six men gambling. One of them pointed at Viṣṭu and said "A false gamester would get what Viṣṭu would get in hell." Being flurred by these two talks, Viṣṭu ran to his teacher to understand its meaning. He went to Campāpura and saw the teacher and asked him the meaning of what he had heard. The teacher told him, that the two who turned the wheel were day and night and the six who were engaged in gambling were the six Rūṣas (sons) and that Rūṣas and day and night are witnesses of every sinful act committed any time. Viṣṭu became aware of his sin. While he was staying inside the wife of his teacher, his genital touched her genital and face touched face. He had not told the teacher this. But the teacher said that it need not be considered a sin because the deed was done with no bad intention.

VIṢṬA I. An asura born to Prajāpati Kaśyapa by his wife Dañj. (Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 65, Stanza 33).

VIṢṬA II. One of the hundred sons of Dhṛtarāṣṭra. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 67, Stanza 103).

VIṢṬA III. A fire. This Agni was the son born to the fire named Bharadvāja by his wife Viṣṭa. This fire has other names such as Rathaprabhu, Rathadhvāna, Kumbharetas etc. It is said that along with Somadevata, this Agni also would get the second portion of Ājya (ghee offerings). It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 219, Stanza 9, that this mighty fire has a wife named Sarayū and a son named Siddhi.

VIṢṬA IV. Son of a fire called Pāñcajanya. This agni is considered one of the Vināyakas. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 220, Stanza 13).

VIṢṬA V. A king in ancient India. Mention is made in Mahābhārata, Sānti Parva, Chapter 4, Stanza 7, that this king had attended the Svayamvara marriage of the daughter of King Citrāṇa of Kalinga.

VIṢṬA VI. A king of the Puru dynasty, Bhṛhadraṇa, Kṛṣṇa, Yadu, Pratyagāra, Bala and Matsyakāla were brothers of this king, Girikā was their mother. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 278).

VIRĀ. The wife of the Agni (fire) named Bharadvāja, the son of Śaṅkya. The Agni Vīra was the son of this Vīrā. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 219, Stanza 9).

VIRĀ 11. A river of India, very famous in the Purāṇas. (Mahābhārata, Bīṣma Parva, Chapter 9, Stanza 22).

VIRĀ III. The wife of King Karandhama. She was the mother of Avikṣit. Once, when serpents began to do harm to all the living and non-living things in the world, Vīrā approached her grandson Marutta and advised him to conduct a serpent-sacrifice. Marutta began the sacrifice. The serpents were terrified and sought protection from the wife of Avikṣit. She being kind-hearted, made her husband intervene and stop the sacrifice. (Mārkandeya Purāṇa, Chapter 126).

VIRĀBĀHU I. A brother of Subrahmanyā. It is stated in Skanda Purāṇa, that this Virābāhu stood with Subrahmanyā and fought bravely.

VIRĀBĀHU III. One of the hundred sons of Dhṛtarāṣṭra. In the battle of Bhārata he fought with Uttara and Bīhma. Bīhma killed him with his club. (Mahābhārata, Bīṣma Parva, Chapter 64, Stanza 33).

VIRĀBĀHU III. A king of the country of Cedi. The daughter of Sudāmā the king of Daśārha was his wife. It was this king of Cedi who gave protection to Damayanti when she was forsaken by her husband Nala. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 69, Stanza 13).

VIRĀBHADRA. One of the guards of Śiva.
1) Origin. There are two different opinions in the Purāṇas regarding the origin of Virābhadra. There is no doubt that his birth was due to the anger of Śiva. When Śiva knew that his wife Pārvatī jumped into the fire and died at the sacrifice of Dakṣa, he struck his matted hair on the ground and from that, Virābhadra and Bhadra-kāli came into being. This is the version given in Devī Bhāgavata, Skanda 7. According to Mahābhārata, Sāntī Parva, Chapter 284, Virābhadra was born from the mouth of Śiva. From each of the hair-locks of Virābhadra, who was born from the mouth of Śiva to destroy the sacrifice of Dakṣa a fearful monster was born, all of whom, formed a group of ghosts called the Raumyas.
2) The Destruction of the sacrifice of Dakṣa. See under Dakṣa.
3) Attainment of boon. After the destruction of the sacrifice of Dakṣa, the fearful monster Virābhadra, began to exterminate the entire creation. Then Śiva appeared and pacified him and said “You shall become a planet in the sky called Aṅgara-kṣaṇa (Bodyguard) or Māṅgala (well being). Everybody will worship you. Those who thus exalt you, will get health, wealth and long life.” (Bhāgavata, Skanda 7; Vāyu Purāṇa, 101, 209; Padma Purāṇa, Śrīṇī Khaṇḍa, 24).
After the destruction of the sacrifice of Dakṣa, Virābhadra severed a portion of his radiance, and from that radiance, later Ādiśākara (Śaṅkarācarya) was born. This story occurs in Bhāvīṣya Purāṇa, Pratisarga Parva.
4) Prowess. Virābhadra was not only a follower of Śiva. He was a prominent general of the army. In the battle of the burning of Tripura and the Jalandhara fight, Virābhadra stood with Śiva and fought fiercely. (Padma Purāṇa, Pāṭāla Khaṇḍa and Uttara Khaṇḍa).
5) Protector of the Devas. Virābhadra was the destroyer of the Asuras and the protector of the Devas. Once Kaśyapa and all the other hermits and sages with him were burnt to ashes in the wild fire that occurred in the Saṅkata mountain. Instantly Virābhadra swallowed that wild fire and by the power of incantation, he brought to life from the ashes all the Rṣis (hermits) who were burnt to death.

On another occasion a serpent swallowed all the gods. Virābhadra killed the snake and rescued all the Devas. Once an asura called Pañcamaḍhra put into his mouth all the gods, the all the hermits and Bāli and Sugriva. Those who escaped from the danger stood agape being powerless to confront the Asura. At last Virābhadra attacked the asura. That great and fierce battle lasted for years. At the end Virābhadra killed the Asura and rescued all.

Because Virābhadra had thus protected the Devas and the others on three occasions, Śiva became immensely pleased with him and gave him several boons. (Padma Purāṇa, Pāṭāla Khaṇḍa, 107).

VIRĀDHĀ. A fierce Rākṣasa (giant) whom Rāma and Laksmana killed in the Daṇḍaka forest. Virādha was the rebirth of Tumburu, a Gandharva who had been cursed to become a Rākṣasa. The story about Śrī Rāma's liberating the Gandharva from the curse and sending him back to the world of Gandharvas, occurs in Vālmiki Rāmāyaṇa, Arayu Kāṇḍa, Sargas 2 to 4, as follows.

In days of old, Tumburu, a Gandharva had been serving Kubera. Once Tumburu was asked by Kubera to bring Rambhā. Tumburu failed in bringing Rambhā at the stipulated time. Kubera got angry and cursed Tumburu to become a Rākṣasa. Tumburu requested for liberation from the curse. Kubera granted his request and said “In Tretāyuga, Mahāviṣṇu will incarnate as Śrī Rāma, who with his sword will change your Rākṣasa form. You will regain your former form and will come back to the world of Gandharvas.”

Accordingly Tumburu took birth as the son of giant Jaya. This child born to Jaya by his wife Śatadhāra, grew up and came to be known by the name Virādha. Two extra-ordinarily long hands and the outward appearances of a giant aroused fear in every living creature. He lived in the forest Daṇḍaka. It was at this time that Śrī Rāma and Laksmana came with Sītā to live in this forest. As soon as Virādha saw them he ran to them with a loud cry.

“With sunken eyes and swollen stomach, widened mouth and an enormous body, with a fierce appearance, of very great height an uncouth figure, body wet with fat, clad in the hide of a leopard, looking like Yama with open mouth, with three lions, two wolves, four leopards, ten spotted deer and the head of a big tusker with tusks smeared with fat, all these caught pierced in an iron trident, and shouting in a roaring sound”, he ran to them and after taking Sītā, he began to run. Rāma and Laksmana followed him. Virādha placed Sītā down and, taking Rāma and Laksmana on each of his shoulders he began running. Rāma and Laksmana cut off each of his hands. But Virādha did not die. Rāma and Laksmana decided to bury him alive. Virādha recognized Śrī Rāma and told him his story. Instantly his demoniac form changed and he regained his original form of a Gandharva. Thus Tumburu returned to the world of Devas. (See under Tumburu).

VIRĀDHANVĀ I. A warrior of the kingdom of Trigarta. He took the side of the Kauravas in the Bhāratabattle and fought with Dḥṛṣṭadyumna, in which fight he was killed. (M.B. Drona Parva, Chapter 107, Stanza 9).

VIＲＯＣＡＮＡ I.

1) General information. An asura. He was the son of Prahlāda and the father of Mahābali. Three sons Virocana, Kumbha and Nikumbha were born to Prahlāda by his wife Dīrīti. Virocana, though an asura, performed rites and rituals carefully. He was kind towards Brahmīns. His son Bali became famous and got the name Mahābali. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 65, Stanza 19).

2) Other details.

(i) Once there was a controversy between Virocana and Sudhanvā. (See under Sudhanvā II).

(ii) During the time of emperor Prthu, when the asuras milked the earth Virocana stood as the calf. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 69, Stanza 20).

(iii) Virocana is included among the ancient Kings of prominence. (M.B. Sānti Parva, Chapter 227, Stanza 50).

(iv) There is a story about the quest for knowledge about universal and individual souls, by Indra and Virocana, in Chāndogyparāśad, as given below. Once the Devas and the asuras approached Prajāpati to learn about Brahman, the impersonal God. Prajāpati told them: “Ātman (soul) is the first tattva (Essential being) which is sinless, eternal, desireless and unimaginable in the earth.” Having heard this philosophy about the soul, the Devas selected Indra, and the asuras selected Virocana and to know the details, they sent them to Prajāpati as his disciples. Indra and Virocana stayed with Prajāpati for several years to know more about Ātman. But Prajāpati did not reveal to them the secret about Brahman. At last to test them Prajāpati said “Your reflection that you see in water or mirror is the Ātman (soul).” Virocana, who mistook what the Prajāpati said as truth immediately took his bath, put on costly dress and ornaments and stood near water and saw his reflection in water. After that, taking the reflection for soul, he spread this doctrine among his people. With this the asuras accepted body as soul. But the Devas did not recognize this philosophy. They accepted the doctrine that Ātman is that essence of Nature which is alien to body and mind and which is pure.

(v) There are two different statements about the death of Virocana in the Purāṇas.

(1) In the battle with Tārakāsura, Virocana was killed by Devendra. (M.B. Sānti Parva, Chapter 99. Brahmanda 1.20.35; Matsya: 10: 11; Padma Purāṇa, Sṛṣṭi Khanda 16).

(2) The Sun God was pleased with Virocana and had given him a crown. The sun told him that death would come only if that crown was removed from the head by some body. Because of this boon Virocana became arrogant. So Mahāvisuṣu took the form of a beautiful woman and enticed Virocana towards him and taking away the crown killed him. (Ganeśa Purāṇa 2, 29).

According to Narada Purāṇa, Mahāvisuṣu took the form of a Brahmin and reached the palace of Virocana. There changing the righteous wife of Virocana into a mad woman he killed Virocana.

(vi) Virocana had two wives called Viśālakṣaṇa and Devi. Two children, Bala and Ya’odhara were born by them. The wife of the famous Tvaṣṭā was this Yaśodhara. (Brahmanda. 3: 1: 86; Narada Purāṇa 2: 32: Bhāgavata, Skandha 9).

(vii) Virocana had five brothers named Kumbha, Nikumbha, Āyusmān, Sibi and Bāskali and a sister named Virocana. (Vāyu Purāṇa, 84, 19).

VIROCANA II. A son of Dhrtrāṣṭra. He was also called Durvirocana. This Virocana was present at the Svayānivara marriage of Draupadī. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 183, Stanza 2).

VIROGAKSHA II. A Rākṣasa (giant) who fought on the side of Rāvaṇa against Śrī Rāma and Lāṅkāmaṇa. It is mentioned in Uttara Rāmāyana that this giant was born to Mālyāvān by a Gandharva damsel called Sundari. Seven sons named Vajramuṣṭi, Virūpākṣa, Durmuṣṭi, Suptaghna, Yaṭjaṅkaṣa, Matta and Unmatta and a daughter named Nālā were born to Mālyāvān by Sundari.

All these sons held prominent places in the army of Rāvaṇa. It is mentioned in Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 10, that in the battle between Rāma and Rāvaṇa, when Kumbhakarna was killed, the army was commanded by Kumbha, Nikumbha, Makarākṣa, Mahodara, Mahāpārśva, Matta, Unmatta, Praghasa, Bhāsakarṇa, Virūpākṣa, Devāntaka, Narāntaka, Trisūras and Atikāya. When Sugrīva devastated the army of Rāvaṇa and caused havoc among the giants, Virūpākṣa, who was an archer got on an elephant and entered the battlefield. He confronted Sugrīva first. He thwarted the stone flung at him by Sugrīva, and struck him. For a time Sugrīva found it difficult to withstand him. But in the battle which followed, Sugrīva struck Virūpākṣa down and killed him. (Vālmiki Rāmāyana, Yuddha Kanda, Sarga 97).

VIROGAKSHA III. One of the thirtythree notorious Dānavas (demons) born to Prajāpati Kāṣyapa by his wife Danu. It is stated in Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 67, Stanza 22, that it was this asura called Virūpākṣa, who had, later, taken rebirth as King Citravarmā.
An asura who was the follower of Narakasura. This Virūpākṣa was killed on the bank of the river Lohitagaṅgā. (Mahābhārata, Sābha Parva, Dākṣiṇātātāpātha, Chapter 38).

A Rakṣasa who was the friend of Ghaṭotkaca. (Mahābhārata, Drona Parva, Chapter 175, Stanza 15).

This giant named Virūpākṣa was the friend of a stork called Rājadhrāma. (Mahābhārata Śānti Parva, Chapter 170, Stanza 15). (See under Gautama V).

A King of the birds. It is stated in Brahmanda Purāṇa, that Viśīkha was one of the sons born to Garuḍa by Śuki.

An attendant of Subrahmanya. (M.B. Salya Parva, Chapter 46, Stanza 29).

An asura who ruled over the world in days of old. (M.B. Śānti Parva, Chapter 227, Stanza 53).

A hermit who was the son of hermit Viśvāka. This Viśnāpu was once lost and was found again by the help of the Āsins. This story is given in Ṛgveda, Manḍala 1, Anuvāka 17, Sūkta 116.
VIŚṆU.

1) General information. Brahmā, Viṣṇu and Mahēśvara are the Lords of creation, sustenance and extermination of this perishable universe. These trimūrtis (three figures) also are perishable. It is said that one day of Brahmā will constitute thousand four-fold (catur) yugas and that during the life of Brahmā, fourteen Indras will fall down from heaven and die. This is a Brahmā age. The ages of two Brahmās constitute the age of one Viṣṇu. At the end of the age Viṣṇu also will perish. The age of Siva is double the age of Viṣṇu. Siva also will perish at the end of his age. (Devi Bhāgavata, Skanda 5).

When everything perishes there comes the deluge (the great flood). After that, for one hundred and twenty Brahmā years the universe will be desolate and void. In that deep eternal silence, Viṣṇu will be seen sleeping on a banyan leaf on the surface of water. That is the beginning of the next great age. In this stage, Balmukunda is the name of Mahāviṣṇu. As he remains on Nāra or water he will be called Nārāyanā also.

The name Viṣṇu means he who possesses the habit of Vyaṇana (To pervade). While Viṣṇu, who has the power to spread his control over everything in whatever condition, lies on the banyan-leaf. From his navel, a lotus-stalk grows up, and on the top of the stalk, in the lotus flower, Brahmā comes into being. Brahmā does penance before Viṣṇu and extols him. Mahāviṣṇu confers on Brahmā the power of creation of the subjects. That Brahmā perishes along with the deluge and in his place another Brahmā is born. Thus in the life-time of Viṣṇu two Brahmās come into being and perish.

2) Beginning. In days of yore, when Viṣṇu was lying on the banyan leaf as Bāla Mukunda, he began to think “Who am I? Who created me? Why? What have I to perform?” - and soon an ethereal voice was heard, “I am everything. Except me, there is nothing eternal.” From behind the voice Mahādevi appeared, and said “Look Viṣṇu. What is there to wonder at? Whenever the universe is subject to creation, sustenance and extermination, you have taken origin by the glory of the Almighty. The Almighty or the omnipotence is beyond attributes. But we are all subjected to attributes. Your foremost attribute is Sattva (goodness - purity) Brahmā whose main attribute is the attribute of rajas (activity - passions), will originate from your navel. From the middle of the brows of that Brahmā, Śiva will be born, whose main attribute is Tamas (inertia darkness). Brahmā, by the power of Tapas (penance) will acquire the power of creation and build the world. You will be the sustainer of that world. Śiva will destroy the same world. I am Devī Māyā (Illusion - personified as the wife of Brahma), the great power depending on you for the purpose of creation.” After hearing these words of Devī, Viṣṇu went into meditation and deep sleep of contemplation.

3) Avatāras (Incarnations). When injustice and lawlessness abound in the universe, Viṣṇu will incarnate in the world in various forms and shapes, and will drive away injustice and will reinstate righteousness. The basis and the indelible semen virile of all the incarnations, is this spirit of the universe. All Devas, all human beings and all animals are created from a portion of this soul of the universe, which in itself is a portion. Brahmā, first incarnated as Sanatkumāra and lived the life of a Brahmīn student of chaste abstinence. The second incarnation was connected with the creation of the earth. It was the incarnation as a hog to redeem the earth which was immersed in the world of Kāsātāla. The third incarnation was taken to create the sages and hermits. The Supreme God incarnated as the deva - hermit, Nārada and taught Pañcarātra, the Viṣṇavāśistā explaining the ways of observing Karman. Fourthly, Viṣṇu took the incarnation of Nara-Nārāyanas (two hermits) and performed tapas (penance) difficult to do. The fifth incarnation was that of Kapila who taught his disciple Asuri, a Brahmin, Sāṅkhya (one of the six systems of Indian philosophy dealing with evolution). The next incarnation was taken, according to the request of Atri, as his son under the name Dattātreya. Seventhly he took incarnation as Vajrā, the son born to Prajāpatī Ruci, by his wife Ákūti with the groups of devas (gods) such as Yāmas and others to sustain the Manvantara (age of Manu) of Svayambhula. The eighth incarnation was as the son of Bhagavān Nābhi by his wife Meru, and the ninth was, as the inner soul of Prithu, according to the request of the sages and hermits, with a view to change the earth to such a state that medicinal herbs may grow in plenty everywhere. The tenth was, as Matsya (Fish) in Gātṛa Manvantara deluge; the eleventh, as turtle, to lift up the mountain Mandara; the twelfth as Dhanvantari, and the thirteenth was as Mohini (Charming woman). The fourteenth was that of Man-lion, the fifteenth was that of Vāmana, the sixteenth that of Paraśurāma, the seventeenth, that of Vyāsa, the eighteenth, that of Śrī Rāma and the nineteenth was that of Rāma and the twentieth that of Kṛṣṇa in the dynasty of Vṛṣṇi. The twenty first was as Buddha in the beginning of the age of Kali. The twenty second incarnation was in the name of Kalki as the son of the Brahmin Viṣṇu-yaṣas. Each incarnation is explained in places where that word occurs. See under Avatāra.

The avatāras of Mahāviṣṇu are numerous. Thousands and thousands of incarnations originate from Mahāviṣṇu as streams flow from a lake which overflows at all times. Hermits, Manus, Devas, Sons of Manus, Prajāpati, all these are marks and portions of Mahāviṣṇu. (Vālmiki Rāmāyaṇa, Bāla Kāṇḍa, Sarga 15; Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 5; Vālmiki Rāmāyaṇa, Kiskindhā Kāṇḍa, Sarga 40; Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 83; Devī Bhāgavata, Skanda 1; M.B. Śānti Parva, Chapter 121; Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 12; Bhāgavata, Skanda 10; Bhāgavata, Skanda 5; Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 272; Vana Parva, Chapter 149; Śānti Parva, Chapter 339).

4) Family life. Vaikuṇṭha is the dwelling place of Mahāviṣṇu. Mahālakṣmi is the prominent wife. It is seen in Devī Bhāgavata, Skanda 9, that besides Lakṣmīdevī, Gaṅgā Devī and Sarasvatī also were the wives of Viṣṇu. Lakṣmīdevī has taken several incarnations. Once she took birth from Khyāti, the wife of hermit Bhrigu. At this birth Dīhātā and Vīdhātā were her brothers. On another occasion, she arose from a lotus-flower which grew away from the sea of Milk. (To know more about the wives Lakṣmī, Gaṅgā and Sarasvatī, see under Gaṅgā).

There is none to be mentioned as the legitimate son of Mahāviṣṇu. But Brahmā is the first that could be imagined as the son of Viṣṇu. Besides, Mahāviṣṇu once created a bright son, by his mind. That son was named Virajas. Sātā is another son of Mahāviṣṇu. Śiva became amorous with Mohini (fascinating woman)—the form which Mahāviṣṇu took at the time of the churning of the Sea of Milk. They led a short family life as a result of which the son Sātā was born. (See under Sātā).

5) Curses. Mahāviṣṇu had cursed and had been cursed on many an occasion. The most important of them are given below:

(i) The curse of Mahālakṣmi. Once Mahāviṣṇu looked into the face of Mahālakṣmi and laughed for no reason. Thinking that Mahāviṣṇu had been making fun of her, she cursed him saying “Let your head be severed from the body.”

At this period an Asura named Hayagrīva had done penance for a thousand years and obtained several boons. One boon was that he should be killed only by a man with the head of a horse. Hayagrīva attacked the devas (gods). Though the gods fought with Hayagrīva for many thousands of years they could not kill him. Even Viṣṇu, admitted defeat. Using the bow as a prop to his chin he stood thinking, for years. In the meanwhile white ants began to eat the string of the bow. When the string was broken, the bow straightened with a sudden jerk and the head of Mahāviṣṇu was severed from the trunk and was thrown away. Viṣvākarmā cut off the head of a horse and joined it to the trunk of Viṣṇu, who instantly rose up and killed Hayagrīva. Thus satisfying the need of the gods and making the curse of Lakṣmi come true, Viṣṇu regained his original form and returned to Vaikunṭha. (Devī Bhāgavata, Skandha 1).

(ii) The curse of Bhṛgu. The Asuras who were defeated in the war with Devas, approached Pulomā, the mother of their teacher-priest Skra, and sought protection. Pulomā, was the wife of hermit Bhṛgu. She began to do penance for the destruction of devas. Knowing this Viṣṇu aimed his weapon, the Discus, at her and killed her. Bhṛgu got angry and cursed Viṣṇu to take birth as a man and suffer the grief of separation from his wife for many years. This curse was the first cause of the incarnation of Śrī Rāma. (For details see under Bhṛgu, Para 4).

(iii) The curse of Viṣṇu. Once the handsome King Revanta, mounted on the horse Uccaiśravas and came to Vaikunṭha. Looking at the handsome youth, Lakṣṇī stood for a while enchanted by Revanta and his horse. Mahāviṣṇu was displeased at this, and cursed her to take birth on the earth as a mare. Accordingly she was born as a mare and when the duration of the curse was over returned to Vaikuṇṭha. (For details see under Ekavira).

(iv) The curse of Vṛndā. See under Māyāśīva.

6) Contests and wars. Wars are very few in the Purāṇas in which Viṣṇu had not participated directly or indirectly. As almost all of them have been dealt with in various places in this book, they are not given here. Only a few of the prominent among them are mentioned here.

(i) Madhukaiṭṭabhas. Madhu and Kaiṭṭabha are two asuras born from the ear-wax of Mahāviṣṇu. They tried to attack Brāhma and Viṣṇu killed them. (See under Kaiṭṭabha).

(ii) Killing of Andhaka. Andhaka was a notorious asura. He was the minister of Mahiṣāsura. When war broke out between asuras and Devas, Andhaka caused havoc among the devas. At last in the fight with Viṣṇu Andhaka was killed. (Devī Bhāgavata, Skandha 5).

(iii) Killing of Vṛṣṇisura. See under Viṣṇa.

(iv) Rāhu. For the story of how Viṣṇu cut into two the asura Rāhu, see under Amṛtaṃ.

(v) Contest with Brāhma. The story of Viṣṇu and Brāhma making a competitive journey to find out the crest and foot of Śiva, is given with slight variations in most of the Purāṇas. (For detailed story see under Brāhma, Para 5).

(vi) For the story of how Viṣṇu confronted the asuras Nemi, Somātī, and Māyāvān see under each of those words.

7) The weapons and ornaments of Viṣṇu. The following are the prominent ornaments and weapons of Viṣṇu.

(i) Śrīvatsa. This is a mark on the chest. It is said that this is the mark imprinted by the angry Bhṛgu who kicked on the chest of Mahāviṣṇu. (See under Bhṛgu).

(ii) Pāñcatanjaya. This is a white conch. Even by the touch of this conch man becomes wise. (For further details see under Pāñcatajaya).

(iii) The Discus Sudārśana. Vajrānātha is another name of this weapon. Viṣṇu uses this weapon to deal with fierce enemies. This is a wheel with a hole in the centre and thousand arms going out from the centre. The outer edge is sharp. This Sudārśana Cakra is operated by putting it on the first finger and turning it round, and releasing it at the enemy. Though it is terrible for the wicked and unjust, it forebodes good to good people and so it is Sudārśana (good to look at).

(iv) Kaumodakī. This is the club. The syllable “Ku” means the earth. Kumodakī means he who delights the earth. He who makes the earth delightful is Viṣṇu. As the club is the property of Kumodakī (Viṣṇu) it is called Kaumodakī.

(v) Kauṭubha. This is the jewel of Mahāviṣṇu. (Ku= the Earth. Stūbhānāti= Pervasades (spreads). Kauṭubha= ocean. Kaustubha-obtained from the sea. This jewel obtained from the sea of milk at the time of its churning, is worn by Mahāviṣṇu on his neck. This is a red Jacinth.

(vi) Nandaka. This is the sword of Viṣṇu. It is stated in Mahābhārata, Śānti Parva, Chapter 166, that this sword was obtained from Indra.

(vii) Śālaṅgī. This is the name of the bow of Viṣṇu. This is called Vaṁśavacāp (the bow of Viṣṇu) also. A description is given in Vālmiki Rāmāyaṇa, Bāla-kanda, Sarga 25, as to how this bow was obtained. It is as follows:

Once the Devas made Viṣṇu and Śiva quarrel with each other, to test their might. The fight between the two began. Viṣvākarmā gave each of them a bow. The bow of Viṣṇu was called Vaṁśavacāp; the bow of Śiva was called Saivacāp. This Vaṁśavacāp is Śālaṅgī. Due to the power of Śālaṅgī, Śiva was defeated in the fight. Getting angry Śiva gave his bow to the King Devarata of Videha. It was this bow that Śrī Rāma broke at the time of the Svaṇaśvara marriage of Śītā. After the fight, Viṣṇu gave his bow to Rākṣa. That bow changed hands from Rākṣa to Jamadagni and from him to Pāraśurāma, who presented this bow to Śrī Rāma on his return after the marriage with Śītā.

(viii) Vaiṭjayantī. This is the necklace of Viṣṇu. This necklace, made of five jewels stuck together, is known by the name Vanaṁāla, also. Viṣṇu has a charioteer named Dāruka and four horses named Saibya, Sugrīva, Meghapuṣpa and Valāhaka. Garuḍa is the conveyance of Viṣṇu. He holds conch, discus, club and lotus in each of his four hands. It is said that the discus was made by Viśvakarma with the dust of the Sun. In Viṣṇu Purāṇa particular mention is made about the ornaments of Viṣṇu.

9) The names of Viṣṇu. The names of Viṣṇu given in Amarakośa and their meanings are given below.

1) Viṣṇu. He who is spread everywhere.
2) Nārāyaṇa. (i) He who lies on water. (nāram = water). (ii) He who had adopted Nāra (human body) in incarnations. (iii) He who enters the human society (Nāra) as Jīvātmā (individual soul).
3) Kṛṣṇa. (1) of dark complexion. (2) He who does Karṣaṇa (pulling or dragging) on the agha (sin) of jagat (world).
4) Viśvakuṇṭha. (1) The son of Viṅkuṇṭha. There is an incarnation as such. (2) At the time of creation twenty-three Tattvas (essences-elements) did not join with one another. So Viṣṇu joined earth to water, ether to air and fire; Thus their individual existence was made Viṅkuṇṭha-prevented. By achieving this he became Viśvakuṇṭha. (3) Viṅkuṇṭha means wisdom (knowledge). So Viṅkuṇṭha is he who has acquired knowledge. (4) Viṅkuṇṭha means holy basil (a herb). So Viṅkuṇṭha is he who wears rosary of holy basil. (5) Kuṇṭha means Māyā—Illusion. So Viṅkuṇṭha is Māyā Maya or he who is blended with Illusion. (the female creative energy).
5) Viṣṭaравas. (1) Viṣṭa—tree—banyan tree. He who is universally known as banyan tree. (2) Viṣṭa—a bundle of darbha grass. (Poa grass). He whose earlobe is like this. (3) Viṣṭa = is spread—He whose fame is spread everywhere.

8) Keśāva (Ka-Brahmā. Iṣa-Siva). (1) The Lord of Brahmā and Siva. (2) He who has killed Keśī. (3) He who has three Keśās (heads) i.e. Brahmat-Viṣṇu-Iṣa.
9) Mādhava. (1) Dhava-husband of Mā-Lakṣmī. (2) He who is born of the dynasty of Madhu. (3) He who has killed Madhu.
10) Svabhū. He who comes into existence by himself.
11) Daityārī the enemy of Daityas (the asuras, demons).
12) Pundarikākṣa. (1) With a kāśī - (eyes) like puṇḍarikā-(lotus). (2) He who dwells in the lotus, that is the heart of devotees.
13) Govinda. (1) He who lifted up the earth assuming the form of a hog. (2) He who protects the heaven. (3) He who redeemed the Vedas.
14) Garuḍadhvaja. He whose ensign is Garuḍa (Eagle).
15) Pitāmbara. He who wears yellow silk.
16) Acyuta. He whose position has no displacement.
17) Sārīgi. He who has the bow called Sārīga.
18) Viṣvakṣena. He whose army spreads.
19) Janārdana. (1) He who destroys janana-birth (birth and death) (2) He who had destroyed the asuras called Janas.
20) Upendra. He who had become the younger brother of Indra by taking birth as Vāmana.
21) Indrāvaraja. Younger brother of Indra.
22) Cakrapāṇi. He who has cakra—the weapon Discus—in his hand.
23) Caturbhuja. He who has four hands.
24) Padmanābha. He who has lotus in his navel.
26) Vāsudeva. (1) The son of Vasudeva. (2) He who dwells in all living beings as individual soul.
27) Trivikrama. He who has measured the three worlds in three steps. (In his avatāra as Vāmana).
28) Devakinandana. The son of Devakī.
29) Saurī. Born in the dynasty of Śūrasena.
30) Śripāti. The husband of Lākṣmī.
31) Puruṣottama. The noblest of men.
32) Vanamāli. He who wears the necklace which reaches up to the leg and is called Vanamāli.
33) Balidhvarami. He who had killed the asura called Bali.
34) Karṇārā. The arāti - (enemy) of Karṇa.
35) Adhokṣaja. He who is not discernible to the organs of senses.
36) Viṣvamṛgha. He who rules over the Viṣṇa (world).
37) Kaitabhajit. He who became victorious over Kaitabha.
38) Vīdhu. Expert in all things.
39) Śrīvatsalāṇicchana. He who has the mark or scar of Śrīvatsa on his chest.
40) Purāṇapuruṣa. The earliest man.
41) Yajñāpuruṣa. He who is remembered in yāgā—sacrifices.
42) Narakāntaka. He who had killed Naraka.
43) Jalaśāyi. He who lies in water.
44) Viṣvarūpa. One who has the cosmic form.
45) Mukunda. He who gives salvation.
46) Muramardana. He who had suppressed Mura.
47) Sahasra Nāmanas. (Thousand names of Viṣṇu). The list of thousand names of Viṣṇu, is present in Padma Purāṇa, Uttarākhaṇḍa, Chapter 72. In Mahābhārata, Anuśāsanà Parva, Chapter 149, also all the thousand names are given. Variations are seen in these two lists.

11) Other details (i) Mention about Mahāviṣṇu occurs in several places in Rgveda. But more prominence is given to Indra. Though Viṣṇu is exalted in five Rgveda mantras (incantations), when compared with other gods, Viṣṇu is only a lesser god. The story of Trivikrama is hinted in Rgveda. But there is no mention about the incarnation of Vāmana or Mahābali. Rgveda gives Mahāviṣṇu only the position of a younger brother of Indra. That is why the author of Amarakośa has given Viṣṇu synonyms such as Upendra, Indrāvaraja etc.

(ii) Mahāviṣṇu was one of those who came to see Śivalīnga (Phallus) when it was detached and fell down at the curse of hermit Bhṛgu. (For details see under Viṣṇa).

(iii) Mahāviṣṇu gave Subrahmaṇya as attendants two Vidyādharas named Vardhana and Nandana. (M.B. Sālya Parva, Chapter 43, Stanza 37).

(iv) Mahāviṣṇu gave Subrahmaṇya the necklace Vajyantī. (M.B. Sālya Parva, Chapter 43, Stanza 49).

(v) It is stated in Mahābhārata, Sabhā Parva, Chapter 11, Stanza 25, that Mahāviṣṇu stays in the assembly of Brahmā.
VIŚNUCITTA

(vi) Mahāviṣṇu showed grace to Uparicara vasu. (M.B. Sānti Parva, Chapter 337, Stanza 33).
(vii) Mahāviṣṇu once took birth as the son of Aditi. From that day onwards he got the name Aditya also. (For details see under Aditi). For further details regarding Mahāviṣṇu, see under Vīraṭ puruṣa, Prakṛti, Puruṣa, Brahmaśṛṣṭi, Avatāra, Amṛta, Garuḍa, Lakṣmī, Gaṅgā etc.

VIŚNUCITTA. A noble Vaiśnavite devotee, who lived in Tamil Nadu. He lived in Villiputtur. It is said that he was the incarnation of Garuḍa. Viṣṇucitta had another name Periyálvār. Āṇḍāl who was famous among the Āḷvārs was the daughter of Viṣṇucitta.

Viṣṇucitta sang holy hymns in praise of the beloved god. The hymns of praise he sang are called Pallāṇḍu. He got the name Periyálvār or the foremost of the devotees.

Once at Villiputtur, while he was getting beds ready to plant holy basil, he was attracted by a divine infant. It seemed to Viṣṇucitta that the little girl was lying among the basil plants. He took the child home and named her Gaṇḍā. It was this Gaṇḍā who became the famous Āṇḍāl later. Legends say that the birth of Āṇḍāl was in 97 Kali Era. Scholars say that Gaṇḍā was born in the middle of 7th century. There is another story which mentions that Āṇḍāl was born from a portion of Goddess Earth.

VIŚNUDATTA. A Vaiśnavite devotee who lived in ancient days. The story of this devotee who defeated his king Cola in devotion to Viṣṇu, is given in Padma Purāṇa, Uttar Kaṇḍa, Chapter 110. The story is as follows.

In days of old there was a king named Cola in Kāñcipurā. It was because of his reign that the country got the name Cola. He had performed several sacrifices. On the banks of the river Tāmraparṇi, stood his golden Yūpās (pegs on which sacrificial animals were tied) that the place looked like Gaḷṭrātha.

Once the king went to the temple and worshipped Viṣṇu by offering flowers of gold and jewels such as chalcedony and prostrated before Viṣṇu and rose up. At that time a Brahmin named Viṣṇudāsa from his own city came there to worship, with holy basil and water as offerings. He worshipped with the leaves and flower-bunches of holy basil. Because of his worship by holy basil, the king’s worship by jewels, was dimmed. The emperor got angry and said, “Viṣṇudāsa, you are a poor man who does not know how to worship Viṣṇu. What merit has your worship of holy basil after mine of jewels?” Both began to contest on this point. At last the king said “Let us see who between us will get oneness with Viṣṇu first, you or I”.

After saying this the king went to his palace. He appointed Mudgala the high priest and began to perform a sacrifice to Viṣṇu. The sacrifice was going on with pomp and festivities. Viṣṇudāsa also was immersed in devotion to Viṣṇu to the best of his abilities. Once Viṣṇudāsa, after his usual prayer and meditation prepared rice-food. But somebody took away the cooked rice unseen by Viṣṇudāsa. Fearing that he would miss the time for his evening prayer, he did not think of cooking food again. Next day also he cooked food and went for evening prayer. On that day also the rice was stolen. This continued. One day after cooking the food, Viṣṇudāsa waited close by in a hidden corner. He saw a low-caste man who was a mere skeleton because of famine, stealing the cooked rice and feeling pity on him he said, “Stop, stop. How can you eat it without any oily thing? See, take this ghee also.” Saying so he drew near. The out-caste was terrified at this and ran away. On the way he stumbled and fell. Viṣṇudāsa ran to the spot and fanned him with his cloth. When he rose up the figure in the place of the low-caste was that of the real Śrī Nārāyaṇa with conch, discus and club held in his hands. Because of devotion Viṣṇudāsa stood be-numbed. While the King Cola and the people were looking on, Viṣṇudāsa got into the divine Viṣṇu and went to the world of Viṣṇu.

VIŚNUDATTA. Son of the Brahmin named Vasudatta. The story of Viṣṇudatta is quoted to prove that bad omens at the beginning of a journey is a warning that the journey would not be fruitful and that it would be rather dangerous.

When Viṣṇudatta became sixteen years old he decided to go to the city of Valabhi for his education. Seven Brahmin boys of his age gathered together and joined him. Deciding not to separate from each other, they started for Valabhi, without the knowledge of their parents. When they proceeded a little further they saw a bad omen. Viṣṇudatta stood undecided, but the others pressed him on and they continued their journey. Next day by evening they reached a village of forest tribes. After walking through the village they reached the house of a woman. They got her permission to stay there for the night. They all lay in a corner. Immediately all slept. Viṣṇudatta alone lay awake. When the night advanced, a man entered the house. The woman and the man talked for a while and carried on sexual sports, and they lay together and slept. A light was burning in the room. Viṣṇudatta saw everything through the cleavage of the shutters, and thought. “I am sorry that we have come to this house. He is not her husband. Sure! she is a harlot.” As he was thinking thus, foot-steps were heard in the courtyard. A young man fixed his servants in their places. Then he entered the house and saw Viṣṇudatta and his friends. The new-comer was also a forest-man. He had a sword in his hand. He was the owner of the house. Viṣṇudatta said that they were travellers. When he heard it, without saying anything he got inside and saw his wife sleeping with her lover. With the sword in his hand, he cut off the head of the lover. He did not kill the woman, who did not know that her lover was killed. The forester laid the sword down and lay in the same bed and slept. The light was burning. After a while the woman woke up, and saw her husband who had cut her lover into two. She stood up quickly and took the trunk of her lover and placed it on her shoulder and taking the head in one hand, went out and hid them in the pile of ashes. Then she returned and lay down. Viṣṇudatta had followed her stealthily and seen what she had done. He also returned and sat on the midst of his friends. She rose up and took the sword of her husband and killed him with it. Then coming out she cried aloud. “Oh dear! These travellers have killed my husband.” The servants woke up and came to the house and saw their master lying dead. They tried to attack Viṣṇudatta and his friends. Viṣṇudatta told them everything that he had seen, and showed them the head and the trunk of her lover, hidden in the ashes. When they saw this they understood everything. They tried the woman. At last she admitted the crime. They expelled her and drove her away. After this the travellers returned to their homes. (Kathāsīrīt-sāgara, Madanamaṇḍakālambaka, Taraṅga 6).

VIṣṇU DHARMĀ. A child of Garuḍa. (Mahābhārata, Udyoga Parva, Chapter 101, Stanza 13).

VIṣṇUJVARĀ. A great disease used by people to defeat their enemies. The antidote for Viṣṇujvara is Śiva-jvara. In ancient days, in the fight between Śri Kṛṣṇa and Bāṇa, Śivajvara was sent against Śri Kṛṣṇa by Bāṇa and to prevent it Śri Kṛṣṇa sent Viṣṇujvara against Bāṇa. (Bhāgavata, Skandha 10).

VIṢṆULOKA. Vaikūṇṭha. It is mentioned in Devī Bhāgavata, Skandha 7, that this world is situated on the top of Mahā Meru along with the worlds of Indra, Agni, Yama, Śiva, Brahmā etc.

VIṢṆUMATĪ. The queen of the king named Satānīka. Sahasrāṇīka was the son born to Viṣṇumati and Satānīka. (Kathāsīrīt-sāgara, Kathāmukhalambaka, Taraṅga 1).

VIṢṆU PADĀ. A place at the source of the river Gaṅgā. See under Gaṅgā.

VIṢṆU PADAṬĪRTHĀ. A holy place. It is stated in Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 83, that by bathing in this place and worshipping Vāmana, one could attain the world of Viṣṇu. This place is on the bank of the river Viṣṇu-pāśa. It is mentioned in Droṇa Parva, Chapter 8, that Arjuna, in his dream, had travelled with Śri Kṛṣṇa to the world of Śiva and had, on the way, visited this holy place.

VIṢṆU PĀṆJARA. A Mantra (spell) taught to Devī Kāṭiyāyani by Śiva. (See under Pārvatī).

VIṢṆU PĀṆJAJA. (Form of worshipping Viṣṇu). There are conventions regarding the form of worship of Viṣṇu and his satellite gods. The general form of that worship is given below:

Lakṣmī, Gaṅgā, Dhātā, Vidhātā, Yamunā, Navaniḍhis (nine treasures), Vāṣṭupuruṣa, Śakti, Kārma (turtle) Ananta (serpent) and Prthivī (Earth) are the satellites of Viṣṇu. First you must bow before Acyuta, (Viṣṇu) with all his satellites. Then worship Dharma (Virtue) Wisdom, self-renunciation, Supernatural power and Lawlessness, Ignorance, Want of Self-renunciation and want of supernatural powers, and then Bulb, Stalk, Lotus, Filmament and pericarp of the lotus and, the four Vedas, four Yugas (ages) and the three attributes, Sattva (purity) Rajas (passion) and Tamas (darkness). After this the three Maṇḍalas (regions) of Arka (the Sun) Soma (the Moon) and Vahni (fire). After this the nine powers should be worshipped. Vimala, Utkarṣaṇī, Jñāna, Kriyā, Yoga, Prahva, Satya, Kānti and Iśa are the nine powers. In the same way, Durgā, Sarasvatī, Gaṇapati and Kṣetrapāla also should be worshipped. As the next step heart, head, lock of hair, armour, eyes and the weapons should be worshipped. Then worship the conch, the Discus the club, the lotus, the mark Śrīvatsa, the Kaustubha, the Vamālā, the Earth, Guru and Garuḍa. With prayer and oblations offered to Indra, Agni, Yama, Nīrtti, Varuṇa, Vāyu, Kubera, Iśa, Ananta and Brahmā, who are the guardians of the ten directions and the weapons and conveyance and Kumuda and the others (the four mountains standing near the Mahā Meru) and Viṣvaksena (Viṣṇu) Viṣṇu-pūja will be finished. By performing this worship of Viṣṇu and his satellites, one could attain all one's wishes. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 21).

VIṢṆUPURĀṆA. One of the eighteen Purāṇas. Viṣṇu Purāṇa is the description of the activities in Varāha Kalpa (the age of Varāha—Boar). There are twenty-three thousand granthas in this Purāṇa. It is stated in Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 272, that if this book Viṣṇu Purāṇa is given as a gift along with cow and water on the full moon day of the month of Āṣāḍha, the giver would attain the city of Viṣṇu. (For further details see under Purāṇa).

VIṢṆURĀṬA. Another name of Parikṣit.

VIṢṆUSĀRMĀ. See under Sivaśārmā.

VIṢṆUVRĀṬA. A Vrata (fast or vow) taken thinking of Viṣṇu in mind. By taking this vow, one could get what one desires for.

Worship Viṣṇu, after bathing his image on the first day of the vow of four days, beginning with the second day of the bright lunar fortnight in the month of Paṣuṇa, with mustard; on the next day with gingly seeds; on the third day with Oris root and on the fourth day with all the medicinal herbs. ‘All the medicinal herbs’, means medicine such as Māṇeṭi, Oris root, Costus, Bitumen (stone juice), Saffron, Curcuma, bulb of Kacciūri, Flower of Michelia Champaca and bulb of Cyperus grass. After bathing the image as given above, Viṣṇu must be exalted on the first day by the name Kṛṣṇa, on the second day by the name Acyuta, on the third day, by the name Ananta and on the fourth day, by the name Hṛṣīkeśa. The worship should be performed by offering flower, on the feet on the first day, on the navel on the second day, on the eyes on the third day and on the head on the fourth day, and Candra should be given oblations and exalted by names such as Saṣi on the first day, Candra on the second day, Saṣāṅka on the third day and Īru on the fourth day. It is ordained in Chapter 177, of Agni Purāṇa, that the worship of Viṣṇuvrata should be conducted in this way. This is a form of worship observed by Kings, women and Devas (gods).

VIṢṆUVRDDHA. A King. He was the son of Trasa-dasyu. It is mentioned in Brahmāṇḍa Purāṇa that Viṣṇu-vṛddha who was a Kṣatriya by birth, became a Brahmīn by penance.

VIṢṆUYASAS. Another name of Kalkī. (For further details see under Kalkī).

VIṢOKA I. The charioteer of Bhīmasena. In the Bhārat battle Bhagadatta struck him and he fell unconscious. (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 95, Stanza 76).

VIṢOKA II. A prince of Kekaya. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Droṇa Parva, Chapter 82, Stanza 3, that this prince was killed by Karna in the battle of Bhārata.

VIṢOKA III. A Yādava prince born to Kṛṣṇa by Trivakrā. This prince who was the disciple of Nārada had written the book, “Sātvatatāntara”. (Bhāgavata, Skandha 10).

VIṢOKĀ I. Mention is made in Mahābhārata, Sabhā Parva, Dākṣinātyapāthā, Chapter 38, that Śri Kṛṣṇa had a wife called Viṣokā.

VIṢOKĀ II. An attendant of Subrahmanyā. (M.B. Śalya Parva, Chapter 46, Stanza 5).

VIṢRAVAS. Father of Rāvana.

1) General Information. Viṣravas was the son born to Pulastya the son of Brahmā, by his wife Hāvibreבק. The son Vaśravana was born to him by his wife Visravas. Vaisravana, is the son of Pulastya. Visravana rejected his father Pulastya and served his grandfather Brahmā. Pulastya did not like this. He generated another son Visravas from half of his body. Visravas tried to wreak vengeance on Visravana, who took refuge near Brahmā, who was much pleased at Vaisravana and granted him immortality, the state of being the owner of wealth, the position of 'lokapāla', connection with Śiva, a son named Nalakūbara, the city of Lāṅkā, the Puṣpaka Vīmāna, the lordship of the Yaksas and the title Rājarāja (King of Kings).

2) Family Life. Kubera engaged three beautiful Rākṣasas damsels, Puṣtopatā, Rākā and Mālinī to attend on Viśravas. Puṣtopatā had the name Kaikasi also. Kaikasi gave birth to Rāvana and Kumbhakarna. Khara and Śūrpyākalā were born to Rākā and Mālinī gave birth to Viśbīṣṭa. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 275, Verse 7).

Viśravāśrama. A holy place situated on the boundary of the country Ānarta. Kubera was born in this place. (Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 89, Stanza 5).

Viśukīkā. See under Brahmā, Para 12.

Viśujīdi. A nāga (serpent) born in the family of Kaśyapa. (Mahābhārata, Udyoga Parva, Chapter 103, Stanza 16).

Viṣuvat. The time, when night and day are equal, is called Viśuvat. (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Anāśa 2, Chapter 8).

Viṣva. A Kaśtriya King. It is stated in Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 67, Stanza 36, that this King was born from a portion of Mayūra, an asura.

Viṣva. A daughter of Prajāpati Dakṣa. (Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 65, Stanza 12).

Viśabhuk I. A story about the birth of five Indras, on earth, in the form of Pāṇḍavas, is given in Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 196, Stanza 29. Viśabhuk is one of them. The remaining four were, Bhūtadāhāma, Śibi, Śānti, and Tejasvī.

Viśabhuk II. The fourth son of Brahmā. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 219, Stanza 17, that it is this Viśabhuk, who sits in the stomach of all living things and digests food. This Āgni (fire) is particularly worshipped in sacrifices. The Purāṇas say that the river Gomati is the wife of this Āgni (fire).

Viśvāc. An asura. Mention is made in Rgveda, Māndala 1, Anuvāka 17, Śukta 117, that the race of this Asura was destroyed by the Āśvindēvas.

Viśvācī. A celestial maid. She is one of the prominent celestial maids such as Urvāśi and others. Once King Yayātī played with Viśvācī. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 122, Stanza 65, that Viśvācī had attended the birth festival of Arjuna and sang some songs. Her duty is to stay in the palace of Kubera and serve him. (M.B. Sābbhā Parva, Chapter 10, Stanza 11).

Viśvadāmśtra. An asura. Mention is made in Mahābhārata, Śānti Parva, Chapter 227, Stanza 52, that this asura also had been a ruler of this world.

Viśvadevas. A group of Devas. Dharmadeva married ten daughters of Dakṣa, Viṣṇu was one of them. Viśvadevas are the sons of Viṣṇu. The Sādhyas were born from Śādhiyā, the Marutvans from Marutvatī, the Vasus from Vasū, the Bhūnas from Bhānī and the Devas who boast about Muhūrtā (auspicious moment) were born from Muhūrtā. Lambā gave birth to Ghoṣa and Yāmi to Nāgāvīthī. (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Anāśa 1, Chapter 15).

Viśvāgasva I. An ancient King in India. He was the son of emperor Prthu born in the dynasty of Ikṣvāku and the father of the King Adi. By giving alms of cows, he became famous. Viśvāgasva was a pure vegetarian. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 20, Stanza 3; Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 76, Stanza 25; Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 115, Stanza 58).

Viśvāgasva II. A King born in the dynasty of Puru. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Sabhā Parva, Chapter 27, Stanza 14, that this King was defeated by Arjuna during his Northern Regional conquest.

Viśvajit I. A King of the Anga dynasty. He was the son of Jayadratha. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 277).

Viśvajit II. A King descended from Yayātī. This King was the son of Suvrata and the father of Rīpuṇjayā. (Bhāgavata, Skandha 9).

Viśvajit III. The third son of Brahmā. He has the intelligence of all the living beings in all the worlds. That is why he was given the name Viśvajit. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 219, Stanza 16).

Viśvajit IV. An asura. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Śānti Parva, Chapter 227, Stanza 53, that in days of yore, this asura had been ruling over the world and that because of his fate he had to leave this world.

Viśvaka. A hermit of the period of Rgveda. Once Viśnupū the son of this hermit was lost. The father praised the Āśvindēvas, who showed him his son as one shows a lost cow. (Rgveda, Māṇḍala 1, Anuvāka 8, Śukta 116).

Viśvakarmā. The architect of the Devas.

1) Birth. Viśvakarmā is the son of Prabhāsa, the eighth of the Eight Vasus. Varastri, the sister of Brahmā, a celibate woman who had attained Yoga-siddhi (union with the Universal Soul) and travelled all over the world was the wife of Prabhāsa. Prajāpati Viśvakarmā was born to Prabhāsa by Varastri. This Viśvakarmā was the inventor of innumerable kinds of handicrafts, the architect of the gods, maker of all kinds of ornaments, and the most famous sculptor. He was the maker of all the aerial chariots of the Devas. (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Anāśa 1, Chapter 15).

2) Children. Though mention is made about many children of Viśvakarmā in various Purāṇas, five sons and four daughters are mostly spoken of. When Mahāvīṣṇu took the incarnation of Śrī Rāma for a stipulated purpose, the devas took birth as monkeys in forests. To help Mahāvīṣṇu. Mention is made in Vālmiki Rāmāyana, Bīja Kānda, Sarga 18, that Nala a very big monkey was begotten by Viśvakarmā. The other four sons of Viśvakarmā are mentioned in Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Anāśa 1, Chapter 15. Four sons named Ajaikapit, Ahirbudhnya, Tvāṣṭā and Rudra were born to Viśvakarmā. The great hermit and sage Viśvārūpa was the son of Tvāṣṭā. Hara, Bahurūpa, Tryambaka, Aparājīta, Vṛṣākapi, Śambhu, Kapārdi, Raivata, Mrgavyādha, Śarva, and Kapālī are the eleven Rudras. They are the Īśvaras (gods) of the three worlds. It is said that in this way there are one hundred Rudras with shining radiance.

The daughters of Viśvakarmā—The four prominent daughters are Sañjñā, Citrāṅga, Surūpā and Barhiṣmatī. The Sun married Sañjñā. Sun got three children, Manu, Yama and Yami by Sañjñā. (Visnú Purāṇa, Aṇīśa 3, Chapter 2). Priyavrata, the brother of Uttānapāda, married Surūpā and Barhiṣmatī. Of these the first wife gave birth to ten sons named Agnīdhīra, Idhmājīva, Yāñjabāhu, Mahāvīra, Rukmāukra, Ghrāṭīrīṣṭā, Savana, Medhātīthi, Viṭhitrotā and Kavi and last of all a daughter named Úrjasvati. Of these Kavi, Savana and Mahāvīra became abstemious and well-versed in Brahma vidyā (theosophy). By the other wife three other sons Uttama, Tāmasa and Raivata were born to Priyavrata. These grew up to be famous and gradually became lords of Manvantaras. This Priyavrata lived with his sons and ruled over the country for eleven Arbuda ages (Arbuda=ten crores). In spite of his old age, his faculties or his body did not become weak. (Devī Bhāgavata, Skanḍha 8).

Citrāṅga was the fourth daughter of Viśvakarmā. Ghrāṭī was her mother. The young and beautiful Citrāṅga one day went to bathe in the river in the Naimiṣa forest. When she got into the water the prince Suratha, the son of King Sudeva came there. Their eyes met. Both fell in love with each other. In spite of the advice of her maids she succumbed to the desire of the King. Knowing this her angry father Viśvakarmā came to her and said, "Since you have deviated from the path of righteousness and abandoned your soul to a libertine, you will not have marriage, and hence you will not enjoy the pleasures of having a husband or child." As soon as she was cursed, the river Sarasvatī carried the prince Suratha thirteen yojanas down along with her current. Because the King was washed away by the current Citrāṅga fell down unconscious. The maids sprinkled the water from the river Sarasvatī on her face. Still she lay there as dead. Thinking that she was dead, her maids went in different ways to fetch firewood and fire. When the maids were gone, she came to herself and looked on all sides. Seeing none of her maids in the vicinity, she felt miserable and jumped into the river Sarasvatī, and the current carried her down and pushed her into the great river Gomati. Being aware of her future, the great river Gomati pushed her down and placed her in a big forest where lions, leopards, tigers etc. lived in plenty.

A Guhyaka (a section of Yaksas) who was going through the sky, saw Citrāṅga in the forest, and in reply to his enquiry she told her story to him. Guhyaka blessed her and advised her to go to the temple close by and to worship Śrīkaṇṭhēśvara, so that every thing might end well. Accordingly Citrāṅga reached Śrīkaṇṭhēśvara on the south of Kālindī, bathed in the Yamunā at noon and went to the temple and bowed before Śrīkaṇṭha Mahēśvara.

At that time the hermit Ṛtaḍhvaja, well-versed in ŚāmaAVEDa came there to bathe. The hermit called Citrāṅga and enquired about her. She told the hermit all that had happened to her. Hearing her story, the hermit became angry and cursed Viśvakarmā. “Let that Viśvakarmā who has behaved so cruelly towards his own daughter become a monkey.” Then he called Citrāṅga and said to her. “Good girl, go to the holy place called Saptagaṇḍavāra and worship Hātakaevāra Mahādeva. Devavati, the daughter of the asura Kandāramāḷi, the hermit woman Damayantī, the daughter of Ājana, a Guhyaka, and Vedavatī the daughter of Parjanya would come there. At the time when these three young women meet together at Hātakaevāra, you will unite with your husband.” Being overjoyed at the words of the hermit, Citrāṅga went to Saptagaṇḍavāra, lived there and worshipped Śiva. Ṛtaḍhvaja went on his way.

Viśvakarmā, transformed into a huge monkey, was causing havoc and devastation in the forest. Once the five-year-old son of Ṛtaḍhvaja, called Jābāli had gone to bathe in the river. The Viśvakarmā monkey chased this boy and caught him and taking him to the top of a Banyan tree, placed him close to the branches and tied him fast with creepers. After this the monkey went to Mahāmeru. As the second adventure, the monkey separated Damayantī from her father Ājana, a Guhyaka. Damayantī was born to Ājana by the celestial maid Pramlocā. Hermit Mudgala had once prophesied that this Damayantī would become the prominent wife of a King. The delighted Damayantī was once about to get into the water of the holy bath Hiraṇvatī, with her maids when the Viśvakarmā-monkey ran to the spot and the terrified Damayantī jumped into the river and was carried down by the current. She floated down and got into a forest. It was in this forest that Jābāli was tied to the banyan branches. Damayantī saw Jābāli. Each said to the other about the cruel deeds of the monkey. After that according to the advice of Jābāli, Damayantī went to the temple of Śrīkaṇṭhēśvara on the basin of the river Yamunā. After worshipping Śrīkaṇṭhēśvara, she wrote on the wall of the temple, a poem about the misfortunes of herself and Jābāli and stayed in that place engaged in worshipping god.

The next confrontation of the monkey was with Vedavatī the daughter of Parjanya. Vedavatī was born to Parjanya by a celestial woman Ghrāṭī. Once while Vedavatī was playing in the forest, the monkey saw her. He addressed her Devavatī, intentionally mispronouncing her name. She replied, “You monkey, I am not Devavatī, I am Vedavatī.” Instantly the monkey ran to her. Vedavatī quickly climbed on a hibiscus tree. The monkey kicked at the tree and broke it. Vedavatī held fast to a strong branch of the tree. The monkey took the branch and threw it on to the sea. Every movable and immovable thing in the world thought a tree was falling down from the sky. Seeing Vedavatī falling down, a Gandharva said, “Oh dear, Brahma himself had said once that this damsel would become the chief wife of Indradyumna, the famous hero, the son of Manu the great King who has completed thousand yāgas (sacrifices).”

Hearing the words of the Gandharva, Indradyumna the son of Manu, broke that branch into thousand pieces by his arrows. Though the branch was destroyed, Indradyumna could not find where Vedavatī had fallen. She floated into a part of the forest. All alone she walked on and on and reached the temple of Śrīkaṇṭhēśvara, on the bank of Yamunā. Damayantī who had reached the temple earlier and Vedavatī met each other and talked about their experiences. Thus due to the wickedness of the Viśvakarmā-monkey Jābāli the son of Ṛtaḍhvaja came to be tied, on to the banyan tree and Damayanti and Vedavati to be staying helpless in the temple of Srikanthesvara. At this time the hermit Galava reached the temple of Srikanthesvara. He saw Damayanti and Vedavati and felt pity on them. Next day Galava started for Saptagodavara to take a bath in Karthika. Damayanti and Vedavati followed the hermit. They reached Saptagodavara and dipped in Pushkara bath. Under water they saw several Virgin fishes gathered round a whale begging him for love. The whale was saying harsh words to them rejecting their request. The fish virgins again told the whale, “Don’t you see the hermit Galava going about with two beautiful damsels. If this righteous hermit does not fear slander, why should you, who live under water fear it?” The whale replied, “Galava doesn’t fear people because he is daring and blind with love.” Hearing these words of the fishes, Galava became ashamed of himself. So without coming up he stayed under water. The two girls finished bath and got on the bank, and waited for Galava. Visvakarma’s daughter Citrangada, who had reached the place earlier, met the two girls. They told each other their stories. “As Ratha had prophesied, Damayanti, the daughter of Anjana and Vedavati, the daughter of Parjanya have arrived.” Thought Citrangada. “If Devavati, daughter of the asura Kandaramali, also is come, I could unite with my husband Suratha.” Citrangada became glad. At this time Devavati, the daughter of Kandaramali, ran to the spot, being chased by the Visvakarma monkey.

The reader might remember that Damayanti had written a poem on the wall of the temple at Srikanthesvara when she had gone there at the instruction of Jahali who had been tied on to a branch of a tree. At noon on that day Ratha had gone to the temple at Srikanthesvara and happened to see the poem. Then only did he understand that his son Jahali had been tied to a tree by a monkey. By then five hundred years had elapsed. Ratha was aware of the fact that the only person capable of liberating Jahali, was Sakuni the son of Ikshaku. Ratha reached Ayodhya instantly and told Ikshaku. “Oh, mighty King I hear me, please! A monkey has made my virtuous and learned son Jahali, a captive and bound him on a tree, within the boundary of your kingdom. Nobody in the world except your son Sakuni will be capable of rescuing him.” Sakuni accompanied Ratha to the forest. They saw the tall huge banyan tree with bulky roots hanging on all sides and on the top of the tree, on a lofty place, the son of Ratha entangled and entwined by creepers. Seeing the network of creepers around the body of the hermit’s son, Sakuni began to send arrows one after another and cut off all the creeper’s knots. Ratha climbed up the tree. Seeing his father, Jahali bowed his head to his father. Ratha was not capable of extiricating his son. The prince put down his bow and arrow and tried to untie the knots of the creepers that held his body to the branch. Though a sturdy man he could not do it. At last they cut the branch close to his body and got Jahali down. A piece of the branch was stuck to his back. Thus with his son Jahali bearing a piece of lumber on his back and Sakuni bearing bow and arrows, Ratha came to Kalinga.

Ratha, Sakuni and Jahali wandered about for years in search of Damayanti and the others. After nearly a hundred years, with despair Jahali bearing the lumber on his back, went with his father to Kosala. The king of that country was Indradyumna, the son of Manu. He welcomed the hermit with hospitality. Ratha, talked about Damayanti. Indradyumna claimed that he had once saved a young woman by his arrows from the branch of a tree. They all started in search of the girls. They reached Badaryarama, where they saw a young hermit. From the conversation it was revealed that the young hermit was Suratha. When he learned everything he stopped penance and accompanied them. Under the leadership of Ratha, they reached Saptagodavara and saw Citrangada.

In the meanwhile Ghrataci, sad and miserable, was wandering over the mountain of the rising sun, searching for her lost daughter Citrangada. She met the cursed monkey form of Visvakarma and asked it, “Oh! monkey! Have you seen a girl?” The monkey told her every thing that took place. Ghrataci also reached Saptagodavara. The monkey followed close behind her. As soon as Jahali saw the monkey he got angry and jumped forward to wreak vengeance. Ratha checked his son and told him the history of Visvakarma. The monkey separated the piece of the branch from the back of Jahali, who had been bearing it on his back for the last thousand years. Ratha was immensely pleased at this and asked the monkey what boon he wanted. The monkey said, “Brahman, if you wish to give me a boon, please recall your curse. Great hermit I am Visvakarma the father of Citrangada. I became a monkey because of your curse. Let all the sins I have incurred because of the mischief of a monkey, be remitted.” Hearing this Ratha said, “Your curse will end when you get a strong and sturdy son by Ghrataci.”

Hearing this Ghrataci rose up in the sky. The monkey also jumped up and followed her. The monkey was attracted by the beauty of Ghrataci. Later, on the mountain named Kolabala, the monkey enticed Ghrataci and wooed her. She consented and they lived thus for a long time. Then they went to the Vindhy mountain. On the bank of the Godavari, a sturdy son was born to them. This son was the strong sturdy huge monkey Nala, who helped Sri Rama.

On the birth of a son Visvakarma regained his former form. He returned to Saptagodavara with Ghrataci. Galava also came there. With the hermit Galava at the head, the priests made burnt offerings and began the performance of the marriage ceremony. The Gandharvas sang and the celestial maidens danced. The first marriage was between Devavati, the daughter of Kandaramali and Jahali. Then Indradyumna married Vedavati. Next, Sakuni married Damayanti, the daughter of Anjana, and lastly Suratha married Citrangada. (Vaman Purana, Chapters 63 and 64).

3) Other details.
(i) Visvakarma shines in the assembly of Indra, in the form of a hermit. (M.B. Sabha Parva, Chapter 7, Stanza 14).
(ii) The palace of Yama was built by Visvakarma. (M.B. Sabha Parva, Chapter 8, Stanza 34).
(iii) Visvakarma lived in water and built the palace of Varuna. (M.B. Sabha Parva, Chapter 9, Stanza 2).
(iv) Visvakarma stays in the palace of Brahmad and serves him. (M.B. Sabha Parva, Chapter 11, Stanza 31).
(v) Viśvakarmā once performed a sacrifice in Brahma-vana. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 114, Stanza 17).

(vi) The aerial chariot Pusppaka was made by Viśvakarmā. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 161, Stanza 37).

(vii) It was with an illusive ensign, made by Viśvakarmā, flying in front of the chariot that Arjuna fought against the Kauravas at Viśrāta. (M.B. Viśrāta Parva, Chapter 46, Stanza 3).

(viii) Once Viśvakarmā quarreled with Indra and created the son Viśvarūpa with three heads. (See under Viśvarūpa).

(ix) Viśvakarmā made the bow called Vijaya and gave it to Indra. (M.B. Karna Parva, Chapter 31, Stanza 42).

(x) During the burning of Tripura, Viśvakarmā made a divine chariot and gave it to Śiva. (M.B. Karna Parva, Chapter 34, Stanza 16).

(xi) To the reception and feast given by Bharadvāja to Bharata, who was going to the forest in search of Śrī Rāma who had gone to live in the forest, Viśvakarmā and Tvāstṛ were also invited. (Vālmiki Rāmāyana, Ayodhyākanda, Sarga 91).

(xii) Viśvakarmā once cut the face of a horse and attached it to the headless body of Mahāviśūḍu. That figure was given the name Hayagrīva. It was this Hayagrīva figure of Mahāviśūḍu, which killed the asura Hayagrīva. (See under Hayagrīva).

(xiii) Viśvakarmā should be dedicated in temples in the form of wearing Aksūṣṭa. (Āgni Purāṇa, Chapter 51).

(xiv) It is stated in Kathāśaritāśgara, Madanamaheu-kālambaka Taranāga 8, that Mayā, the architect of the asuras, was the son of Viśvakarmā.

(xv) Lankā was built by Viśvakarmā. (Uttara Rāmāyana).

(xvi) Viśvakarmā once made a heaven for hermit Ātreya. (See under Ātreya).

(xvii) Tilottamā was made by Viśvakarmā. (See under Tilottamā).

(xviii) Viśvakarmā once turned the sun in his turning machine. (See under Śarīrāṅga).

VIŚVAKRT. An eternal god (Viśvadeva) concerned with offerings to the Manes. (M.B. Anuśāna Parva, Chapter 91, Stanza 36).

VIŚVAKSEN A. An ancient hermit. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Sabhā Parva, Dāśāṅgavapāṭha, Chapter 7, that he shines in the palace of Indra.

VIŚVAKSEN A. A synonym of Viśnu.

VIŚVĀMITRA. A royal hermit of immense attainments.

2) Birth. Six beautiful daughters were born to Kuśaṇāḥ the son of King Kuśa. The hermit Brahmadatta married them. After this a son named Gāḍhī was born to Kuśaṇāḥ. Two children named Satyavatī and Viśvāmitra were born to Gāḍhī. Satyavatī was married to Rṣi; As he was born in the family of the famous king Kuśa, Viśvāmitra got the name Kauśika also. His kingdom was Kān̄yakubja. (Vālmiki Rāmāyana, Bāla Kāṇḍa, Sarga 34).

3) Becoming a hermit. Viśvāmitra and Vasīṣṭha were two hermits who were hostile to each other throughout their lives. A quarrel with Vasīṣṭha, persuaded Viśvāmitra to become a hermit. (Vālmiki Rāmāyana, Bāla Kāṇḍa, Sarga 51).

The hermit Vasīṣṭha erected his hermitage and did penance in the country of Viśvāmitra. Once, while engaged in hunting Viśvāmitra saw Nandini in the hermitage of Vasīṣṭha, and wanted to have her. In the battle which ensued between Vasīṣṭha and Viśvāmitra, the hermit Vasīṣṭha came out victorious. The ashamed Viśvāmitra gave up his kingdom and went to forest to do penance. Viśvāmitra became a royal hermit of great attainments. There were constant confrontations between the Kāraṇṭi and the Brahmās (King-hermit and Brahmin-hermit). (For the detailed story of the quarrels between Viśvāmitra and Vasīṣṭha see under Vasīṣṭha, para 2).

4) Viśvāmitra and Hariścandra. The histories of Viśvāmitra, Vasīṣṭha and Hariścandra are intertwined as a triple string. Viśvāmitra made Hariścandra, the most renowned of the men of veracity, go begging.

Hariścandra and Viśvāmitra. Their history begins from King Trisāṇkū of the Solar dynasty. Formerly the name of Trisāṇkū was Satyavrata. Aruna was the father of Satyavrata. When Aruna was reigning the prince Satyavrata was leading a wicked life. He once entered the wedding hall of a Brahmin and carried away the bride by force. When the king knew this, he expelled the prince from the palace. Vasīṣṭha, as the family priest, was behind the cruelty on the part of the king towards his son. It was because of this that Viśvāmitra crossed the path of Satyavrata.

Satyavrata went to the forest and lived like a low-caste man. King Aruna repented his rashness. Entrusting his kingdom to Vasīṣṭha, Aruna went to the forest to do penance. For twelve years there was no rain in the country. Famine broke out. Viśvāmitra’s wife and three children were in great difficulty. The hermit had been engaged in penance. So the wife of the hermit decided to sell the middle son for the sake of maintaining the rest and started for the market with her children. On the way Satyavrata met them and learned the whole story. He told her not to sell the child. He agreed to give them food till the arrival of Viśvāmitra. The agreement was that he would tie the meat, obtained by hunting, to a tree outside the hermitage, every day. Satyavrata carried out the promise. One day he did not get anything from hunting. He caught hold of Vasiṣṭha’s cow which had been grazing in the forest and killed it and gave its flesh to the family of Viśvāmitra. On coming to know this Vasiṣṭha cursed him and changed his form into that of a canḍāla (low-caste). Moreover, as he had incurred three sins such as stealing of a bride, anger of father and cow-slaughter, he came to be called Trisāṇkū from that day onwards. Weighed down by these sins, he tried to commit suicide. Devi appeared before him and gave him back his original form and his kingdom.

After the death of Aruna, Trisāṇkū assumed the reign. Hariścandra was his son. After giving the country to his son, Trisāṇkū requested Vasiṣṭha to perform the sacrifice to send him to heaven bodily. Vasiṣṭha said that it was impossible for him. Vasiṣṭha’s enemy Viśvāmitra took up the task. He lifted Trisāṇkū bodily, up to heaven. But he was denied admittance in heaven and so Viśvāmitra created an artificial heaven between the earth and heaven and made Trisāṇkū stay there. Viśvāmitra was keeping up hostile attitude towards the kings of the Solar dynasty. In reality it was not the hostility towards the Solar dynasty, but it was his enmity against Vasiṣṭha. Viśvāmitra did not like Vasiṣṭha's being the family-priest of the kings of the Solar dynasty. So Viśvāmitra kept up an attitude of antipathy towards them. This is the background of the quarrel between Hariścandra and Viśvāmitra.

Hariścandra took Candramati, the daughter of Śibi, as his first wife. Besides her, he had ninety-nine wives. But they had no children. At last according to the advice of Vasiṣṭha he went to the basin of the Ganges and did penance before Varuṇa. Viśvāmitra did not like this. Varuṇa appeared and said that Hariścandra would get a son. The king had promised that he would give his son as a sacrificial animal to Varuṇa. Candramati became pregnant and delivered a son. He was named Rohitāśava. Even after the lapse of a month, the son was not given to Varuṇa. On several occasions Varuṇa demanded the child; and Hariścandra would give some excuses. Finally the king agreed to hand him over to Varuṇa at the age of eleven after his Upanayana (investiture with the Brahma string). The boy completed his tenth year. Preparations were being made in the palace, for Upanayana, when Varuṇa arrived. The prince, who was aware of the fact that his father would sacrifice him after his Upanayana, ran away from the palace at night. Varuṇa asked the king to hand over the boy to him. The king was in great perplexity. Varuṇa cursed the king that he would catch the disease called Jalodara (dropsy). Thus the king became a sick man. Rohitāśava heard from travellers that his father was ill. On many occasions he wanted to return to the palace. But Indra appeared before him in the form of a Brahmin and dissuaded him from going to the palace.

Hariścandra called Vasiṣṭha and asked him to suggest a remedy for this woe and misery. Vasiṣṭha advised him to fulfil somehow or other, the promise made to Varuṇa. The hermit continued, "Sons are of ten types. A son bought for price also is included in this. So it is enough if a son is bought for price and is sacrificed. Some Brahmin may be found, who will be willing to sell his son. If you please Varuṇa thus, you will be cured."

The King was delighted to hear this. He instructed his minister to find out any Brahmin who was willing to sell his son. A greedy Brahmin was found out. His name was Ajigarta. He had three sons. He was prepared to sell the second son, Sunaśēpha. The minister agreed to give him hundred cows in return.

Up to this time Viśvāmitra had been waging only a shadow war against the Kings of the Solar dynasty. From this moment he entered the scene of war. The minister bought Sunaśēpha and brought him to the palace. Viśvāmitra also arrived at the palace. He sympathised with Sunaśēpha who was crying pitably. He asked the King to release the boy, and gave a warning that if the boy was not set free, the sacrifice would be obstructed. The King said that he was doing so to get recovery from illness, that he would give Viśvāmitra a good deal of wealth, and requested him not to cause any hindrance to the sacrifice. These words and the misery of the boy kindled the anger of Viśvāmitra. He called Sunaśēpha and taught him Varuṇamantra (spell) and told him to repeat the mantra when he was lying on the slaughter-stone and that he would escape death. Sunaśēpha did as he was told. Varuṇa became pleased with him and appearing before the King said, "Leave Sunaśēpha and perform the sacrifice. You will get recovery." Saying so Varuṇa disappeared. Immediately the King was cured of his disease. At the order of the King Sunaśēpha was set free. The sound 'Jaya Jaya' (victory) reverberated in the sacrificial hall. Sunaśēpha got up and asked, "Oh great men. Who is my father now?" Some said that it was Ajigarta. Some others argued that it was Hariścandra. Some said that it was Varuṇa. At this time Vasiṣṭha stood up and said, "Oh, great men, please stop arguing. I shall give reply in accordance with the convention of Vedas. When he bargained on the price of his son and received the cost Ajigarta lost his paternity. Thenceforward Hariścandra who bought the boy became his father. From the moment he had issued orders to bind the boy and place him on the slaughter-stone, he also had lost his paternity. The claim of Varuṇa to his paternity, because the boy had been saved from death by him, does not hold good. Any god will be pleased, when praised and glorified with great laudatory mantras and will confer upon the suppliant wealth, life, cow, land, salvation etc. There is nothing unusual in this. But it was Viśvāmitra who taught him the Varuṇa-spell in his pitiable and dangerous situation. So Viśvāmitra alone has claim to the boy's paternity.

Those who were present, accepted this decision. Immediately Viśvāmitra took Sunaśēpha with him and went to his hermitage. Hearing about the recovery of the King, Rohitāśava returned to the palace from the forest. Hariścandra received him with tears of joy. The King, with his wife and son led a happy life and ruled over his subjects with justice and truth. At this time, Hariścandra (of Kakūṭa's family) accepting Vasiṣṭha as the main priest performed the famous sacrifice of Rājasūya (Royal) consecration with ceremonies and festivities. With this the fame of Hariścandra spread far and wide.

At this point begins the next stage of confrontation between Viśvāmitra and Hariścandra. Vasiṣṭha once reached heaven. Viśvāmitra also reached there at the same time. The devas greeted both honourably. But Viśvāmitra saw that Vasiṣṭha was shown some partiality. This was unpalatable to Viśvāmitra, who asked Vasiṣṭha, "What excellence have you, more than I?" Vasiṣṭha replied, "Have you not heard about Hariścandra, the King of the Solar dynasty? It is the noblest dynasty in the world. The family-priesthood of this dynasty also is laudable. My disciple Hariścandra of that royal family has recently performed the sacrifice of Rājasūya. I was the Supreme priest of the function. This is a covetable position not attainable to many. Moreover, there is none in the world, more truthful, firm of character, more charitable and more liberal than Hariścandra. This is a fact."

Viśvāmitra got up angrily and argued that Hariścandra was not truthful. He staked all the fruits of his penance to prove this. From that day onwards Viśvāmitra began to make moves to instigate Hariścandra to deviate from the path of truth.

Once Hariścandra, while he was hunting, met a lonely woman in the forest. She was moaning. The King asked why she was lamenting. She replied, "Oh King. I am Siddhirūpini (a goddess who helps people to attain anything). Visvamitra is doing penance to possess me. I request you to protect me." The King promised her to see that she was not subjected to the molestation of Visvamitra any longer. After that Hariscandra went to the hermitage of Visvamitra and made an enquiry. He then asked the hermit to stop penance, as his severe, intense, penance was harmful to many people in the country. The King returned to the palace. Visvamitra got angry and stood up. Up to this time only a cold war existed between them. Hostility became open now. Visvamitra began to make moves against Hariscandra quickly. He changed a fierce asura into a hog and sent it to the garden of Hariscandra. The hog destroyed the garden. All the attempts made by the guards to drive the hog away ended in failure. They informed the King. The King mounted on a horse and with weapons started for the garden. Without paying any heed to the arrows of the King, the hog ran away. The King began to chase it. The hog seemed to be near. Then it was away, then in front of the King and suddenly it appeared behind him. Then it would disappear instantly. In this manner the hog played around the King. After a while, the King was separated from his army and was entrapped, all alone, in a thick forest. He did not find any way out. He loss his way in the forest. As he was thus walking slowly, he saw a stream of pure water in front of him. Both the King and the horse drank from the stream. As he was standing thus without knowing the way to return home, Visvamitra went to him in the guise of an old Brahmin. The King honoured the old man, and told him that he was Hariscandra, the King of Ayodhya, and that by chasing a hog which destroyed his garden, he had reached the forest. He continued telling the old Brahmin who had helped him. "You might have heard that Hariscandra, the King of Ayodhya, had performed the sacrifice Rājasūya. I am that same King. It is my vow to give anybody what he asks for. If you want money or anything for sacrifice or for any other purpose, just come to Ayodhya. I will give you whatever you want." The old man was pleased. He told the King that the jungle-stream flowed through a holy place and that it would be better to offer the gift after taking a bath in the river. The King purified himself by bathing in the river and then said, "Sir, I am ready to offer gifts. State your needs. It is my vow to give what is requested. At the time of the Rājasūya I acted so towards all of you and took a vow that I would do so in future also. I am glad because I have met you on the bank of this holy stream. So tell me quickly what you want." Brahmin:-"Oh King. I have heard about your fame. Moreover there is nobody in the world equal to Hariscandra, born of the Solar dynasty, the son of Triśūkika in liberality. Such is the opinion of hermit Vasistha. There is nothing more to know about you, oh, King, who is such a man of liberality. I have only one desire. The marriage of my son is being conducted. I do not possess enough money for the marriage. I want only a help for the same." The King thought it to be a very simple request, and promised to give the required amount. Visvamitra by illusion customary to Gandharvas created a young man and a young woman, and showed them to the King saying that they were his son and daughter. Then the Brahmin who was delighted by the promise, showed the King the way to the palace. After making all arrangements for the marriage, Visvamitra approached King Hariscandra. The King asked him what amount he required. "Give me your kingdom with all the elephants, horses, chariots, jewels and wealth in it", said Visvamitra. The King who had been led to this deception by Visvamitra, having no go, agreed. Thus Visvamitra obtained the kingdom and everything that Hariscandra possessed. It is conventional that whenever a gift is given to Brahmans, a daksinā (monetary gift) also should be given along with it. Otherwise the gift will be futile. The King asked the Brahmin what he wanted as daksinā. He demanded two and a half Bhāras of gold as daksinā. The King agreed to give that also. But where to get this amount from, since he had lost his kingdom and everything? Having sunk deep in misery due to the deceit of Visvamitra, the King sat on the soil, cursing his fate. Seeing this, the queen ran to him and cried. While he was telling his wife every thing, Visvamitra came there and said: Visvamitra:-"Hariscandra! According to the gift hand over your country and everything instantly. I must have the daksinā of two and a half Bhāras of gold also just now." Hariscandra:-"Sir! According to my promise receive everything now. We are leaving the country instantly. But since I have given you everything that I had, how can I give you daksinā? Everything I had, has become yours. The amount for daksinā has yet to be procured. So receive the gift now. The daksinā shall be given as early as possible." After giving everything to the hermit, the King left the country with only the cloth he had been wearing. His wife and child followed him. The hermit also followed the King compelling him to give him the daksinā. The King told him that only after paying this debt would he eat any food, and that he would pay the amount within a month. Visvamitra, unwillingly agreed to this. With his wife Candramati and his young son, Hariscandra reached Kāśī. After a month Visvamitra came to Kāśī for the amount of daksinā. Finding no go, Candramati said to her husband. "My Lord! I sell me to some one and clear off this debt." The King with tears agreed to this proposal. Because of their woes and misery, both fell on the ground and fainted. The child sat near them hungry and crying. Visvamitra stood near them compelling them to pay the amount. When Hariscandra came to himself, he sold his beloved wife to a Brahmin in the village close by. The Brahmin who bought Candramati was Visvamitra. Hariscandra was not aware of this. After counting out a crore of gold pieces in a cloth and placing it on the ground Visvamitra caught hold of Candramati by her hair and dragged her away. He bought the crying child also paying its price. The Brahmin led the mother and the child, beating and dragging them along, like animals. They disappeared from the sight of the King. Visvamitra again came before Hariscandra and asked for the money. Hariscandra gave Visvamitra, all the money he got. The hermit was not satisfied. Visvamitra said that the money given, was not an adequate amount as daksinā when the importance of the great sacrifice Rājasūya was considered and that if he was to get the full benefit of the sacrifice he had to satisfy him by giving him the requisite amount. The King accepted everything the hermit said without any objection. Visvāmitra compelled him for payment. The King requested for time. Visvāmitra allowed time till sunset that day.

As soon as Visvāmitra had gone Hariścandra walked on with bent head, calling out, “Does anybody want me? Will anybody buy me for price?” Instantly Yamadharma came there as an outcaste and bought Hariścandra. The name of the outcaste was Pravira. He bought Hariścandra to guard the funeral ground and to collect tax on dead bodies. Visvāmitra quickly ran to the place. The outcaste gave Visvāmitra ten yojanas of land which yielded jewels, in the region of Prayāga and severed his connection. Visvāmitra went on his way. The outcaste King took Hariścandra to the funeral ground. Day and night Hariścandra had to guard the entrance of the funeral ground.

At this juncture Hariścandra’s son died of snake bite, while he was playing with other children on the bank of the Ganges. His mother Candramati fainted and fell down, the moment she heard about it. As soon as she recovered, she lamented over the death of her son for a long time. Then she requested her master for permission to go and see the dead body of her son. But she was not given permission. She repeatedly pleaded crying all the while. Then the Brahmin, her master, got angry and said, “You slave! If your son it dead, let him be dead. Is it any loss to you? It is my money that is lost. You go and do your work. If not I will operate this whip well on you. Remember that. You know the biting pain of this whip. Stop wailing and lamenting.”

Candramati persisted in her request to allow her to go and see the dead body of her son. Not only did he refuse to allow her to see the dead body of her son, but also beat her. With tears she turned to her duties. It was night. The Brahmin took his meals and lay down to sleep. Candramati was sitting at his feet massaging his legs. When it was nearly midnight that stone-hearted old Brahmin said, “Now you may go. Complete the funeral and return before dawn. Your usual work in the morning should not be left undone. If so, you know the consequences.”

Hearing these words, Candramati ran to the place where the dead body of her son lay. The son lay on the grass dead and stiff, with the face and body turned blue due to poison. She saw that face in the flash of a lightning. She cried aloud. Hearing the cry, people of the neighbouring houses ran to the spot. Candramati did not give any reply to their questions. Some thought her to be a ghost. Some wanted to kill her. Some caught her by the hair. Some struck at her. At last they tied her with a rope and dragged her to the funeral place. They asked Hariścandra who was standing there, to cut her into pieces. He refused to kill a woman. The outcaste King came there and giving Hariścandra a big sword asked him again and again to cut her into pieces. Candramati and Hariścandra did not recognize each other. At last, finding it difficult to disobey his master, Hariścandra raised the sword to cut her.

Then Candramati shouted, “You outcaste, why my son is lying dead on the bank of the Ganges near this town. Let me bring his body and cremate it. Allow me this much time. After that I will come and sit here to be cut into pieces by you.” Hariścandra agreed to it. Crying all the way Candramati went to the bank of the Ganges and brought the dead body of her son to the cremation place. Seeing her pitiable condition Hariścandra went close to the dead body and removing the shroud looked at the corpse. Because of poison the body of the child was blue and ugly and as Hariścandra and Candramati had undergone so thorough a change they did not recognize each other. But from her lamentation and talk, he understood that the woman was his wife Candramati. He also cried aloud. Candramati recognized her husband. Still Hariścandra said that if the child was cremated without collecting the usual fee, it would be deceiving his master. At last both of them decided to commit suicide before the night ended.

Without loss of time Hariścandra gathered half-burned fire-wood, and built a pile big enough to burn the child’s body and for them to jump into it. He laid the child on it and set fire to it. Hariścandra and Candramati stood with closed eyes ready to jump into the burning fire. Then Brahma appeared there and prevented them from jumping into the fire. Indra and the Devas showered Amṛta (Ambrosia). The child came to life and got out of the fire. The King and the queen regained their shining bodies and royal garments and ornaments. The outcaste who was the master of Hariścandra was really, Dharmadeva. All the Devas blessed Hariścandra and Visvāmitra returned the kingdom to the truthful Hariścandra. Their subjects were overjoyed at the return of their King and queen. After that Rohita was anointed as the King of Ayodhya and the Devas went with Hariścandra to heaven. (Devi Bhāgavata, Skandha 7).

VIŚVĀMITRA

this form, the hermit cursed her. "You shall retain this fearful form and live like a giantess." She requested for redemption. The hermit said that when Śrédatta, the son of Kālanemi, touched her hair she would be redeemed from the curse.

After many years Kālanemi was born in the country of Mālava as the son of a brahmin named Vajñäsena. A son named Śrédatta was born to this Kālanemi. Once Śrédatta happened to see this giantess in a forest and caught hold of her by the hair. Instantly she got her original form. (Kāthásaritságara, Kāthāmukhalambaka, Taranga 2).

12) Stealing the flesh of a dog. Once, at the end of Tretá Yuga and the beginning of Dvāpara Yuga, there was no rain for twelve years. Famine prevailed everywhere. The people were in utter want and misery. Hermits left their hermitages and wandered about. In a crowd Visvámitra lost his wife and children and entered a hermitage all alone. He entered the hut of a low-caste (Paraya) and begged for food. But none of them even talked to him. He again requested for something to eat. Nobody cared for him. The hermit fell on the veranda due to weakness.

Visvámitra saw in the hut some decayed flesh and intestines of a dog placed in a corner of the kitchen. He decided to steal some of it to appease his hunger. The Candrašás slept when the night advanced. But the lord of the house lay pretending to sleep. Visvámitra slowly entered the kitchen, and opened the pot in which the intestines of the dog were kept. The owner of the house asked, "Who is that?" Visvámitra replied that he had stolen because of his hunger. The eyes of the candala were filled with tears because of pity. He said:

"Dog is lower than jackal,
That is what men say,
Of all the parts of its body,
the lowest is its posterior."

Though he said so, he felt glad since he had given Visvámitra food. (M.B. Sánti Parva, Chapter 141).

13). Cursing the river Sarasvatī. See under Vaśiṣṭha, para 2, sub-para 5.

14) Sons. Visvámitra had many sons. Their names are given in Chapter 4, Anuśāsana Parva.

15). Visvámitra and Rgveda. Rgveda, Maṇḍala 5, was composed by the Visvámitra-family. Variations are observed in the two versions of statements about Visvámitra, occurring in Rgveda and the Purāṇas. The confrontations between Vaśiṣṭha and Visvámitra occur in Rgveda also. The last four sections of Sūkta 15 of Rgveda, Maṇḍala 3, Anuvāka 4, are meant to scold Vaśiṣṭha. Here Visvámitra curses Vaśiṣṭha's family in various ways. In the 'Annotations of Sāyana', mention is made that the disciples of Vaśiṣṭha freed Visvámitra from the vow of silence, and that instantly these mantras (chants) dawned in his mind. Though the enmity between Vaśiṣṭha and Visvámitra is seen in Rgveda, such elaborate stories as seen in the Purāṇas do not occur in Rgveda. But Visvámitra procured a prominent place in Rgveda because this hermit rescued Sudāsa from danger and forced him across rivers, and took Śunāśēpha as his son. Of these two incidents the first is not given much importance in the Purāṇas. Though the second one occurs in the Purāṇas, the version is different from that of Rgveda. From this it is presumed that the stories taken from Rgveda underwent a thorough change before they appeared in the Purāṇas.

16) Other details.

(i) The famous hermit Galava was the son and disciple of Visvámitra. (For further details see under Galava).

VIŚVĀMITRA (M). A holy place situated on the boundary of Kurukṣetra. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 83, Stanza 131, that those who bathe in this holy place will get the status of a Brāhmaṇa.

VIŚVĀMITRASRAMA. A holy place on the banks of the river Kauśikī. The hermitage of Visvámitra stood in this place. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 110, Stanza 22).

VIŚVĀNARA. A King. For a time this King was miserable as he was childless. But by the blessing of Śiva, Viśvānara got a son named Gṛhapati by his wife Śucismitā. Gṛhapati was destined to have life only up to three years. But it is mentioned in Skanda Purāṇa that VIŚVANĀTHA. A Sanskrit literary critic who lived in India in the 14th century A.D. Sāhityadarpana is the most important work of this poet of Orissa. This work on criticism in ten chapters, deals with all the aspects of a literary work. Kuvalayāśvacarita, Raghuviśāla, Prabhāvati, Candra-kalā, Narasimharājaviyāja etc. are other works of this author. Most of these are not yet found. Kuvalayāśvacarita is a poetic work in Prākṛta and Raghuviśāla is a great poetic work. Prabhāvati and Candra-kalā are dramas. Narasimharājaviyāja is a historic work.

VIŚVAPATI. The second son of the Agni (fire) called Manu. It is mentioned in the Vedas that this fire is the King of all the worlds. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 221 Stanza 17).

VIŚVARANDHI. The son of Pṛthu, a King of the Solar dynasty. He was the father of the King Candra and grandfather of Yuvanāśīva. (Devi Bhāgavata, Skandha 7).

VIŚVARUCI. A Gandharva King. At the time of emperor Pṛthu, when the Gandharvas made the earth a cow and milked her for various things, it was the Gandharva Viśvaruci who did the milking. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 69, Stanza 25).

VIŚVARŪPA I. A Rākṣasa (giant). Mention is made in Mahābhārata, Sabhā Parva, Chapter 9, Stanza 14, that this giant sits in the palace of Varuṇa glorifying him.

VIŚVARŪPA II. The son of Tvaśṭa, the son of Viśva-karma. This Viśvarūpa is also known as Trīśiras. (For further details see under Indra, Parā 7).

VIŚVARŪPA. The wife of Sage Dharma. It is stated in Vāyu Purāṇa that from sage Dharma, a daughter named Dharma-vratā was born to Viśvarūpa. VIŚVASAMBHU. A fire. Rgveda, Maṇḍala I, Anuvāka 2, Sūkta 24, states that this fire exists in water.

VIŚVAVASU I. A brother of Parasurāma, who had four brothers named Rumaṇvān, Suhotra, Vasu and Viśva-vasu. (Brahmanda Purāṇa, Chapter 58).

VIŚVAVASU II. A Gandharva King. The following information about this King is taken from the Purāṇas. (i) The father of this Devagandharva was Prajāpati Kaśyapa and his mother was Prajā. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 25, Stanza 47).

(ii) Pramadvāra was born to Viśvavasu by the celestial maid Menakā. (See under Pramadvāra).

(iii) Viśvavasu was present at the Birth-festival of Arjuna. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 122, Stanza 22).

(iv) This Viśvavasu learned from Soma, Cāksusividyā (the art of seeing all) and taught Cītraratha, a Gandharva the same art. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 169, Stanza 43).

(v) He was present at the Svayānvara (marriage) of Draupadi. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 186, Stanza 7).

(vi) Viśvavasu stays in the palace of Indra glorifying him. (M.B. Sabhā Parva, Chapter 7, Stanza 22).

(vii) It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Sabhā Parva, Chapter 10, Stanza 25, that he stays in the palace of Kubera praising him.

(viii) This Gandharva recited a poem at the sacrifice performed by Jamadagni. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 90, Stanza 18).

(ix) Kabaṇḍha, the asura, who stopped Rāma and Lakṣmana, was the changed form of Viśvāvasu by a curse (See under Kaṇḍha).

(x) It was this Viśvāvasu who played the lute in the sacrifice performed by emperor Dīlipa. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 61, Stanza 7).

(xi) Once Viśvāvasu asked hermit Vaijñāvalkya twenty-four questions. When he got satisfactory answers, the Gandharva returned to heaven. (M.B. Sānti Parva, Chapter 310, Stanza 26).

(xii) It was Viśvāvasu and some other Gandharvas who took away Urvasī from Purūravas. (See under Purūravas).

(xiii) At the time of emperor Pṛthu, when the earth was milked, the thing the Gandharvas got were those befitting them, In the course of the milking Viśvāvasu stood as the calf. (Bhāgavata, Skandha 4).

VIŚVAVEDI. A minister of King Śauri. This minister wanted the King to be just. Śauri and his four brothers, Kaniṭha, Udāvasu, Śunaya and Mahāratha were the sons of Pratāpa. The main ruler of the kingdom was Kaniṭha. The others were Governors of the East, West North and South divisions of the kingdom. The four brothers had a priest each named Suhotra, Kuśāvarta, Pramati and Vaśīṣṭha respectively. Viśvavedi gathered these four priests together and created four wicked fairies and sent them against Kaniṭha the King. The fierce fairies attacked Kaniṭha. But because of his purity and cleanliness the fairies had to admit defeat. The fairies came back and attacked their creators, the four priests and Viśvavedi who had planned the programme, and killed all the five of them. (Mārkaṇḍeya Purāṇa, Chapter 314).

VIŚVĀVU. An eternal Viśvavedva (gods concerned with offering to the Manes). (Mahābhārata, Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 91, Stanza 34).

VIṬĀ. A ball made of wood. The Kaurava boys played with this ball and by accident the Viṭā fell in a well. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 130, Stanza 17, that the teacher Droṇa recovered it from the well by shooting a number of arrows, one upon the tail of another.

VIṬAHAYA. A King of the Pūru dynasty. He was the son of the King Manasvī and father of King Śuṇḍu. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 278).

VIṬABHŪTA. An asura. Mention is made in Mahābhārata, Sabhā Parva, Chapter 9, Stanza 65, that this asura stays in the palace of Varuṇa praising and worshipping him.

VIṬĀDHVAJA. A King of the dynasty of Janaka. He was the son of Dradhvaṇḍha and the brother of Kṛta-dhvaja. Viṭadhvaja had a son named Khaṇḍikya. (Bhāgavata, Skandha 9).

VIṬADRU. A Yādava. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Sabhā Parva, Chapter 14, that Viṭadru was one of the seven Kings of the Yadu dynasty.

VIṬAHAVYA. Another name of King Ekavīra, otherwise known as Hailaya. (For further details see under Ekavīra).

VIṬALA. A part of Pātaḷa (underworld). (For details see under Pātaḷa).

VIṬANḍĀVĀDA. When arguments, which do not serve, either to establish one's own points or to cut the points of the opponent, are employed in a debate, it is called Vitanḍāvāda. (M.B. Sabhā Parva, Chapter 36, Stanza 4).
VITARKA. A son of Dāractātra of the Kuru dynasty, (M.B. Adi Parva, Chapter 91, Stanza 58).

VITASTĀ. A river famous in the Puranas. Mention is made about this river in Rgveda. Important rivers mentioned in Rgveda are, Kubhā, Śindhu, Suvāstū Vitastā, Asikni, Paradurg, Satadri, Sarasvatī and Yamunā. These rivers were more important than the Ganges in those days. Mention is made about the Ganges only once in Rgveda. Perhaps the Aryan were not acquainted with the Gagetic basin in those days. The region from the rivers Kubhā to Yamunā was Aryadeśa (the country of the Aryans). The information about this river Vitastā given in Mahābhārata is given below:—

(i) The river Vitastā is the same river as Jhelum in Kashmir. The deity (goddess) of this river stays in the palace of Varuṇa and praises him. (M.B. Sabhā Parva, Chapter 9, Stanza 19).

(ii) By worshipping the Devatās and the Manes after taking bath in this river, one could obtain the fruits of performing the sacrifice Vājapeya. In Kashmir, Taksaka the King of the Nāgas has a famous palace known as Vitasta. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 82, Stanza 39).

(iii) Once four hundred horses with black ears, owned by Brahmins were caught in the current of this river and carried away. (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 119, Stanza 8).

(iv) If anybody bades in the waves of the river Vitas-tā, with vow and fasts, for seven days he would become as pure as a hermit. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 23, Stanza 7).

(v) Once Pārvatī made a speech before Śiva on the duties of women, after receiving advice from rivers. The river Vitastā was one of the rivers which advised Pārvatī. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 146, Stanza 18).

VITATHA. Another name of hermit Dirghatamas. This Vitatha was the foster-son of Bharata. (For further details see under Bharata I and Dirghatamas).

VITATYA. Son of Vihavya, who belonged to the dynasty of Gṛtamadā. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 30, Stanza 62, that Vitatya was the father of King Satya.

VIT. A fire. It is ordained that the offering (Puroda'a) prepared for oblation, should be put in the fire formed by the blending of the fires Gārhapatya and Ahāvaniya with Daksināgni (a fire). (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 225, Stanza 23).

VITIHOTRA I. A King in ancient India. Vithotra was one of the ten sons born to Priyavrata by his wife Barhiśmati, the daughter of Visvakarma. Anidhira, Idhmaiśa, Yajñabhā, Mahāvīr, Hiranyaretas, Hīrpaśrītha, Savana, Medhātithi and Kavī were the brothers of Vithotra. (Bhāgavata, Skandha 5).

VITIHOTRA II. The husband of Sābari in her previous life. (See under Sābari).

VITIHOTRA III. The eldest of the hundred sons of Tāla-jaṅgha. When Tāla-jaṅgha was defeated by Para-ūrama, he and his men went to the Himālayas under the leadership of Vithotra and hid themselves there. They returned when Para-ūrama had gone to Mahendragiri for penance. (Brahmaṇḍa Purāṇa, Chapter 89).

VITIHOTRA IV. A Kingdom of ancient India. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Droṇa Parva, Chapter 70, Stanza 12, that all the Kṣatriyas of this country were exterminated by Parāsūrāma.

VITTADĀ. An attendant of Subrahmanya. (M.B. Śalya Parva, Chapter 46, Stanza 28).

VIVĀHA. An air (wind) which blows very speedily. This wind will be transformed to a fierce storm which will cause havoc everywhere. At the time of the great flood this Vivāha will blow away the cloud called Valīhaka in consequence of which destruction and devastation will become rampant on earth. (M.B, Śánti Parva, Chapter 328).

VIVĀHA (MARRIAGE).

1) General information. In ancient India marriage was considered to be a sacrifice performed in accordance with social customs. Marriage was allowed to those who had completed education at the age of sixteen. (Samāvar-tana). Father or teacher teaches the pupil the Vedas and Vedāṅgas. When the education is completed the teacher or father makes him sit on a seat decorated with flowers, sandalwood etc. and do Godānavrata. Then he is offered Pañcāṃtra (milk, curd, butter, honey and water). This is called Samāvar-tana. With this his brahma-carya ends, and he is allowed to marry and lead the life of a house-holder.

Marriage is a ceremony with four secondary rites Viz, Kanyādaṇa, Saḥayāga, Vivāha, Caturthi-karman. If the husband is dead, or lost, or has renounced the world, or has become a eunuch or is expelled from society, the woman is allowed to take another husband. If the husband dies, the wife should be given to the brother of the husband. If there is no brother she could accept anybody whom she likes.

2) Eight kinds of marriages. The woman and man should not be of the same Gotra (family). One could marry a girl who is above seven generations on the paternal line and above five generations on the maternal line. Eight types of marriages allowed in Manusmṛti, Chapter 3, are given below:

(i) Brāhma. A man of good qualities and good family is asked to come and receive the damsel. This is Brāhma. The radiance of this marriage will give the man prosperity.

(ii) Āśra. After getting a couple of cows from the bridegroom the bride is given to him.

(iii) Prājyapatya. The virgin is given to the man, who had requested for her hand as a duty.

(iv) Daiva. The virgin is offered to the master who is engaged in performing a sacrifice.

(v) Gāndharva. Marriage between a man and a woman with equal love on either part.

(vi) Āśra. Giving money in return for the damsel and marrying her. This type is mean.

(vii) Rākṣasa. Carrying the damsel away by fight or force.

(viii) Paśu-sa. Marrying a damsel when she is sleeping or lying unconscious.

VIVARDHANA. A King in ancient India. Mention is made in Mahābhārata, Sabhā Parva, Chapter 4, Stanza 21, that this King was a prominent member of the assembly of Yudhishthira.
VIVASVÂN I. The Sun.

1) General information. Súrya (Sun) has a large number of synonyms. But prominence is given to two of them, Mártaṇḍa and Vivasvân in the Purāṇas. Twelve devas were born to Prajapati Kaśyapa by his wife Aditi. As these twelve were the sons of Aditi they were called Ádityas. The Dwādásádityas (the twelve Ádityas) are Viṣṇu, Śakra, Aryaman, Dhātā, Tvasṭā, Pūṣā Vivasvân, Savitā, Mitra, Varuṇa, Āmû and Bhaga. These twelve Ádityas were, in the previous Manvantara (Age of Manu) of Manu Câkṣuṣa, twelve Devas called the Tûśitas. When the Câkṣuṣa Manvantara came to an end and the Vaiśvâvata Manvantara was about to begin, the twelve Tûśitas met together and after a consultation, they took birth as the sons of Aditi. In this birth they were known by the name Dwâdásádityas. (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Amśa I, Chapter 15).

2) The name Mártaṇḍa. As Aditi was pregnant, Candra went to the hermitage asking for alms. Due to her difficulties of pregnancy Aditi was not in a position to rise up instantly and greet the visitor. Candra thought that it was due to disrespect. So he cursed her. Let the child in your womb die." At this Aditi became miserable. Kaśyapa saw her crying incessantly and asked for the cause. Aditi told him all that had happened. Kaśyapa blessed her and said that the infant would not die. Thus the child which was lying dead in the womb came to life again. As the aṅgā (egg-embryo) of Vivasvân was mṛta (died) by the curse of Candra, he came to be called Mártaṇḍa (he who has aṅgā which has become mṛta). When the child was born he was given the name Vivasvân.

3) Family life. Vivasvân married Sāmijnā, the daughter of Viśvakarmā. The first child born to Vivasvân by Sāmijnā was Vaiśvâvata Manu. The Súrya (Solar) dynasty begins from this Vaiśvâvata Manu. Sāmijnā again gave birth to two children Yama and Yami. Then finding it difficult to bear the fierce brightness of the sun Sāmijnā gave her place to her maid Châyā otherwise called Sâvârṇa, and went to the house of her father. Viśvakarmā did not like this action on the part of his daughter. So Sāmijnâ took the form of a mare and went to the pastures of North Kuru. Thinking Châyā to be his wife Sâmijnâ, Vivasvân went to bed with her. She conceived and gave birth to two sons and a daughter. The sons were named Sâvârṇa and Sâni and the daughter was named Tapati. Châyā loved her own children more. The children of Sāmijnā were grieved at this. Yama once lifted his leg to kick her. “Let that leg be broken.” Châyā cursed him. The miserable Yama ran to his father and said. “Father, this mother hates us and loves Sâvârṇa and Sâni more. It is true that I lifted up my leg. But my leg did not touch mother's head. Father, I request you to pardon the wrong I have done because of my ignorance. Have pity on me and tell me how to save my leg from breaking.” Vivasvân said to Yama that his leg would not be broken, but because of the curse worms would bite his leg. Vivasvân understood that Châyā was not the real mother. He went to Viśvakarmâ. Viśvakarmâ put Vivasvân on his turning machine and by turning lesseeed his brightness. Vivasvân who was made more handsome by turning, found out his wife Sāmijnā, and approached her. But thinking him to be somebody else she moved away from him. In the meanwhile two male persons were born from the nostrils of Sāmijnâ. There is another story that these two persons were the Viśvindevas. Vivasvân and Sāmijnâ came home. As a retribution for the wrong he had done, Yama ruled over his subjects justly and earned the name Dharmarâja. (Vámana Purāṇa, Chapter 21; Bhâvishya Purāṇa, Chapter 47; Mahâbhârata, Âdi Parva, Chapter 171).

4) Some details about Vivasvân. (i) In Mahâbhârata, Vana Parva, Chapter 3, the 108 names of Vivasvân are given.

(ii) Vivasvân lived in this world and defeated all his enemies. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 315, Stanza 19).

(iii) Vivasvân performed sacrifice in strict accordance with the instructions given in the Vedas and gave as Dakṣinâ (gift) to the priest, Prajapati Kaśyapa, the southern quarter. From that day onwards the south got the name Dakṣinâdîśá. (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 109, Stanza 1).

(iv) In days of yore Mahâvîṣṇu advised Vivasvân "Anâvâratakarma-yoga". Vivasvân advised this art to his son Vaiśvâvata Manu. (M.B. Bhîṣma Parva, Chapter 28, Stanza 1).

(v) Vivasvân is included among the twentyeight Prajapatis. (M.B. Sánti Parva, Chapter 334, Stanza 36).

(vi) He learned from Mahâvîṣṇu Sâvatadharma and taught his son Vaiśvâvata Manu the same in Tretâyugâ. (M.B. Sánti Parva, Chapter 348, Stanza 50).

(vii) The Âsvinikumaras, Nâsata and Dasra, are the sons of Vivasvân. They were born through the nose of his wife Sâmijnâ. (M.B. Anusàsana Parva, Chapter 150, Stanza 17).

VIVASVÂN II. An asura. Mention is made in Mahâbhârata. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 105, Stanza 12, that this asura was killed by Gaurûḍa.

VIVASVÂN III. An eternal god concerned with offerings to the Manes. (M.B. Anusâsana Parva, Chapter 91, Stanza 31).

VIVASVÂN IV. The first human being who performed sacrifice. This Vivasvân is considered to be the father of Manu and Yama. (Ṛgveda 8. 52; 10; 14, 16). In Taittiriyasamhitâ, mention is made that people of the earth are the children of this Vivasvân. (Taittirîya Samhitâ, 8. 5. 6).

VIVIDA. An asura who was the follower of Kaîśa. It is mentioned in Bhâgavata, Skandha 10, that the asuras Pralambaka, Câñûra, Trînâvarta, Muṣṭika, Âristaka, Keśi, Dhenuka, Agha, Vivida and some others had been the followers of Kaîśa who caused havoc among the people.

VIVIKA. A king of Kuśâdvipa. He was the son of Hiranyaretas. (Bhâgavata, Skandha 5).

VIVIṢÂTA. The son of king Vîṁśa of the Solar dynasty. Vîṁśa had fifteen sons beginning with Khaînîtretâ. (M.B. Âsvamedhika Parva, Chapter 4).

VIVIṢÂTI. A son of Dhîrtaṛṣṭra. The following information about him is given in Mahâbhârata.

(i) This prince was present at the Svayamâvîra marriage of Draupadî.

(ii) He was caught hold of and bound by the Gandharvâs in Dvaitavana (a forest). (See under Ghoṣayâtra).

(iii) In the battle between the Vîrâjas and the Kauravas following the stealing of cows, this Vivîṣâti, was defeated by Arjuna. He ran away from the battle-field. (M.B. Vîrâja Parva, Chapter 61, Stanza 43).
(iv) In the battle of Bhārata, Vivīṇāśatī confronted Bhīmasena and Sutasoma and was killed. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 25, Stanza 93).

VIVINDHYA. An asura. Mention is made in Maḥābhārata Vana Parva, Ch. 16, Stanza 22, that this asura fought with Cārudeśa, the son of Rukminī and was killed.

VIVITSU. One of the hundred sons of Dhiratāra. He was killed by Bhīmasena in the battle of Bhārata. (M.B. Karṇa Parva, Chapter 31, Stanza 12).

VIYAMA. One of the three sons of the hermit Sātaśrīga. He killed Sudeva, the commander of the army of Ambaśrīga and he also was killed in a battle. (M.B. Śantī Parva, Dākṣināyita Pāṭha, Chapter 98).

VIYATI. A son of Nāhusa. (Bhāgavata, Skanda 9; Viśnū Purāṇa, Chapter 4).

VRAJA. A king born in the family of Maṇu Śvāyambhuva. He was the son of Hāvīrdhāna. Six sons named Prācīnabarhīs, Šukra, Gaya, Kṛṣṇa, Vṛja and Ajina, were born to Hāvīrdhāna by his wife Dhiṣāṇa. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 16).

VRAJANA. A king born to emperor Ājamīdaḥ by his wife Kēśīṇa. It is stated in Maḥābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 94, Stanza 31, that he was the brother of Jahnah and Rūṭīṇa.

VRAJĪRAVĀN. (VRJINAVĀN). A king of the Yadu-clan. He was the son of Kṛṣṭu and father of Kuśānmuk (Bhāgavata, Skanda 9).

VRATĀ. Controls ordained by Vedic Sāṁhitās are called Vrātas. It is known as tapas (penance) also. Vrātas are Avadama etc. When it involves mortifications of the body (tapas) it is called tapas or penance. Controlling the organs of sense is called niyama (control). Vrāta, fast and restraining or control are always good. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 175).

VRDDHAGARGYA. An ancient hermit. Mention is made in Maḥābhārata, Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 125, Stanza 77, that this hermit had conversed with the Manes about offerings made to them.

VRDDHAKANYĀ. Daughter of the hermit named Kuṇigar. (For further details see under Kuṇigar). VRDDHAKSATRA I. The father of Jayadratha, the king of Sindhu. (See under Jayadratha I).

VRDDHAKSATRA II. A king born in the Puru dynasty. He favoured the Pāṇḍavas. It is mentioned in Maḥābhārata, Droṇa Parva, Chapter 200, Stanza 73, that in the Bhārata battle, Aśvatthāma killed him.

VRDDHAKSATRA III. A king of the Vṛṣṇi dynasty. This king took the side of the Pāṇḍavas in the Bhārata battle and was killed by Bālhika. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 24, Stanza 49).

VRDDHAKŚEMA. The king of the country Trigarta. He was the father of Suśārmā. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 185, Stanza 9).

VRDDHASARMĀ. One of the five sons, born to the king Āyus by his wife Svarbhānū. The remaining four sons were Nāhusa, Rājī, Gaya and Anenas. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 75, Stanza 25).

VRDDHIKA. A kind of goblin. It is mentioned in Maḥābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 231, Stanza 16, that once the semen of Śiva fell scattered over the trees and that these gobins were born from that. Human flesh is the food of these gobins. It is said those who want children need only worship these Vṛddhikās.

VRIDHRAUNIKA PARVA. A sub-section of Vana Parva, comprising Chapters 259 to 261.

VRJA. A hermit who was born in the family of emperor Pṛthu. Antardhāna and Vāḍī were the two sons of Pṛthu. A son named Hāvīrdhāna was born to Antar-dhāna by his wife Śikhaṇḍīṇī. Dhiṣāṇa who was born in the family of Agni, became the wife of Hāvīrdhāna. Prācīnabarhīs, Šukra, Gaya, Kṛṣṇa, Vṛja and Ajina were the six sons of Hāvīrdhāna by Dhiṣāṇa. Of these, Prācīnabarhīs became a great Prajāpati. (Viśnū Purāṇa, Anśīa I, Chapter 14).

VRJINIVĀN. The son of Kṛṣṭa who was born in the family of Manu. He was the father of hermit Usāṇu (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 147, Stanza 23).

VRKĀ I. A son born to Dhiṣṭaketu, the king of Kekaya by his wife Dūrā. (Bhāgavata, Skanda 9).

VRKĀ II. A son of Śrī Kṛṣṇa. born by his wife Mitra-vindā. (Bhāgavata, Skanda 10).

VRKĀ III. An asura. This asura wanted to bring the Devas under his control. “How to achieve it? The only way is to please one of the three god-heads.” The asura saw Nārada and asked him which of these god-heads could easily be pleased. Nārada replied that it was Śiva. Vṛka resolved to please Śiva and began to do penance. He cut each of his organs and offered it in the fire as oblation. At last when Vṛkāsura was beginning to cut his head to offer it in fire, Śiva made his appearance, and asked him what his wish was. The boon he requested for, was that any one whose head he touched with his finger should die instantly. Śiva granted that boon.

The asura decided to try the boon, on the giver himself first. Terrified at this, Śiva began to run. The asura chased him. At last Śiva sought protection from Viṣṇu. Assuming the form of a boy, Mahāviṣṇu stood on the way and stopped Vṛkāsura, who was running after Śiva. The boy asked him why he was running. The asura told the boy everything. Then the boy laughed and said “Oh! Asura! What Śiva said was a lie. He has no divine power now. He was making fun of you. Not an ant would die by the touch of your fingers. You just try on your head and see for yourself.” Hearing this the asura became dejected. He thought what the boy said was true. The poor creature touched his own head with his finger. The moment he touched his head, he fell down dead. (Bhāgavata, Skanda 10). This story has similarity with that of Bhasmāsura. (See under Bhasmāsura).

VRKA IV. A king. It is stated in Maḥābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 185, Stanza 10, that this king had been present at the Svayamvara (marriage) of Draupadi. Mention is made in Maḥābhārata, Karna Parva, Chapter 25, Stanza 16, that this king was killed by a mountain king in the battle of Bhārata.

VRKA V. A warrior fought on the side of the Pāṇḍavas. He was killed by the teacher Droṇa in the battle of Bhārata. (M. B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 21, Stanza 16).

VRKA VI. An ancient king who was a pure vegetarian. (M. B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 115, Stanza 63).

VRKA VII. One of the sons born to Śūra by his wife Māriṣā. Vṛka married Dūrvākṣi. Two sons named Takṣa and Puṣkara were born to the couple. (Bhāgavata Skanda 9).

VRKĀLA. A grandson of Dhrūva who was the son of Uttānapāda. Two sons named Śiṣṭi and Bhavya were born to Dhrūva by his wife Śambhū. Succhāyā, the wife of Śiśi gave birth to five sinless sons named Ripu, Ripuñājaya, Vipra, Vṛkala and Vṛkatejas. (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Aṭhāsa 1, Chapter 13).

Vṛkatejas. A brother of Vṛkala. (See under Vṛkala).

Vṛkṣa (S). (TREES). It is stated in Vālmiki Rāmāyaṇa, Aranyaka 14, Stanza 29, as follows about the origin of Vṛkṣas (trees).

Prajāpati Kaśyapa married Analā, the daughter of Daksā. Trees yielding good fruits were given birth to by Analā.

Vṛkṣapratisthā. The ancient Indians believed that consecration of Trees and gardens (parks) were means of remission of sins and attainment of heaven. As the consecration of trees is a divine ritual it has to be performed as ordained in the Vedas. The rites are given below:

As the first item of the consecration ceremony of a tree, besmear it with all kinds of medicinal herbs, and adorn it with flour and flowergarlands and make it wear good clothes. Then make on it perforations for the ears with golden needle, and anoint ointment for eyes with golden wire. Place on the dais prepared at the foot of each tree, seven fruits and pots (Kalaśas) and make invocations. After this, offerings and sacrifices to Indra and the other gods should be given. Again invocation should be made with burnt offerings to Vānaspati. From the middle of the trees alms of cows should be given. Brahmins should bathe the trees with pots placed on the dais, reciting spells and incantations of anointment, and of Kg. Yajur and Śāma Vedas along with instrumental music. The owner of the trees should be given bathing water by himself. Then the owner should give cows, lands, ornaments and clothes as gift.

After having done so much, food with milk should be given for four days and burnt offerings should be made with gingelly etc. and butea. The gift to the priest should be double the gifts given to others. (Agni Purāṇa Chapter 70).

Vṛkṣavāsī. A Yakṣa. Mention is made in Mahābhārata, Sabhā Parva, Chapter 10, Stanza 11, that this Yakṣa lives in the palace of Kubera.

Vṛkṣāyurveda. The name Vṛkṣāyurveda is used for the conventional rules about planting trees near dwelling places. According to Vṛkṣāyurveda it is good to plant Itti (wave-leaved fig-tree) on the North side of the house. Ficus Indica (banyan) should be planted on the east. Mango tree on the south and Ficus Religiosa (banyan ) on the west of the house. Thorny trees should grow up by themselves on the south side of the house. Garden should be close to the house. Svāti, Hasta, Rohini, Śravaṇa and Mūla are considered to be good stars for planting trees. Stars good for taking trees, across river or in vehicle and to take down into ponds, are Hasta, Maghā, Aṛdra, Aśvini, Puṣyam and Jyesṭhā. The stars mentioned above are good for planting Neem tree, Joneśa Asoca, Calophyllum, Mimosasirisirha, Acacia Priyaśīgu, Syzygium, Mimusops and pomegranate tree. The distance between trees should be twenty rods. This distance is the best. Sixteen rods is medium. But it should never be less than twelve rods. If the tree does not bear fruit, the stem should be examined by cutting with a knife. Then mix powdered vermifuge seeds with ghee and smear it on the cut. Then water the tree. If fruits are destroyed before they ripen, mix the powders of horse-gram, black-gram, green-gram, barley and sesame with ghee and smear the tree and water it. Watering the tree with water and ghee will make the tree flower and yield fruits quickly. Mix powdered dung of sheep, powdered barley, sesame, and cow's flesh with water and keep it for seven days. Then water the tree with this water. This will make any tree yield more fruits and flowers. Watering the trees with fish-water will make them yield fruits more quickly. Mixture of Vermifuge seed, fish and rice is a good manure. This manure is a good remedy for all diseases of trees. (Agni Purāṇa Chapter 281).

Vṛṇḍā. I. Wife of the asura named Jalandhara. (See under Māyāśīva).

Vṛṇḍā II. See under Svarṇā.

Vṛṇḍārakā. I. One of the hundred sons of Dhṛtaraṣṭra. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 127, Stanza 33, that he was killed by Bhima-sena in the battle of Bhārata.

Vṛṇḍārakā II. A warrior who fought on the side of the Kurus against the Pāṇḍavas. Abhimanyu killed this warrior. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 47, Stanza 12).

Vṛṣa. I. A warrior of Subrahmanya. (M.B. Śalya Parva Chapter 45, Stanza 64).

Vṛṣa II. An asura (demon). He is included among those who ruled over this earth in days of old. (M.B. Śānti Parva, Chapter 227, Stanza 51).

Vṛṣa III. A King of the family of Bharata who was the son of Sakuntalā. It is stated that he had a brother called Durmaśaṇa. (Bhāgavata, Skanda 9).

Vṛṣa IV. An incarnation of Śiva in the form of an ox. The following is a story that occurs in Śiva Purāṇa, Sudarśanasamhitā, about this incarnation.

When the Devas and the Asuras united together and churned the sea of milk, ever so many noble objects rose up to the surface of the sea. Several beautiful damsels also came up. Viṣṇu grew amorous of them and thus thousands of sons were born by them. These sons who were born in the Pātāla (Nether world), by and by, came up and began to do harm to the dwellers of the earth. At this time Śiva took the incarnation in the form of an ox to study the situation properly. In this disguise Śiva entered Pātāla and took by stealth the Sudarśana (the weapon of Viṣṇu) and drove him to heaven. When Viṣṇu had gone from Pātāla, he had advised his sons to stay in Pātāla. Vṛṣa who came to know of this, cursed them:— “Any man, other than the peaceful hermits and Dānavas (asuras) who are born from my portion, who enters Pātāla shall die.” From that day onwards, the world of Pātāla became a forbidden place for men.

Vṛṣa V. One of the sons of Kārtaviryaśrūjuna. It is mentioned in Brahmāṇḍa Purāṇa, that this prince escaped from the Kaśtriya extermination of Paraśurāma.

Vṛṣā. An Indian river famous in the Purāṇas. (M.B. Bhīma Parva, Chapter 9, Stanza 35).

Vṛṣabhā I. Son of Subala, the King of Gāndhāra. He was the brother of Śakuni. In the battle of Bhārata, this Vṛṣabhā, with his five brothers, attacked Ṣravas, who killed the five brothers. Vṛṣabhā alone escaped death. (M.B. Bhīma Parva, Chapter 90, Stanza 33).

Vṛṣabhā II. An asura. Ariṣṭa was another name of this asura (See under Ariṣṭa).
Vṛṣabha III. A Yādava King who was the son of Anamitra. This Vṛṣabha married Jayantī, the daughter of the King of Kāśi. (Mañṣya Purāṇa, 45, 25-26).

Vṛṣabha IV. A mountain near Girivraja, the capital city of Magadha. (Mahābhārata, Sabhā Parva, Chapter 21, Stanza 2).

Vṛṣabhānū. A King. When Vṛṣabhānu was cleaning the ground for performing sacrifice, once, he got a girl named Rādāh. He brought her up as his own daughter (Padma: Brahma: 7). In Brahmavaivarta Purāṇa, Vṛṣabhānū is mentioned as the father of Rādāh.

Vṛṣabhēkṣaṇa. Another name of Śri Kṛṣṇa. (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 70, Stanza 7).

Vṛṣadamsa. A mountain near the Mandara mountain. Arjuna once dreamt that he travelled to the world of Siva with Śri Kṛṣṇa. It is mentioned in M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 80, Stanza 33, that in this dream travel they visited this mountain Vṛṣadamsa also.

Vṛṣadarbha I.

1) General information. An ancient saintly King in Bhārata. This King Vṛṣadarbha and another King named Sedūka were righteous as well as experts in wielding main and subordinate weapons. After completing the education of Vedas, a brahmin once approached King Sedūka and begged as alms some horses for giving gift to his teacher. The Brahmin said “It is my wish that you will give me these horses as alms.” Sedūka said that he had not enough wealth or horses to give the teacher’s gift. Sedūka sent the Brahmin to Vṛṣadarbha. The Brahmin went to Vṛṣadarbha and begged as alms a thousand horses. The King whipped the Brahmin. He asked the King why he was punished as he had done no wrong. The King asked the Brahmin who was beginning to curse. Ho! Brahmin! Whom are you about to curse? Him who has not given you alms or another Brahmin? The Brahmin said “O, King I am sent here by Sedūka. I begged as he had instructed.”

The King said, “This evening I shall give you the tax-collection of this day. You who have been whipped ought not to be sent empty-handed.” Accordingly the whole of the tax-collection of that day was given to the Brahmin. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 196).

2) Other details.

(i) It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Sabhā Parva, Chapter 8, Stanza 29, that Vṛṣadarbha stays in the palace of Yama glorifying him.

(ii) When he was reigning, he made a law that all his subjects should give gold and silver as alms to Brahmins (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 196, Stanza 3).

Vṛṣadarbha II. Another name of Uśīnara the King of Kāśi. (See under Uśīnara).

Vṛṣadarbha I. A King of Kāśi. Vṛṣadarbha, who was the son of Vṛṣadarbha, was known by the name Yuva-nāśa also. He gave as alms, various kinds of jewels, women, beautiful houses etc. and entered heaven. (M.B. Śānti Parva, Chapter 234, Stanza 24).

Vṛṣadarbha II. A famous son of Śibi. The following is a story given in Mahābhārata about this Vṛṣadarbha.

Once the seven hermits started for going round the earth. At this time Vṛṣadarbha had been performing a sacrifice. Vṛṣadarbha invoked the seven hermits and gave them his son as a gift. The child died before long. As famine was prevailing everywhere the hermits were weak and worn out by hunger. They wished to eat the flesh of the child. Vṛṣadarbha tried to dissuade the hermits from this beastly action in vain. At last the angry King created a wicked fairy to kill the hermits. Though the fairy attacked the hermits, Indra, who had lived with the seven hermits killed the fairy.

Vṛṣadarbha was not at all behind his father Śibi in liberality. There are various stories in Mahābhārata to illustrate this.

Vṛṣadarpa. A son of emperor Śibi. He had three brothers named Bhadra, Suvarā and Kekaya. (Bhāgavata, Skandha 9).

Vṛṣadhvaja I. A King born in the line of Pravira. (Mahābhārata, Udyoga Parva, Chapter 74, Stanza 16).

Vṛṣadhvaja II. See under Stů, Para I.

Vṛṣāgir. A royal hermit spoken of in Rgveda. Rṛṣā-gir was the son of this hermit. (See under Rṛṣā-gir).

Vṛṣaka I. Son of Subala the King of Gāndhāra. The following information about him is taken from Mahābhārata.

(i) He was present at the Svayaṁvara marriage of Draupadi. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 185, Stanza 5). He was present at the RājaśŚya sacrifice (royal consecration) of Yudhiṣṭhira. (M.B. Sabhā Parva, Chapter 84, Stanza 7).

(ii) He was a prominent archer of the army of the Kauravas. (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 168, Stanza 1).

(iii) In the battle of Bhārata this Vṛṣaka was killed by Arjuna. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 30, Stanza 2).

(iv) Vṛṣaka also was there among those brave men of the Kuru family who appeared on the surface of the Gangetic water by the invocation of Vāsā. (M.B. Aśramavāśikā Parva, Chapter 32, Stanza 12).

Vṛṣaka II. A Kaliya prince. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Karna Parva, Chapter 5, Stanza 33, that he also was killed in the battle of Bhārata.

Vṛṣakapi I. One of the eleven Rudras. The eleven Rudras are Hara, Bahurūpa, Tryambaka, Aparājita, Vṛṣakapi, Śambhu, Kapardi, Raivata, Mrgavāydhā, Sarpa and Kapāli. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 18). (See under Ekādaśa rudras).

Vṛṣakapi II. Another name of Mahāvīṣṇu. (M.B. Śānti Parva, Chapter 342).

Vṛṣakapi III. A hermit. Mention is made in Mahābhārata, Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 66, Stanza 23, that with so many other hermits, he also attended the sacrifice performed by the gods.

Vṛṣaketu. One of the sons of Karna. As he was following the sacrificial horse of Yudhiṣṭhira as its protector, he was killed by Bahhruvahana. (Jainim Bhārata, Aśvamedha Parva, 30).

Vṛṣakrātha. A warrior on the side of the Kauravas. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Droṇa Parva, Chapter 80, Stanza 33, that this warrior stood in the heart of the Garuda-disposition of the army formed by Droṇa.

Vṛṣalākṣa. A King born in the line of Bharata, the son of Duṣyanta. He was the son of Caturanga and the grandson of Romapāda. (Bhāgavata, Skandha 9).

Vṛṣamitra. A hermit. Mention is made in Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 26, Stanza 24, that this hermit honoured and loved Yudhiṣṭhira.

Vṛṣanāśva. A King praised in Rgveda. It is mentioned in Rgveda, Mandala 1, Anuvāka 10, Śukta 51, that once Indra took birth as the daughter of this King under the name Menā.

Vṛśānḍa. An asura. Mention is made in Mahābhārata, Sānti Parva, Chapter 227, Stanza 53, that this asura had once ruled over the earth and that because of the attacks of Kāla, he had to leave the earth.

Vṛśāṅku. An ancient hermit. When Śrī Rāma returned from his forest life, the hermits such as Vṛśāṅku, Kaviṣa, Dhaunyā, Raudreya, Nārada, Vāmadeva, Saurabhī, Asāvākra, Śrīsukha, Bhiru, Lomaśa and Maulgala, from the west came and bowed before him. (Uttara Rāmāyaṇa).

Vṛśaparvā I. A noble Asura. The following information about him is taken from Mahābhārata,

(i) Vṛśaparvā was born to Prajapati Kaśyapa by his wife Danu. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 65, Stanza 24).

(ii) He took rebirth in the earth as King Dirghaprajña. (M.B. Ādi Parva Chapter 67, Stanza 15).

(iii) He had a daughter named Śarmiṣṭhā. (See under Devayānī).

Vṛśaparvā II. An ancient royal hermit. It is stated in Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 156, Stanza 15, that an ethereal voice was heard by the Pāṇḍavas, who were living in the forest, that they should visit this royal hermit. Accordingly the Pāṇḍavas visited the hermit and he received them cordially. This King rendered them various helps such as giving them directions for going through the forests. It is stated in Vana Parva, Chapter 177, that on the return journey also the Pāṇḍavas entered the hermitage of this hermit and received hospitality.

Vṛśapraṣṭahagiri. A holy place. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 95, Stanza 3, that the Pāṇḍavas visited this holy place during their life in the forest.

Vṛśasena I. A son of Karṇa. The following information is taken from Mahābhārata about him.

(i) Vṛśasena was a famous warrior in the army of the Kauravas. (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 167, Stanza 23).

(ii) In the Bhārata-battle he confronted the prominent archers such as Satānika, Pāṇḍya, Abhiramanu, Arjuna, Drupada, Sātyaki, Nakula and others. (M.B. Droṇa Parva).

(iii) In the fight with Arjuna, he was killed. (M.B. Karṇa Parva, Chapter 85, Stanza 35).

(iv) Among the brave souls of the Kūras who were invoked to the surface of the river Gaṅgā by Vyāsa, Vṛśasena also was present. (M.B. Āṣramavāsika Parva, Chapter 32, Stanza 10).

Vṛśasena II. A King who shines in the council of Yaṁa. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Sahābha Parva, Chapter 8, Stanza 13, that this King glorifies Yama.

Vṛśasena III. Mention is made in Mahābhārata, Udyoga Parva, Chapter 167, Stanza 23, about a proud and honoured Vṛśasena who attended the Rājasūya (sacrifice of royal consecration) of Yudhiṣṭhira.

Vṛśy. A famous King of the Yadu dynasty.

2) Other details.

(i) The his birth of Śrī Kṛṣṇa was in the family of Vṛṣṇi. (See the genealogy of Śrī Kṛṣṇa).

(ii) The line of Kings beginning with Vṛṣṇi is called the dynasty of Vṛṣṇi. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 217, Stanza 18).

(iii) Thinking that the jewel Syamantaka had been stolen by Kṛṣṇa himself, Vṛṣṇi took a hostile mentality towards Kṛṣṇa. (Brahmaṇḍa Purāṇa, 3:71:1).

(iv) Vṛṣṇi had two wives named Gāndhārī and Mādrip. Five sons were born to him by Mādrip. (Vāyu : 54:14; Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 211; 1-2; 5:8).

Vṛtra (Vṛtrāsura). A mighty and fierce asura.

1) Reason for his birth. Vṛtra was the rebirth of emperor Citraketu. Citraketu and his wife Krtayaditya prayed to Agirās, as a result of which a son was born to them. That son died in his infancy. But Agirās brought him to life again. Brahma and Nārada taught Citraketu theosophy. Citraketu sat in contemplation for eight days and changing himself to a Gandharva he flew through the sky. As he was flying, he saw Pārvatā sitting on the thigh of Śiva and laughed aloud. Knowing this Pārvatā cursed him to become an asura. Vṛtrāsura was the rebirth of the emperor according to this curse. (Bhāgavata, Skandha 6).

2) Birth. Two stories are mentioned about the birth of Vṛtrāsura. One story is that Kaśyapa created him from fire. The other story is that Vṛtra was the son of Tvāṣṭa. Both are given below:

(i) Hiranyakasīpū was born to Prajapati Kaśyapa, by his wife Danu. Mahāvisṣuṇa killed him on being requested by the Devas. Danu was grieved at the death of her son. So Kaśyapa gave her another son. He was Vala or Bala. Indra killed him with his weapon, the thunderbolt. Kaśyapa got angry and plucking a hair from his matted hair, made a burnt offering of it, saying "Let a son who would be the killer of Indra be born." Immediately a huge giant, as black as antimony with yellow eyes was born from the fire. That asura, clad in the hide of antelope with sword in hand, opening his mouth, from which two huge tusks protruded, very wide, and shining with radiance cried out in a voice of thunder, "Oh ! Sage ! Order me, what am I to do?" Kaśyapa ordered him to kill Indra. He named the monster Vṛtra. (Padma Purāṇa, Bhūmi Khāṇḍa, Chapter 23).

(ii) It was Prajapati Tvāṣṭa who created Vṛtra to kill Indra. He had sufficient reasons for it. From the very beginning Indra and Vṛṣṇī were enemies. Tvāṣṭa brought a son named Triśiras otherwise called Viśvarūpā, for the purpose of killing Indra. This Viśvarūpā had three heads. One was meant for drinking Surā (a liquor), the second for drinking Soma (liquor) and the third for eating food. Viśvarūpā was a Brāhmaṇa. Still, as his mother was an asura, he loved the asuras and mingled with them. Indra knew about the behaviour of Viśvarūpā. He concluded that it was blasphemy and wickedness. Indra who was afraid of Viśvarūpā, got angry and cut off his heads. Of the heads of Viśvarūpā, that which drank Soma became a bird called Kapiṇjala, that which drank Surā became a bird called Kalapīṅga, and that which ate food became the bird Tittiri (partridge). Brahmahatya (the sin of killing Brahmin) took shape and went against Indra. Though Indra could have destroyed it, he joined his hands and received it. At the end of the year he cut it into four pieces and divided them among earth, water, tree, and woman. The earth received it with the boon that depressions will be filled. That sin is now seen as salt beds. Water got it with the boon, "Will be swollen when joined". That sin is foam and bubbles. The tree got it with the boon, "Will not die even if cut into pieces". That sin is the sap of the tree. Women got it with the boon, "Amour will last without break". That sin is the menstruation of women.

When Tváṣṭā heard that his righteous son was killed by Indra unreasonably, he became angry and began to make burnt offerings with spells and incantations of Atharvaveda. This offering continued for eight days. On the eighth day at night, an extremely bright male person arose from the fire pit. He rose higher and higher as the flame of fire. Then that figure of power asked Tváṣṭā, "Father! what is my name? What have I to do for you? What is the reason for your grief?" He said that he was prepared to drink up the ocean dry or smash the mountains, or prevent the sun and the moon from moving or any such thing for the sake of his father. The father ordered him to kill Indra. From that day onwards Vṛtra got ready to kill Indra. (Devi Bhágavata, Skandha 6).

3) The slaughter of Vṛtrasura. Hearing about the prowess, strength, and the martial radiance of Vṛtraśura, Indra grew afraid of him and began to think about means and ways to kill him. Indra called the Saptarśis (seven hermits) and sent them to Vṛtra. His intention was to make a treaty. The seven hermits approached Vṛtra and requested him to make a treaty with Indra, and told him that Indra was prepared to give half of the position of Indra.

Vṛtra:—Look hermits! If Indra honestly desires to be in peace with me, I have no objection. But what is the surety that Indra will not deceive me?

Hermits:—If Indra proves to be false and deliberately deceives you, he has agreed to bear the sin of Brahmatāyā incurred, by himself.

Vṛtra agreed to make a treaty on this condition. The hermits took Vṛtra to the palace of Indra. Seeing Vṛtraśura who was coming to be friends with him Indra rose from his royal chair and offered half of it to Vṛtra. Both embraced each other and vowed that they would be brothers born from the same womb.

Thus having engaged Vṛtra in a treaty deceitfully, Indra waited for an opportunity to kill Vṛtra. Once Indra sent Rambhā to infatuate Vṛtra. "Look, beautiful girl! Make Vṛtra senseless somehow so that I may kill him." Hearing this, with a beautiful laugh, Rambhā went with her maids to the Park Nandana and waited for Vṛtraśura. At this time Vṛtra, with some Dānavā friends, came to the park Nandana for entertainment. Indra walked beside watching for the opportunity to kill him. Without fearing any danger from Indra, Vṛtra walked through the park, seeing the celestial maids singing and dancing and playing various games in the garden, and they reached a corner where Rambhā had been singing sweet songs and swinging with her maids. This sight made Vṛtra amorous. He approached Rambhā and prayed to her to become his wife. Under that sandalwood tree Rambhā asked him, "Oh handsome youth! I am Rambhā. I came here with my maids to play. Who are you, my Lord?"
the daughters of Mṛtyu (Death). (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 20).

VYĀGRABHĀTA. The minister of King Śrīdatta, described in Kathāsārītasaḷā. Besides Vyāgrabhāta, he had three more ministers named Mahābāla, Upendrabala and Nīśhāraṇa.

VYĀGRADATTĀ. A king who fought on the side of the Pāṇḍavas. This king who was a great fighter on the chariot, fought with the teacher Droṇa. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Droṇa Parva, Chapter 16, Stanza 32, that he was killed by Droṇa.

VYĀGRADATTĀ I. A king who fought on the side of the Pāṇḍavas. This king who was a great fighter on the chariot, fought with the teacher Droṇa. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Droṇa Parva, Chapter 16, Stanza 32, that he was killed by Droṇa.

VYĀGRADATTĀ II. A prince of the country of Magadha. He took the side of the Kauravas and was killed in the battle of Bhārata by Sātyaki. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 107, Stanza 31).

VYĀGRAKETU. A warrior of Pāṇḍara, who fought on the side of the Pāṇḍavas against the Kauravas. Kṛṣṇa wounded him in the battle of Bhārata. (M.B. Karna Parva, Chapter 56, Stanza 44).

VYĀGRĀKSA. A follower of Subrahmanya. (Mahābhārata, Sāvya Parva, Chapter 45, Stanza 59).

VYĀGRAPĀDA. An asura who fought against Subrahmanya. In the fight with Subrahmanya this asura was killed. (Skanda Purāṇa, Asura Kāṇḍa).

VYĀSA. The sage Vyāsa who is the author of the Mahābhārata.

1) Genealogy. Descended from Viṣṇu in the following order: Brahmā-Vasiṣṭha-Śakti-Parāśara-Vyāsa.

2) Birth. Vyāsa was born to hermit Parāśara by a fisherwoman named Kāli. His name when he was a child was Kṛṣṇa. As his birth took place in an island (Dvīpa) he got the name Kṛṣṇadvaipayāṇa. After dividing the Vedas he got the name Vedavyāsa. He is the composer of Mahābhārata, one of the greatest books in world-literature. The births of great men, generally will be wonderful. Behind the birth of Vyāsa also there is a wonderful story.

As has already been mentioned, Kāli, a fisherwoman was the mother of Vyāsa. There is a story about this Kāli also. When king Vasu of Cedi went to the forest for hunting, he saw the cotion of animals and he had seminal discharge. The king sent that semen to his queen. But on the way it fell in the river Kālindī and was eaten by a fish. This fish was a celestial maid named Adrikā transformed to fish by a curse. The fish conceived and got into the net of a fisherman, who lived on the banks of Kālindī. When this fish was cut open a male and a female infant were seen inside. The male child was given to the king himself. The fisherman brought up the girl naming her Kāli. As the girl had the gandha (smell) of matsya (fish), she got the name Matsya-gandhā, also. This fisherman was also a ferryman. Kāli used to help her father in ferrying people across the river Kālindī. She grew up and became a young woman.

Once the hermit Parāśara came by that way to go to the other side of the river. At that time, the fisherman who has been taking people across the river, was sitting on the bank of the river and having his meals. As soon as Parāśara came, the innocent fisherman—the foster-father of Matsyagandhā—called her, who was standing close by and asked her to take the hermit across the river. The hermit got into the boat. Matsyagandhā began to row the boat. The beauty of the damsel sitting in front of him and the little waves of the river, combined together had the effect of arousing passion in the hermit. He became sexually excited and sat close to her. Discerning his intention she moved away from him and prayed to him humbly not to violate her chastity. She repeated her prayer. The hermit Parāśara created an artificial fog around the boat. The smell of fish was gone from her and the fragrance of Musk took its place. The hermit created an artificial island in the middle of the river. They got down on the island and acted a love drama. She became pregnant. Parāśara said to her, “Beautiful girl! Even after your confinement you shall remain a virgin. A son, who will be a portion of Viṣṇu, a man of purity, famous throughout the three worlds, highly learned, the teacher-priest of the whole world, shall be born to you. He will divide the Vedas and will be exalted by the people of the world.”

After this the great hermit took his bath in Yamunā and went away. The pregnancy of Kāli was completed instantly and she gave birth to a very handsome boy in that island of Yamunā. As soon as he was born, he grew up and became a hermit radiant with devotion and assuming a vow of purity and abstinence he said to his mother, ‘Mother! You can go anywhere, as you please. You need have no worry on my account. I am about to go for penance. When anything unpleasant happens to you, just think of me. The moment you wish to see me, I will be there by you. I wish you a happy life. I am going.” Saying thus the brave boy walked away. (Devi Bhāgavata, Skanda 2; Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapters 60 to 63).

3) Spiritual life.

i) Introduction. Two sides, the spiritual as well as the material, are seen in the life of Vyāsa. It was after the marriage of Santanu, a king of the Lunar dynasty, with his mother Kāli, otherwise known as Saṭīyavatī, that Vyāsa came into contact with Hastināpura. Participating in all the vicissitudes of the Pāṇḍavas and the Kauravas was the worldly side of the life of Vyāsa. But the major part of his life was spent in living as a hermit in his hermitage in the forest with a large group of disciples; teaching them the Vedas. A small description of that spiritual life is given below:

ii) In the forest. We do not see Kṛṣṇadvaipayāṇa, who had grown up to a youth at the time of his birth, for many years after his departure, bidding adieu to his mother. He might have been living with hermits in the forests, learning Vedas from them. After this he appears on the banks of river Sarasvatī as a teacher and Priest. As he was doing penance there, he saw two sparrows, legs and beaks red, without even down feathers, crying for food, and the parent birds, with the utmost care and tenderness feeding them. They flew about here and there and gathered food and came back quickly. Because of joy at the sight of their parents, the little ones opened their ruby-red mouths with cries and throbbing. They kissed the young ones and fed them. The young sparrows hid under the wings of their father and mother and enjoyed the surroundings by thrusting out their heads and looking on all sides.

iii) Birth of son. Seeing this, the paternity instinct in him was aroused. He understood that love of children was merely for the sake of love, that this love was pure and simple. Moreover there is the maxim that a man without a son has no right to aspire for heaven. Sad and silent, thinking of these things he walked on unwillingly and reached the vicinity of the Himālayas. Still, he was doubtful. He began to consider about the deity, before whom he had to do penance for the fulfilment of his wish. He could not decide. As he was sitting in thought, Nārada came there. From the talk of Vyāsa, Nārada knew that childlessness was the cause of his sorrow. Nārada advised him that for the attainment of Puruṣārthas (objects of life) penance was to be done before Devi. Accepting that advice, Vyāsa went to a place near Mahāmeru to do penance.

When Vyāsa began penance, the celestial maids also commenced their work of hindering the penance. It was Ghṛtācī who confronted Vyāsa. She took the form of a parrot of five colours and flew in front of Vyāsa. The hermit was excited at the beauty of Ghṛtācī and sat forgetting himself. As he sat there thinking of the infatuating beauty of the parrot, seminal discharge occurred to him. He became a slave to this infatuation, when he was engaged in making fire by attrition. In this amorous state of mind he was quite unaware of the seminal discharge or its falling on the pieces of wood used for attrition. He continued attrition. Then a very bright, divine person appeared from the pieces of wood. At the birth of a person, without attachment to a womb, all the worlds were delighted. The hide of black antelope, water pot, hermit's rod etc. fell from the sky. Birth rituals and ceremonies, according to the custom, were conducted by Vyāsa. As he was born from the semen discharged at the sight of the Sūka (parrot) the infant was named Sūka. As soon as he was born Sūka began to grow by divine power and shortly became a boy of shining radiance. After investiture with the Brāhma-string, the boy was sent for education to the hermitage of Brhaspati, the teacher of the devas. Sūka completed his education with Brhaspati and having performed Samāvarta and offering of gift to the teacher, he returned home to his father.

v) Disciples. Sūka commenced advanced study under his father Vyāsa. Besides Sūka, Vyāsa had disciples such as Vaiśampāyana, Śūta, Paśa, Jaimini and others also, living with him. The hermitage of Vyāsa soon grew up to be a great educational institution, with plenty of disciples.

v) Separation of son. In the meanwhile Sūka married and lived the life of a householder in the hermitage of his father, for a time. Then forsaking his family and his father, Sūka went to the peak of Kaśī and began to do penance meditating on Śiva. At last he became a divine person who had obtained complete attainments, and breaking the top of the peak open, he rose up into the sky and shone there as a second Sun. The devas who saw Sūka rising up by breaking the peak of Kaśī and staying up in the sky, praised him.

This untimely separation of his son had undermined the firmness of the mind of Vyāsa. Filled with grief, he left his hermitage and wandered here and there calling out his son by name. He could not find his son. At last he reached the peak of Kaśī where his son had been doing penance. Standing there he called aloud his son by name cryingly. Paramaśiva appeared before the lamenting father and consoled him. Thus getting a little bit of peace of mind, Vyāsa returned to his hermitage and lived there. The sorrowing Vyāsa, was made still more sorrowful by the departure of his beloved disciples, Asita, Devala, Vaiśampāyana, Sumantu, Jaimini and others who had been living in the hermitage and who had departed, having finished their education. All the surroundings of the hermitage seemed to him filled with pain. At last he thought about his mother. (Devi Bhāgavata Skandha 1).

4) His terrestrial life.

i) Preface. Within this period many changes had taken place in Hastinapura and the bank of Yamunā. Santanu the king of the Lunar dynasty had married Gaṅgādevī, who had disappeared after giving the king a son named Devavrata (Bhiṣma). Bhiṣma grew up. Once Santanu was hunting in the forest when he was attracted by the sweet smell of musk. Tracing the origin of that smell, the king reached the fisherman's hut on the banks of the Yamunā. That smell proceeded from Kastūrīgandhā (Satyavatī) the mother of Vyāsa. The king fell in love with her. He returned to the palace, sad and silent. Learning the cause of his father's sadness, Devavrata went to the fisherman's hut and took Satyavatī to the palace to be given to his father. Devavrata had taken a vow that the kingdom would be given to the son born to Satyavatī and that he would remain unmarried, throughout his life. Because he had taken so terrible a vow, Devavrata came to be called Bhiṣma from that day onwards.

Two sons named Gītrāgada and Vicitravirya, were born to Santanu. Gītrāgada died when he was young. Vicitravirya married Ambikā and Ambālīkā, daughters of the King of Kāśī. Vicitravirya also died before any children were born to him. It seemed as if the family was about to become extinct. At this juncture Satyavatī thought about her son Vyāsa.

ii) Vyāsa in Hastinapurī. The mother thought about him, and instantly he reached Hastinapurī. Because of her compulsion, two sons were born, one each to Ambikā and Ambālīkā from Vyāsa. The son of Ambikā was Dhumārāśtra and the son of Ambālīkā was Pāṇḍu. Vidura was the son born to Vyāsa by their maid.

iii) Vyāsa and the Kauravas-Pāṇḍavas. From this time onwards we see Vyāsa as the spiritual teacher of the Kauravas and the Pāṇḍavas. Behind all the movements of these two families we could see the hand of Vyāsa. Thus though he came to Hastinapurī and gave advice to the members of the family frequently, his main abode was his hermitage. Vyāsa's contact with Hastinapurī could be seen up to the Mahāprasthāna (the great departure) of the Pāṇḍavas. In all the administrative affairs up to this period, Vyāsa also had a part. The situations in which Vyāsa had taken part in the life-voyage of the Kauravas and the Pāṇḍavas are given below.

(i) Vyāsa gave the boon that hundred sons would be born to Gāndhārī. (M. B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 114, Stanza 8).

(ii) Vyāsa cut the mass of flesh given birth to by Gāndhārī into a hundred pieces and kept them in hundred pots. (M. B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 114, Stanza 17).

(iii) Vyāsa consoled Gāndhārī by telling her that over and above hundred sons a daughter also would be born to her. (M. B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 115, Stanza 16).
(iv) Vyāsa consoled the Pândavas who had been living in the forest with their mother Kuntī, after the death of Pāṇḍu their father. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 153, Verse 5).
(v) On another occasion Vyāsa came to the Pândavas and told them the stories of the previous births of Pāṇcālī. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 168).
(vi) Vyāsa rendered all possible help to the Pândavas to marry Pāṇcālī. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 195).
(vii) Very often Vyāsa was a member of the council of Dharmaputra. (M. B. Sañhā Parva, Chapter 4, Stanza 11).
(viii) It was Vyāsa who sent Arjuna to the north, Bhīmāsenā to the east, Sahadeva to the south and Nakula to the west for regional conquest. (M. B. Sañhā Parva, Dākṣiṇātmyapātha, Chapter 26).
(ix) Vyāsa engaged himself in making various arrangements in the Rājasūyā (sacrifice of royal consecration) of Yudhiṣṭhīra. (M. B. Sañhā Parva, Chapter 53, Stanza 10).
(x) At the end of the Rājasūyā, Vyāsa predicted the future of Yudhiṣṭhīra. (Sañhā Parva, Chapter 46, Stanza 1).
(xi) When the Rājasūyā ended, Vyāsa anointed Yudhiṣṭhīra. (Sañhā Parva, Chapter 53, Stanza 10).
(xii) Vyāsa advised Dhrtrāṣṭra to prevent Duryodhana from doing injustice. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapters 7 and 8).
(xiii) When the Pândavas were living in the Dvaitavana (forest) Vyāsa visited them and taught Yudhiṣṭhīra the art of Pratīṣṭṛti. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 36, Stanza 24).
(xiv) He sent Sañjaya to Dhrtrāṣṭra to tell him about the greatness of Arjuna and Śri Kṛṣṇa. (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 69, Stanza 11).
(xv) He gave Sañjaya the power of having the eye of a seer penetrating beyond time and space (Divya drṣṭī).
(M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 2, Stanza 10).
(xvi) Vyāsa consoled Yudhiṣṭhīra who was stricken with grief in the course of the battle of Bhārata. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 71, Stanza 23).
(xvii) When Yudhiṣṭhīra cried over the death of Ghatotkaca in the battle of Bhārata, Vyāsa came to Yudhiṣṭhīra and consoled him. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 183, Stanza 58).
(xviii) He talked to Āsvatthāmā about the greatness of Śiva and Śri Kṛṣṇa. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 201, Stanza 56).
(xix) When Śaṭyaki was about to kill Sañjaya, Vyāsa turned him back from the attempt and rescued Sañjaya. (M.B. Sañya Parva, Chapter 29, Stanza 39).
(xx) Vyāsa argued and established that the act of cursing Āsvatthāmā on the part of Śri Kṛṣṇa was correct. (M.B. Sañupikā Parva, Chapter 16, Stanza 17).
(xxi) Vyāsa prevented Gāndhārī from her intention to curse the Pândavas. (M.B. Śri Parva, Chapter 14, Stanza 7).
(xxii) When the battle of Bhārata was over, Vyāsa advised Yudhiṣṭhīra about matters regarding the administration of the country.
(xxiii) Yudhiṣṭhīra felt grieved at the death of relatives and friends in the battle of Bhārata and he decided to commit suicide. But Vyāsa dissuaded him from that attempt. (M.B. Śaṁti Parva, Chapter 27, Stanza 28).
(xxiv) Vyāsa walked to the place where Bhīṣma lay on the bed of arrows and visited him. (M.B. Śaṁti Parva, Chapter 45, Stanza 5).
(xxv) Vyāsa advised Yudhiṣṭhīra to perform Asvamedha (horse sacrifice). (M.B. Āsvamedha Parva, Chapter 3, Stanza 8).
(xxvi) Vyāsa advised the Pândavas to go to King Marutā for wealth when the battle of Bhārata was over. (Āsvamedha Parva, Chapter 3, Stanza 20).
(xxvii) Vyāsa consoled Uttarā, who was lamenting over the death of her husband. (Āsvamedha Parva, Chapter 62, Stanza 11).
(xxviii) He consoled Arjuna who was crying over the death of his son. (Āsvamedha Parva, Chapter 62, Stanza 14).
(xxix) Vyāsa advised Yudhiṣṭhīra on the various arrangements which were to be made for the conducting of horse-sacrifice. (Āsvamedha Parva, Chapters 62 to 72).
(30) Vyāsa went to Dhrtrāṣṭra, who had gone to the forest after the Bhārata-battle and pacified him. (M.B. Āśramavāśikā Parva, Chapter 28).
(31) Vyāsa brought the spirits of those who died in the Bhārata-battle, to the surface of the river Ganges, by the power of his penance and Dhrtrāṣṭra and the others saw them. (See under Dhrtrāṣṭra, Parā 7).
(32) At the instruction of Vyāsa, all the Kṣatriya widows immersed themselves in the river Ganges and everyone of them entered the world of her husband. (M.B. Āśramavāśikā Parva, Chapter 33, Stanza 18).
(33) When the Yadu-clan was completely destroyed, Arjuna went to the hermitage of Vyāsa and talked with him. (Mausala Parva, Chapter 8).
(xxiv) Vyāsa had been an adviser of King Janamejaya. (See under Janamejaya).
5) Saving a worm. Once a wicked man took rebirth as a worm. This worm was crawling in haste for life in front of a cart coming at great speed. He saved the worm and gave it Brahminhood, and in the next birth it became a Brahmin who lived in peace and comfort. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 117).
6) The literary life of Vyāsa. Towards the close of his life Vyāsa again entered the caves of Himālayas. Vyāsa who had steered through a very wide and rough sea of life, was in a position to understand clearly the various sides of human life. In the mind of that sage, who sat in deep contemplation in the eternally silent caves of the Himālayas, the events of his past life began to line up one after the other. From that inward instigation the Purāṇēthāsas (the Myths and legends) took form. It might have been during this period that Vyāsa divided the Vedas and composed Purāṇas and Upanīthas.
One does not go wrong in saying that it was the composing of the Mahābhārata that brought Vyāsa very close to the later generations. The stories of the Kauravas and the Pândavas, flowed through his mind as a river flows down crushing down the banks on either side. A scribe was necessary to take them down in the form of verses. Vyāsa informed Brahmaghā of this need. Brahmaghā replied ‘Gaṇapati is the only person capable of taking down every thing that you sing.’ Accordingly Vyāsa thought of Gaṇapati, who came to the side of Vyāsa, and he informed Gaṇapati of his need. Gaṇapati said that he was willing to do the work on condition... that Vyās would go on singing unceasingly, so that he might not have to stop the iron pen. Vyās said that while he would be singing the poems without stopping, Gaṇapati should not take down this and that without grasping the meaning. Both agreed to this condition and the composing of the Mahābhārata commenced.
Within two years and a half the great poetic work was finished. The great disciples of Vyās, such as Vaśamppāyana, Jaśmin and such others sang them and learned them by heart and published them in the world. (M.B.
Ādi Parva, Chapter 1).

7) Many Vyāsās. It is stated in the Purāṇas that in every Manu’s age, a Vyās will be born. It is mentioned in Viśu Purāṇa, Aṁśa 3, Chapter 3, as to who were the persons who took birth as Vyāsā in a particular Manu’s age and which were the Vedas and branches of Vedas they had divided. It is given below:

During the age of Manu Vaivasvata, in each of the divisions the Vedas had been divided by great hermits, twenty-eight times. Twenty-eight Veda-Vyāsas have passed, each of whom had divided the Veda into four parts in each Dvāpara Yuga. It was Brahmā himself who had divided the Veda into four in the first Dvāpara Yuga. Prajāpati was the Vedavyāsa in the second Dvāpara Yuga. In the third, Vyāsā was the teacher-priest Śrūka; in the fourth Bṛhaspati; in the fifth the Sun; and in the sixth the all powerful Dharma-rāja. It was Indra in the seventh, Viṣṇu in the seventh, Sārasvata in the ninth, and Tridhāmā in the tenth. It was Trisūkh in the eleventh, Bharadvāja in the twelfth, Antariṣka in the thirteenth, Vānē in the fourteenth, Trayaṣya in the fifteenth, Dhananāyaka in the sixteenth, Kṛta in the seventeenth and Jaya in the eighteenth. Next Bharadvāja comes as Vedavyāsā and Gautama after Bharadvāja. It was hermit Haryāmā who was the next Vyāsā, and then comes Vājaśravas. The next Vyāsā was Trīṇabindu born in the clan of Somaśūṭha. He was followed by Kṛṣṇa, otherwise called Vālmiki born in the family of Bhīrgu. Sākū is the next Vyāsā. After that Parāśara, then Jātukarna and then Kṛṣṇadvaitaśāmya. They are the twenty-eight Vedavyāsas. Each one of these had divided the Veda which had been one at the beginning of each Dvāpara-yuga, into four Vedas. It is Śvāthmā, the son of Drona, who is going to be the Vedavyāsa of the coming Dvāpara Yuga.

8) Other details.

(i) Most of the scholars are of opinion that the period of Vyāsā was between 1800 and 1500 B.C.

(ii) Apāntaratamas was the rebirth of Vyāsā. (See under Apāntaratamas).

(iii) In Mahābhārata, the word Kṛṣṇa, Kṛṣṇadvaitaśāyāna, Dvaipāyaṇa, Śatyaśatśa, Śatyaśatāyāma, Parāśarya, Parāśaraśāmya, Bādarāyaṇa, Vedavyāśa etc. are used as synonyms of Vyāsā.

(iv) The word Vyāsā means he who describes elaborately.

"He became Vyāsā because he had described all the Vedas". (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 63, Stanza 88).

Vyās=describe (Differentiate the branches and divide).

VYĀSASTHALI. An ancient holy place on the border of Kurukṣetra. It is said that because of his grief due to the separation of his son, Vyāsā tried to commit suicide at this place. He who visits this place would get the fruits of giving thousand cows as alms. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 83, Stanza 93).

VYĀSAVANA. A forest near Kurukṣetra. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 83, Stanza 93, that he who bathes in the holy bath named Manojavati tirtha in this forest, would get the fruits of giving thousand cows as alms.

VYASĀ. A King. It is stated in Mahābhārata, Śanti Parva, Chapter 127, Stanza 3, that this King remains in the palace of Yama.

VYAVAHĀRA. It is mentioned in Manusmrti, Chapter 8, that administering the law was of eighteen types in ancient India.

(i) Pertain to giving and taking.

(ii) Pertain to the property entrusted to another for keeping.

(iii) Selling the property by anybody other than its owner.

(iv) Appropriating gain to oneself in a combined transaction.

(v) Not handing over the property which was given as a gift.

(vi) Non-payment of salary.

(vii) Disobeying orders.

(viii) Retaining and doubting the ownership after the completion of a transaction of selling or buying.

(ix) A law suit between the owner of the cattle and the cowherd or shepherd.

(x) Dispute about boundary.

(xi) Striking another.

(xii) Reviling others.

(xiii) Theft and robbery.

(xiv) Violence.

(xv) Stealing another’s wife.

(xvi) Matrimonial responsibilities.

(xvii) Partition.

(xviii) Gambling.

Whenever difference of opinion arises between two persons on any of the matter given above, the King should interfere and make a decision. For one reason or another, if the King could not attend the court, three learned Brahmins should enter the court and conduct the trial sitting or standing, and they should not conduct the trial walking to and fro. This was the practice of courts in ancient India.

VYOMA. A King born in the dynasty of Bharata, the son of Dūṣyanta. It is mentioned in Bhāgavata, Skandha 9, that Vyoma was the son of Daśārha and the father of Jīmūta.

VYOMĀRI. An eternal Viśvadeva (deity concerned with offerings to the Manes). (Mahābhārata, Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 91, Stanza 35).

VYOMĀŚURA. Son of Māyaśūra. For the story how Kṛṣṇa killed this asura, see under Kṛṣṇa, para 24.

VYUDHORU (VYUDHORASKA). One of the hundred sons of Dhrūtarāṣṭra. Mention is made in Mahābhārata, Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 96, Stanza 23, that Vyudhoro was killed by Bhīmasena in the battle of Bhārata.

VYUHA. (Disposition of an army). Disposition of an army of four parts, (infantry, cavalry, elephants and chariots) in the battlefield, the arrangement of it, in various forms. It is said that during the period of Mahābhārata, there were various forms of disposition of the army. Some of them are given below:
i) Ardhacandraysyā. (like a Crescent moon) (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 56).

ii) Garudavyā. (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 56).

iii) Krauṇḍavyā. (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 60).

iv) Cakravyā. (wheel-shaped) (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 34).

v) Makaravvyā. (shark-like) (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 69).

vi) Maṇḍalavvyā. (circular) (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 81).

vii) Maṇḍalārdhavvyā. (Semi circular) (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 20).

viii) Vajravyā. (Diamond-shaped) (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 81).

ix) Śakta-vvyā. (cart-shaped) (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 7).

x) Śyenavvyā. (Vulture-like) (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 69).

xi) Sarvatobhadrayyā. (fortified all-round) (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 99).

xii) Suparnavyyā. (kite-shaped) (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 20).

xiii) Sucinukhavyā. (Like the needle-eye) (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 77).

VYUKA. A country of ancient India. (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 9, Stanza 31).

VYUSITĀV. A King of the Pūru dynasty, who was righteous and just. He performed many sacrifices. His wife was Bhadrā, daughter of King Kakśi. It is said that this Bhadrā was the most beautiful woman in India. As the King led a libidinous life with this queen Bhadrā, he met with an untimely death. When the King died, he had no children. Bhadrā cried for a long while embracing the dead body of the King. Then the spirit of Vyusitāsa, without the body, said to her, "My love. Lie with me in your own bed on the eight or fourteenth day of your menstruation. I will give you sons." She acted according to the wish of the King and got seven sons from the dead body. Her sons were three Satvas and the four Madras. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 120).

VYUSṬA. A King of the dynasty of Dhrusa. This King was the son of King Purpāra, by his wife Prabhā. Pradoṣa, Niśitha and others were brothers of Vyūṣṭa. A son named Sarvatejas was born to this King. (Ādiga-vata, Skanda 4).

VYUSṬI. Another name for day-time.

Y

YA. (])* This letter means "Yāga", "Yāṭa" (one who goes) or "hero". (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 348).

YADAVA. See under Yaduvanśa.

YADAVI. Mother of the King Sagara. (For more details see under Sagara).

YADU I. The founder of Yadava Varṇa or Yadu Varnśa.

1) Genealogy. From Viśṇu were descended in the following order:- Brahmā—Atri—Candra—Budha—Puruṇavas—Āyus—Nahusa—Yayāti—Yadu.

2) Yadu Vanśa (Yadava Vanśa). The origin of Yadu Vanśa is from Atri. Candra, Durvāsas and Dattātreya Muni were born of Atri by Anasūyā. Budha was born to Candra, Purūravas was born to Budha, Āyus was born to Purūravas, and Nahusa was born to Āyus. Two children, Ayati and Yayāti were born to Nahusa. Yayāti had two wives, Sārmiṣṭhā and Devayāni. Three sons, Druhyu, Anudrhyu and Pūru were born to Sārmiṣṭhā. The Pūru vanśa takes its origin from Pūru. Yayāti had two sons by Devayāni. They were Yadu and Turvasu. The descendants of Yadu are the Yadavas.

Four sons, Sahasrājīt, Kṛṣṭa, Nala and Rīpu were born to Yadu. Sahasrājīt had a son, Sātājīt. Three sons Mahābhaya, Venuhaya and Hehaya were born to Sātājīt. Of them Hehaya became famous under the name of Eka'vira and founded the Hehaya vanśa. The Hehayas and Bhārgavas were on terms of enmity. Dharma was born to Hehaya, and Kunti or Kūpi was born to Dharma. Kūpi had four sons—Sādājīt, Māhiṣmāna, Bhadravas and Durdama. Dhanaka was the son of Bhadravas and Dhanaka had four sons—Kṛtavirya, Kṛtāgni, Kṛtavārma and Kṛtaujās. Of them, Kṛtavirya who was the eldest, was the father of Kārtaviryaṛjuna. From here, Yadu vanśa continues from Kārtaviryaṛjuna. He had five sons, Jayadhvaja, Śrāsanā, Vṛṣabhā, Madhu and Īrijita. Viṣṇi was the son of Madhu, the fourth of them. From this point, Yadu vanśa continues from Viṣṇi. Yadava vanśa from this stage is also known as Viṣṇi vanśa. Viṣṇi had four sons—Śūmira, Yudhājīt, Vasu and Sādvabrauma. Yadu vanśa continues from Yudhājīt. He had two sons, Śini and Nimi. Śini's son was Sātāyaka and Sātāyaka's son was Sātāyaki. Sātāyaki had another name, Yuvudhāna. Jaya was Sātāyaki's son. Kūpi was the son of Jaya, Anamitra was the son of Kūpi and Piṣṇi was the son of Anamitra. Piṣṇi's sons were Citrāratha and Svāphalaka. Viḍurāratha and Kukūra were born to Citrāratha. Sūra was the son of Viḍurāratha. Sūra was the son of Śuṇa, Bhoja was the son of Śini, Hṛdiqa was the son of Bhoja. Four sons, Devavāha, Gaddāhanvā, Kṛtarpavā and Śūra, were born to Hṛdiqa. Śūra married Māriśa and their children were Vasu, Devabhāga, Devasravas, Anaka. Śrāvja, Kākānaka, Śyāmaka, Vatsa, Kāvuka and Vasdeva. Vasdeva married Devaki, the sister of Karīsa. Śī Kṛṣṇa was their son. Pradynmuna was the son of Śī Kṛṣṇa. Aniruddha was the son of Pradyumn and Vajra was the son of Aniruddha. The last known link of that branch of Yadu vanśa was Vajra.

Karīsa also belonged to Yadu vanśa. Kukūra who was the brother of Viḍurāratha was the ancestor of Karīsa. Ugrasena who was a lineal descendant of Kukūra, was the father of Karīsa. The Purāṇas mention Devaki, the mother of Śī Kṛṣṇa as Karīsa's sister. But in fact she was not his direct sister. Ugrasena, Karīsa's father, had a brother named Devaka. This Devaka had three sons, Devāpa, Upadeva and Sudeva. Devaki, Śī Kṛṣṇa's mother was the daughter of Devāpa. Devaki had six sisters who were—Srutadeva, Śāntidevā, Upadevā, Śrīdevā, Devarakṣita and Sahadevā. Akṛūra who went to Ambādi also belonged to another branch of Yadu vanśa. Piṣṇi who was of the ninth generation from Viṣṇi, had two sons—Citrāratha and Svāphalaka. Akṛūra was the son of Svāphalaka. 3) Other details about Yadu Varnśa

(i) Once Yayāti wanted his son Yadu to transfer the latter's youthfulness to Yayāti. The son refused to oblige the father who therefore pronounced a curse that Yadu's descendants would not enjoy kingship. (For detailed story, see under Yayāti).

(ii) Yadu's descendants are called Yadavas. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 95, Verse 10).
(iii) Yadu was the son of Devayāni and the grandson of Sukrācārya. Although Yadu was a hero, he was dull-witted. He did not obey his father. He used to despise his father and brothers. His capital city was Hastinā-pura. He became dull-witted after the loss of his kingdom by the curse of his father. (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 149)

4) The end of Yadu Varṣa. Śrī Kṛṣṇa was one of the most important members of the Yadu Varṣa. That family continued only for 36 years more after the end of the Bhārata Yuddha. At the end of the thirty-six years, evil omens began to appear in Dvārakā. Whirlwinds began to blow furiously. Frightened birds began to fly helter-skelter. Rivers began to flow upwards. The whole land was enveloped in mist. Comets continued to drop from heaven, scattering sparks of fire. The sun's disc was eclipsed with clouds of dust.

At that time, one day, the sages Viśvāmitra, Kaṇva and Nārada happened to come to Dvārakā. A band of Yādavas, under the leadership of Sāmba, gathered round the sages to make fun of them. They dressed Sāmba like a pregnant woman and asked the sages what child ‘she’ would bear. The enraged sages replied that the “Child” would be an iron pestle which would be the cause of the death of all the Yādavas. Besides, they added that, with the exception of Rāma, (Balabhadra Rāma) and Kṛṣṇa, the whole of Yādava Varṣa would come to ruin.

Next day Sāmba did give birth to an iron pestle. The frightened Yādavas recalled the curse of the sages. They reported the matter to their king. The king, in deep gloom, had the pestle filed into dust and ordered his men to throw the dust into the sea.

People recalled Gandhari’s curse on Śrī Kṛṣṇa after the Bhārata Yuddha. The curse was that the family of Śrī Kṛṣṇa who was the cause of all mischief, would be wiped out within a period of 36 years.

At that time, women began to be stolen from Dvārakā every night by a dark woman monster. Śrī Kṛṣṇa’s weapon, Cakra slipped out of Kṛṣṇa’s grip and rose up to heaven, in the very presence of the Vṛṣṇis. Seeing these evil omens, the alarmed Vṛṣṇis and Andhakas began to leave the place on a pilgrimage. They reached the shore of Prabhāsa tirtha. The Uddhavas parted company with the Yādavas there. Nobody prevented the Uddhavas. Śrī Kṛṣṇa who saw that the end of the Yādavas was approaching, also kept silent. The Yādava leaders in despair, took to drinking. Intoxicated by drinking they began to quarrel. The particles of the iron pestle thrown into the sea, were carried and deposited on the shore by the waves. They began to sprout into a kind of grass. The blades of this grass soon transformed themselves into iron pests. The Yādavas pulled them out and began attacking each other with them.

Most of them were beaten to death by their own kinsfolk. Śrī Kṛṣṇa who was in a state of trance in “Yogāśana”, was hit on his toe by an arrow shot by a hunter and he fell into Samādhi. Balabhadra Rāma renounced his body and went to Pātalā.

After that the sea advanced and submerged the whole of Dvārakā. (M.B. Mausala Parva).

YADU II. There is another Yadu mentioned in the Purāṇas, who was the son of Uparicara Vasu. Mahābhārata, Adi Parva, Chapter 68, Verse 31, says that this Vasu was never defeated by anyone at any time.

YADU III. King of Yadus. There are references to this king in many places in the 1st Manḍala of Rgveda.

YĀJA. A sage born in Kaśyapa gotra. (For further details, see the word Upayāja and Pāñcāli).

YAJAJITA. A Yajñakārtā (Performer of Yajñas) celebrated in the Rgveda.

YAJNA. An incarnation of Mahāviṣṇu, Svāyambhuva Manu had two sons, Priyavatra and Uttānapāda and three daughters, Akūti, Devahūti and Prasūti. Ruci Prajāpati married Akūti. Yajña was their son. Devī Bhāgavata, 8th Skandha mentions that this Yajña was an incarnation of Ādi Nārāyaṇa.

Yajña had a sister named Dakṣinā. They were twins. They married each other. The twelve sons who were born to them were the Devas known as Yāmas, during the Svāyambhuva Manvantara. (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Part I, Chapter 7).

Yajña’s twelve sons were:—Toṣa, Pratoṣa, Santosa, Bhadra, Śānti, Iḍaspati, Iddhama, Kavi, Vībhu, Sṛgama, Sudeva and Virocaka. Their father Yajña was the Indra of Svāyambhuva Manvantara. (Bhāgavata, 4th Skandha).

YAJNA-BĀHU. An ancient sage who was the son of Priyavatra and grandson of Svāyambhuva Manu. Svāyambhuva Manu had two famous sons named Priyavatra and Uttānapāda. Of these, Priyavatra married Surūpā and Barhiṃsatī, the two daughters of Viśvakarman. Yajñabāhu was the son of Priyavatra by Surūpā. The ten sons born to Priyavatra and Surūpā were:—Agnidhra, Iddmāja, Yajña-Bāhu, Mahāvīra, Rukmaśukra, Gṛhtapṛṣṭha, Sāvāna, Medhātithi, Vitihotra and Kavi. They had a daughter, Īrjasvatī. (Bhāgavata, 8th Skandha).

YAJNA-DATTĀ I. A youthful sage. In Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 6, it is stated that this youth was shot dead with an arrow by Daśaratha, mistaking him for an elephant, on the bank of the river Sarayū. But Vālmiki Rāmāyana says that the name of the boy-sage who was shot dead by Daśaratha was “Śravaṇa”. For more details see 3rd Para under Daśaratha.

YAJNA-DATTĀ II. A Brāhmaṇa. There was a Brāhmaṇa village called Mahat at the foot of the Yāmuna mountain, between the rivers Gaṅgā and Yamunā. This Brāhmaṇa was born and brought up here. There is a story in Padma Purāṇa, Chapter 92, about him, which says that by mistake he was taken to hell by Kāla’s messenger and that he was reluctant to leave hell. The story is as follows:

Once Yama (Kāla) ordered his agent to bring the Brāhmaṇa named Yajnadatta, who lived in Mahat village, born in Vasiṣṭha gotra and was gentle, scholarly and well-versed in Yajña practices. He was specially warned that he should not make a mistake as there was another Brāhmaṇa with the same name who lived in the neighbourhood and who resembled Yajnadatta in appearance, learning and in every other respect. But in spite of Yama’s specific warning, his agent brought the wrong person.

Yama, with his sense of justice, received him with due respect and allowed him to return to the world. But Yajnadatta was not willing to return to the world.

YAJNA-DATTĀ III. See under Pātaliputra.

YAJNA-SARMĀ. A Brāhmaṇa made famous in the Purāṇas. He was the son of Śivaśarmā. (For detailed story, see under Śivaśarmā).
YĀJṆAŚATRU

YĀJṆAŚATRU. A Rākṣasa who fought against Rāma and Lakṣmaṇa in the forest. Khara, Dūraṇa and Trisirās were the three Rākṣasas who declared war on Śri Rāma. Yājñāśatru was one of the twelve military commanders of Khara. Vālmiki Rāmāyaṇa, Aranya Kāṇḍa, 26th Sarga, mentions that the twelve heroes who were Khara’s commanders were: Śyenagāmi, Prthuṛitra, Yājñāśatru, Vihaṅgama, Durjaya, Karavrākṣa, Paruṣa, Kālakārmuka, Meghamālī, Mahāmāli, Sarpasya and Rudhirāsana.

YĀJṆASENA 1. See under Pañcatantra.

YĀJṆASENA II. Drupada, the son of King of Pañcāla. (For more details see under Drupada).

YĀJṆAVĀHA. A warrior of Subrahmanya. There is a reference to him in Mahābhārata, Śālāya Parva, Chapter 45, Verse 80.

YĀJṆAVALKYA. An ancient sage who was a profound scholar.

1) General. Puruṣas say that this sage spent the major part of his life at the court of King Janaka. He was also King Janaka’s priest. In Agni Puruṣa, Chapter 16, it is mentioned that Kalki was Yājñavalkya’s priest. Mahābhārata, Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 4, Verse 51, mentions that Yājñavalkya was a “Brahmavādī son” of Viśvāmitra.

2) Thousand cows. Once King Janaka conducted a Yāga. At that time he wished to find out the most eminent among the sages. He promised to present a thousand cows to the sage who was a consummate scholar. A bag of gold coins was also tied to each horn of the cows. Janaka announced that the sage who claimed to be a consummate scholar might come forward and take the cows with him. No one among the numerous sages who were present, dared to come forward. Yājñavalkya, however, ordered his disciple to take the cows home with him. The other sages questioned his right to claim the cows. Yājñavalkya asserted his right to do so. One of the sages named Arthabhāga stood up and asked him the following question:—

Arthabhāga:—When a man who has not acquired divine knowledge dies, his “Jñānendriyas” (senses of knowledge) are also merged with it. How is it possible for him to accept another body afterwards? “Yājñavalkya:—Karma (action) becomes the cause of his rebirth.”

Next Kahola and many other sages put various questions to him. The substance of their talk is given below:—

Kahola:—What have you to say about the invisible and omnipresent Brahman?

Yājñavalkya:—Your soul is the omni-present Brahman. The soul has no hunger or thirst, fear or desire, old age or death. Those who wish to know the soul, become sages after transcending love of wife, children or worldly riches. The two qualities essential for sages are scholarly and spiritual knowledge.

Gārgi:—Who is the warp and woof of everything?

Yājñā:—It is Brahman. Do not ask further; if you do, your head will be broken to pieces.

Ārupī:—Who is he who exists within? (Antaryāmī).

Yājñā:—He who is contained in Jagat (the universe) without the knowledge of Jagat, he whose body is Jagat, he who controls Jagat as antaryāmī, he is within every one. He cannot be seen, but he sees. He cannot be heard; but he hears. He is capable of thinking; but he is beyond our thoughts. He exists as one who sees, hears and thinks, in all creatures.

Gārgi:—I have two questions to ask. They are as sharp and pointed as two arrows. By what force is fixed that which is above Heaven, below the earth and that which is between them, like warp and woof?

Yājñā:—by the sky.

Gārgi:—by what force is the sky held in position like warp and woof?

Yājñā:—Under the command of God, the sun and moon do not deviate from their orbits. The sky and the earth remain in their respective places. Rivers run making the fields fertile. One who lives and works without the ability to know God does not obtain immortality. He who dies without knowing God is a Kṛpana (spiritual bankrupt). On the contrary, he who knows God attains Mokṣa.

Sākalya:—How many gods are there?

Yājñā:—Thirtythree. They are—8 Vasus, 11 Rudras, 12 Ādityas, Indra and Prajāpati. The 8 Vasus are—Agni, Prthvī, Vāyu, Antariksa, Āditya, Dyau (Heaven), Candra and Stars. The 11 Rudras are the combination of the 10 Jānendiryas and the working of the mind. The ruling deities of the 12 months are known as the 12 Ādityas. They receive into them our lives and our Karman (actions).

Yājñavalkya gave suitable answers to all other questions of Sākalya. At last, he asked Sākalya:—“Now I will ask you a question. Whom do the Upanisads describe? If you do not answer, your head will break.” Sākalya could not answer it. He dropped down with a broken head. He asked the other scholars who had gathered there, if any of them wanted to ask him more questions. But no one came forward. All remained dumb. Then he continued:—“Fresh leaves sprout from a tree which has been cut. If the seed is destroyed, the tree does not grow out of it. How is it that a man is born again after his death?”

No one was able to answer that question. Thus after defeating all of them in argument, Yājñavalkya went home with the cows.

3) In Janaka’s court again. On another occasion, Yājñavalkya went to see King Janaka. The King asked him whether he had come for getting cows or to ask abstruse question. The sage answered that he had come for both. Their conversation continued as follows:—

Janaka:—Jita Muni has said that “Vacana” (word) is Brahman or God. What is your opinion?

Yājñā:—It is correct. But did he say which is the body and abode of God?

Janaka:—No.

Yājñā:—In that case he has said only onefourth about God. Vacana is god’s body and sky, his abode. Brahmacidā depends on the word. The word is Parabrahman. Janaka was highly pleased. He decided to give a thousand bulls to the sage. But Yājñavalkya said that his father’s principle was to give effective knowledge to the pupil and not to receive any daksīṇā (Payment) from him. Janaka again wanted Yājñavalkya to explain clearly what “Brahma Vidyā” means.

Yājñā:—Just as a person can reach his destination by walking or by travelling in a chariot or by sailing in a boat, in order to secure peace for the soul, you are depending on the Upanisads. But although one is learned in Vedas and Āgamas, or adored by others or wealthy, or well-versed in Upaniṣads, unless one has known God—unless one acquired Brahmajñāna—one cannot be said to be gratified. Do you know where you will go after renouncing your body?

Janaka: —I do not know.

Yajñavalkya: I shall tell you. The deity of the right eye is "Inda" (light). People call it "Indra". The deity of the left eye is Indrāṇī, the wife of Indra. Indra is eater and Indrāṇī is food. In a state of consciousness they are separated. (Then the soul is called Vaśivānara).

In a state of dream, the two are united. (Then the soul is called Taijasa). In a state of slumber, the soul is in "Prajñā" state. (Since there is no activity it is called Prajñā). In the fourth or "Turiya" state, one becomes capable of transcending the three other states and to attain Parabrahman. It is a state of fearless transcending birth and death.

The King who was pleased by this teaching dedicated the kingdom of Vidchā and even himself to the sage.

4) In Janaka’s court for the third time. After some years Yajñavalkya went again to Janaka’s court. At that time also there was a philosophical discussion between the King and the sage in the form of questions and answers.

Janaka: —Which is the light that gives us guidance during the day time?

Yajñavalkya: —The Sun.

Janaka: —After sunset which is the light that guides us?

Yajñavalkya: —The Moon.

Janaka: —And in the absence of the sun and moon?

Yajñavalkya: —Agni.

Janaka: —Which is the light that guides us in the absence of the sun, moon and Agni?

Yajñavalkya: —Vacana.

Janaka: —Which is the light that shines in the absence of all these luminaries?

Yajñavalkya: —Ātmajyoti (soul’s light).

Janaka: —Who is Ātman?

Yajñavalkya: —"Puruṣa" who is formed by the union of "vyāna" in praśna (lives) and jyotiś (light) in the heart. The soul is disposed to action with the help of intelligence. In the end it transcends the body, senses and mind and attains Mokṣa. In the state of consciousness the soul’s activities become manifest to us. When in sleep, after deputing "Prāna" for the protection of the body, the soul remains outside the body. The senses become inactive. Therefore we should never wake up one who is asleep. When the soul remains in the body and the senses are active, it is in a most vigilant state. Thus the soul is above the states of wakefulness, dream and slumber. The soul is the divine light of pure energy.

Janaka who was pleased, gave the sage a thousand cows more. After that Yajñavalkya spoke about liberation from worldly bonds.

Yajñavalkya: —The soul has no connection with the three conditions. Just as the actions in a dream do not affect the soul, the actions in a wakeful state also do not affect it. Just as a fish jumps from one side of the river to the other and back again, life keeps jumping from the state of wakefulness to the state of slumber and vice versa.

Just as a kite goes up flying and then comes back to its nest, one moves from the state of wakefulness to sleep and back again. In deep slumber, he merges with God, but he does not know that. In that state, the father or the mother does not have the knowledge that they are the father or mother.

After that Yajñavalkya explained the nature of the soul and the various aspects of its working in a state of wakefulness and of slumber. He added:— "As long as there is "Kāma" (desire) there is "Karman" also. Life goes on passing from birth to death and from death to birth. One attains perfection when one is above all desires, and acquires the highest divine knowledge. He is liberated from birth and death and becomes immortal. By jñāna, dāna and tapas we become self-purified and thus become worthy of the highest divine grace. We have to go from the world of Karman (action) to the world of Ātman (soul). One who has acquired Brahmajñāna (knowledge of Brahman) becomes a Brahmaṇa.

Hearing these famous teachings of Yajñavalkya, Janaka became his permanent disciple.

5) His end. Yajñavalkya had two wives named Kalyāṇī and Maitreyī. After giving his all to his wives he passed into immortality. (Bṛhadāraṇyaka; M.B. Śaṅṭi Parva, Chapters 3-9).

6) His works. Yajñavalkya has written a Śrāvaṇa on the subject of law. "Mitakṣarā" is its famous commentary. Mitakṣarā is the highest authoritative treatise on Law in South India.

7) Other details.

(i) Yajñavalkya flourished in Yudhiṣṭhira's assembly. (M.B. Śaṅṭi Parva, Chapter 4, Verse 12).

(ii) He was also a member of Indra's assembly. (M.B. Śaṅṭi Parva, Chapter 7, Verse 12).

(iii) Yajñavalkya was the priest at the Rājāśyā Yajña of Dharmaputra. (M.B. Śaṅṭi Parva, Chapter 33, Verse 35).

(iv) Yajñavalkya had his knowledge of Vedas from Śūryadeva. (M.B. Śaṅṭi Parva, Chapter 318, Verse 6).

YAJURVEDA.

1) General. The Caturvedas are:—Rgveda, Yajurveda Śāmaveda and Atharvaveda. Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Part 3, Chapter 3, mentions that Vaiṣampāyana, the disciple of Vedavyāsa, divided Yajurveda into twenty-seven branches and taught them to his disciples. Among these disciples there was Yajñavalkya, the son of Brahmarāta. It was Viṣṇa who divided the Vedas into four parts. After dividing them, the sage Viṣṇa taught Rgveda to Paila, Yajurveda to Vaiṣampāyana, Śāmaveda to Jaimini and Atharvaveda to Sumanu.

The rules for Japa, Homa etc. of Yajurveda were taught to Viṣṇa by Agnideva. If all the rules of Yajurveda are correctly observed, all desires will be fulfilled. There are special rules for the observance of homa for the fulfillment of particular desires.

YAKRLLOMĀ. An Indian town. (Mahābhārata, Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 9, Verse 46).

YAKṢA.

1) General. A class of Semi-gods. There are chiefly three classes of inhabitants in Heaven:—Devas, Ganadevas and Upadevas. Gana-devas consist of the 12 Ādityas, 10 Viśvadevas, 8 Vasus, 36 Tūṣitas, 64 Ābhā-varas, 49 Anilas 220 Mahārājikas, 12 Śādyas and 11 Rudras.

Among the Upadevas there are 10 subdivisions. They are, Vidyādharas, Apsaras, Yakṣas, Rākṣasas, Gandharvas, Kinnaras, Piśācas, Guhyakas, Siddhas and Bhūtas.
2) Origin. There are different views relating to the origin of the Yaksás. In Mahábhárata, Ádi Parva, Chapter 1 we find that the Yaksás took birth after Brahmacárya's birth from "Viráti Purusa's" mind. According to a statement in Agni Puráña, Chapter 19, Yaksas and Rákasa were born from Muni, the grand daughter of Kaśyapa-prajapáti. Thus Yaksas and Rákasa are related as brothers. In Mahábhárata, Ádi Parva, Chapter 66, Verse 7, there is another passage which says that Yaksas are the progeny of the sage Pulumayá.

3) Other details.
   i) Once Sūkadeva sang the story of Mahábhárata to the Yaksás. (M.B. Ádi Parva, Chapter 1, Verse 108).
   ii) Lakhs of Yaksás remain in Kubera's assembly, worshipping him. (M.B. Sábhá Parva, Chapter 10, Verse 18).
   iii) There are Yaksás in Brahmacárya's assembly also. (M.B. Sábhá Parva, Chapter 11, Verse 56).
   iv) Kubera is the King of Yaksás. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 111, Verse 10).
   v) Bhumíraka once drove away Yaksás and Rákása. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 16, Verse 57).
   vi) On another occasion, Sunda and Upásaunda defeated and persecuted the Yaksás. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 208, verse 7).

YAKŠAGRAHA. A Graha (Evil Spirit) connected with Yaksás. Mahábhárata, Vana Parva, Chapter 230, Verse 53, mentions that people become mad owing to the adverse influence of this Graha.

YAKŠAVĀTA. A place made famous in the Puráňas. In Deví Bhágavatá, 5th Skandha, there is a statement saying that it was at this place that the Dánavá called Rambha took a she-buffalo as his wife.

YAKŠAYUDDHAPARVA. A sub-division of Vana Parva, in Mahábhárata, Chapters 158 to 164 of Vana Parva, are included in this sub-division.

YAKŠEŚVARA. An incarnation of Siva. The devas were puffed with pride when they secured Aníra by churning the ocean of milk. In order to allay their pride, Siva took birth as Yakšeśvara.

One day he put a blade of grass on the ground before them and asked them to take it up. Although the Devas tried their best, they were not able even to move it. It was only then that they became convinced of their own incapacity. (Siva Puráña, Sátradra Śádhita).

YAKŠI (YAKŚINI). Women folk of Yaksás. Agni Puráña, Chapter 50 mentions that the images of Yaksí to be installed in temples should have fixed and long eyes. Mahábhárata, Vana Parva, Chapter 54, Verse 105, states that Yakśini is a Deví and by eating the prasásá (naivedya) of the Deví one would be absolved of the sin of Brahmahatyá (killing a Bráhma). YAKŚI TIRTHA. A famous sacred place situated on the borders of Kuruksetra. By bathing at this place one's desires would be fulfilled. The place is also famous for offering worship to the Píts. A visit to this place will be rewarded with the benefit of Ávamedha Yága. Mahábhárata, Vana Parva, Chapter 83, Verse 23 mentions that this tirtha was founded by Páraśuráma.

YAKŠMÁ (RÁJAYAKŚMÁ). The disease of consumption (Tuberculosis). There is a story in Mahábhárata which says that this disease was created by Dakṣa Prájapáti. (For more details see under Candra).

YAMA. Kála. (For more details see under Kála).

YÁMA (S). A band of special gods of the Sváyambhuva Manvantara (See under Manvantara).

YAMADÚTA. One of the Brahmacárya sons of Visvámitra. (M.B. Anuśásana Parva, Chapter 4, Verse 51).

YAMAJÍHVÁ. A prostitute. In Káthásarítságará, Sáktiyáslambaka, 1st Taranga, there is a story about her as follows:

In the city of Citrakúta Ratnaváma a wealthy Váíya, had a son named Isvarávarma. In order to avoid his son falling under the influence of prostitutes, the father decided to teach "veśyántranam", to Isvarávarma while he was a boy. Yamajíhvá, the prostitute undertook this task for a reward of 1000 Nískas. (a gold coin of that time).

After completing his education on the wiles and tricks of prostitutes, he was sent by his father to start a trade with a capital of five crores of Nískas. Isvarávarma and his friend Arthadatta on their way, stopped at a park on the outskirts of the city of Káñcana Purá. There he fell a victim to the bewitching charms of a prostitute named Sundári. He spent the lion's share of the money given by his father, on her. On the advice of his friend Arthadatta he was about to leave the place when Sundári pretended to be in danger of falling into a well and asked for his help. Isvarávarma was again caught in her trap and he was forced to spend the rest of his money also on her. When he was rendered penniless the prostitute and her mother deserted him.

Isvarávarma returned home to his father, empty-handed. Ratnaváma took his son to Yamajíhvá again and told him the whole story. He said that his son fell into this plight because Yamajíhvá's training was not effective. After listening to the whole story, Yamajíhvá promised to recover the whole amount lost by Isvarávarma. She brought her trained monkey named "Ala" and placed 1,000 Nískas before him. She taught him to swallow the whole amount. After that, she taught him to give out by vomiting, the swallowed money in installments of twenty, thirty, forty etc., as ordered. Then Yamajíhvá said to Isvarávarma:—"Take this monkey with you and go to Sundári's place. Make him swallow the money in secret and get it again from him, in installments in her presence. She would think that the monkey is an inexhaustible source of wealth and would be prepared to buy it at any cost—even by offering her whole wealth in return. At first you must pretend to be unwilling to part with the monkey. In the end, you must make him swallow 2,000 Nískas which he would be able to give out in two days at the rate of 1,000 on each day. Exchange him for her whole wealth and leave the place immediately." With this advice Yamajíhvá sent Isvarávarma with the monkey. He went to Káñcana Purá in the company of his friend Arthadatta after receiving two crores of Nískas from his father. When Sundári knew that Isvarávarma had come again with more money, she welcomed him with due respect and invited him to live with her. He accepted her invitation and took up his residence there. One day, he brought the monkey into the house and in the presence of Sundári asked him to produce various amounts of money for different purposes. The monkey promptly vomited the various amounts separately without making any mistake. Sundári and her mother Makarakáti were naturally amazed at the marvellous performance of the monkey. Iśvaravarmā explained that the monkey was capable of giving in this way, 1,000 Nīṣkās daily. Sundāri made up her mind to purchase the wonderful animal at any price. She requested Iśvaravarmā to give her the monkey in exchange for the crores of Nīṣkās she had taken from him earlier. But he turned down her request. At last she persuaded him to sell the monkey to her for the entire wealth she possessed. Iśvaravarmā secretly made the monkey swallow 2,000 Nīṣkās before handing it over to Sundāri and left the place at once to go to Svarṇadvīpa for trade.

Āla, the monkey gave Sundāri 1,000 Nīṣkās on each of the first two days, but on the third day she was disillusioned. In her disappointment and anger, she beat Āla. The enraged monkey attacked both Sundāri and Makarakti and harmed them by biting and tearing with its nails. They in turn, beat him to death. Thus Sundāri lost all her ill-gotten wealth and was reduced to utter poverty and distress.

YAMAKA. A region in ancient India. The inhabitants of this place were called "Yamakas". Mahābhārata, Sabha Parva, Chapter 52, refers to the presents offered by the princes and people of Yamaka at Yudhīśthira's Aśvamedhāyajā.

YAMASĀBHĀ. Yama's assembly. This assembly is described in Mahābhārata, Sabha Parva, Chapter 8. It was Vīvākarmā who built Yamasābhā. It is 100 yojanas in length and 100 yojanas in width. Although it is illuminated with sun-light it has an equable temperature. Sadness, old age, hunger or thirst are unknown there. There is a dense growth of Kalpavyūkas. All the dead people who were famous in ancient times are members of this assembly.

YAMĪ. A daughter of Sūrya. One of the wives of Sūrya was Samyā, the daughter of Vīvākarmā. Three children, Manu, Yama and Yami, were born to Sūrya by Samyā. (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Part 3, Chapter 2).

YĀMĪ. A wife of Dharmadeva. The ten wives of Dharmadeva are—Arundhatī, Vasu, Yami, Lambā, Bhānu, Marutvati, Saṅkālpa, Muhūrtā, Sādhya and Viṣṇā. (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Part 1, Chapter 15).

YĀMĪNĪ. A daughter of Dakṣa Prajāpati. She was one of the wives of Kaśyapa. (Bhāgavata, 6th Skandha).

YAMUNĀ. Another name for the river Kālindī. (See also under Kālindī).

1) How the water in Kālindī turned Black:—The water in the river Kālindī is black in colour. There is a story behind the changing of the colour of this river-water into black. Originally it was clear. After the death of Sati, Dakṣa's daughter, Siva broke up Dakṣa's yāga and went about rambling round the world. Kāmadeva who saw Siva who had lost his wife (Sati) shot him with "Ummāḍāstra" (an arrow causing madness and excitement). Siva, in his excitement, always thinking about Sati, wandered about, finding peace and rest nowhere. In his excited and restless state he plunged himself into Kālindī river. Just then, the clear water of the river turned black. (Yamana Purāṇa, Chapter 6).

2) The greatness of Kālindī (Yamunā). The Purāṇas declare that by bathing in the holy Kālindī one attains heaven. There is a story illustrating this in Padma Purāṇa, Chapter 30, as follows:—

Long ago, in Kṛṣṇyuga, there lived in the country of Niṣadha, a very wealthy Vaiṣya, by name Hemakunḍala. By doing various kinds of business, he had earned eight crores of golden coins. By that time he was advancing in age. At this stage he began to think of the transitoriness of worldly pleasures and set apart one-sixth of his entire wealth for charitable purposes. He built two temples—one for Viṣṇu and the other for Śiva. He offered daily worship to the gods and spent money in generous hospitality. His two sons, Śrikunḍala and Vikuṇḍala, were growing up. He entrusted the burden of domestic affairs to them and went to the forest to perform austere tapas, after which he attained Viṣṇuloka.

His sons, who were intoxicated with their affluent and luxurious life, deviated from the path of virtue and began to indulge in all kinds of sensual pleasures. It did not take long for them to be reduced to utter poverty. Their relatives and dependants left them to their fate and at last, they began to resort to stealing. For fear of the King, the public and the law, they changed their residence to the woods. One of them went to a mountain and the other to a forest. One day, the elder brother was caught by a tiger and the younger was bit by a snake. Both of them died on the same day. Yama's agents took both to Yamaloka. Dharmarāja (Yama) ordered the elder brother to be sent to Naraka (Hell) and the younger one (Vikuṇḍala) to be sent to Heaven.

Vikuṇḍala who knew that he did not deserve Heaven by any standards, asked Yama's agent how this had happened. The agent gave him this answer:—"There was a Brāhmaṇa well-versed in Vedic lore, who was the son of Harimitra. His āśrama was on the southern bank of Yamunā. While you were living in the forest, you were associated with him. As a result of that contact, it so happened that you bathed for two months in the holy river Kālindī, the waters of which have the power of absolving sinners. By your bath in the first month you were liberated from all sins. By the second you have become eligible for Heaven. You have qualified yourself for the eternal bliss of Heaven, by that holy act."

Yamunā is being worshipped as a goddess. Devotees of this goddess imagine her as riding on a tortoise, carrying a water pot in her hand and is of black complexion. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 50).

YAMUNĀ 1. A town in ancient India. (Mahābhārata, Bhisma Parva, Chapter 9, Verse 51).

YAMUNĀ 11. A mountain, made famous in the Purāṇas, standing between the rivers Gaṅgā and Yamunā. (M. B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 68, Verse 3).

YAMUNĀDVIPA. An island in the river Yamunā. It was on this island that Vyāsa was conceived as the result of the union of sage Parāśara with Satyavati. (M. B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 60, Verse 2).

YAMUNĀPRABHĀVA. A sacred place. Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 84, Verse 44, mentions that the man who bathes here obtains the reward of Aśvamedha Yāga and enters Heaven.

YAMUNĀTĪRTHA. A holy tirtha on the bank of the river Sarasvati. Mahābhārata, Sāliya Parva, Chapter 49, Verse 11, refers to a Rājasūya Yajña performed at this place by Varuṇa, the son of Aditi.

YĀNA. One of the royal qualities like Sandhi, Vigraha etc. (For more details see under Ṣaḍgūṇas).
YĀNASANDHIPARVA. A subdivision of Mahābhārata, Udyoga Parva, Chapters 47-71 of Udyoga Parva, are included in this Parva.

YASAHIKETU. A King of the city called Sobbhavatī. He was one of the chief characters in the sixth story told by the famous Vētāla in Kathāsarasītāgara.

YASAS. Father of Kalki, the tenth incarnation of Mahāviśu. Agni Puranā, Chapter 16, mentions that towards the end of Kāliyuga all people will become atheists, there will be an intermixture of castes and all people will become thieves and devoid of virtue. At that time, the 15 branches of the Veda called Vajasaneyas alone will be the authority. Mlecchas (low-class people) assuming the form of Kings will begin to eat human beings. Agni Puranā states further that at that time, Lord Viṣṇu will incarnate as Kalki, the son of Yaśas and Yājñivalkya’s priest and after training himself in archery and weapons, annihilate all Mlecchas.

YASASVINI. A woman follower of Subrahmapura. (M.B. Śāla Parva, Chapter 46, Verse 10)

YASASVINI II. A sister of Pāncāli. (Bhāgavata, 9th Skandha)

YĀSA. A famous Sanskrit Grammarian of ancient times. Although the people of India always believed in the greatness of the Vedas, the Vedas became unintelligible even to scholars owing to changes in language and differences in grammar. It was YĀSA and Sāyaṇa who saved the country from that plight. YĀSA became famous by composing “Nirukta” (etymology). There is a reference to this ancient sage in Mahābhārata, Chapter 342, Verse 72.

YASOBHADRA. A son of King Manobhadrā. Padma Puranā, Kriyākhaṇḍa mentions that YASOBHADRA happened to be born in a royal family because in his previous birth he had bathed in the Gāṅgā.

YASODĀ. Foster-mother of Śrī Kṛṣṇa. How she became Śrī Kṛṣṇa’s fostermother, is explained in a story given in Bhāgavata, 10th Skandha:— Once Drona, one of the Aśvānas, and his wife Dharā, caused displeasure to Brahmā. In his anger, Brahmā cursed them to be born in the world as human beings and to spend a life-time on earth, tending cattle. Drona became sad and with tears in his eyes, prayed to Brahmā that during his life on earth he should be blessed with Viṣṇu’s daršana. Brahmā granted that prayer. It was in fulfillment of this prayer that Drona was born as Nandagopa and Dharā as Yaśodā in Ambāḍa.

YASODHARA I. Son of Durmukha, who fought on the side of the Pāṇḍavas against the Kauravas. (Mahābhārata, Drona Parva, Chapter 164, Verse 5).

YASODHARA II. A son of Śrī Kṛṣṇa by Rukmiṇidevi. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 14, Verse 33).

YASODHARA. Daughter of King Trigarta. She was married by Hasti, King of the Pūru dynasty and they had a son named Vīkaṇṭha. (M.B. Aḍī Parva, Chapter 95, Verse 35).

YASOVATI I. The name of Iṣāna’s city. Devī Bhāgavata, 8th Skandha mentions that god Iṣāna, the ruler of the north-eastern part, lives in the city called Yaśovatī.

YASOVATI II. A princess. (See under Ekaṇvara.)

YATHĀVĀSA. A muni (sage) who followed the Vānaprasthadharmā. He attained Heaven as a Vānaprasthadharmā. (M.B. Śānti Parva, Chapter 244, Verse 17).

YATI I. A king who was the eldest son of Nahuṣa and the eldest brother of Yayāti. Mahābhārata, Aḍī Parva, Chapter 75, Verse 31, mentions that he became a yogi and lived in the forest.

YATI II. One of the sons of Viśvāmitra. (Mahābhārata, Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 4, Verse 56).

YATI III. A community-group. They were perhaps enemies of yajhas. There are references to them in various parts of the Rgveda.

YATINĀTHA. An incarnation of Śiva. Ahuka, a forest-dweller and his wife who lived in Arbuda (Abu) mountain were blessed by Yatinātha and as a result of the blessing they were born as Nala and Damayanti in their next birth. (Śiva Purāṇa, Satarudra Sanhitā).

YATUDHĀNA. One of the sons of Kaśyapa and Surāsā. All Rākṣasas who were born in this family are known as “Yatudhānas”.

YATUDHĀNA I. A Rākṣasī who was born from the sacrificial fire when King Vṛṣādharbhi performed a yāga. As directed by the king, she proceeded to the forest and destroy the Saptarśis. She remained there as the owner of the tank in which the sages used to take bath. Seeing her standing alone there, they enquired who she was. She answered that she was guarding the tank. She allowed them to enter into the tank after each of them explained the meaning of his name. Accordingly, the sages Atri, Vasiṣṭha, Kaśyapa, Viśvāmitra, Gautama and Bharadvāja explained the meaning of their names before getting down into the tank. At last when sage Sunassakha’s turn came, he said that he was not prepared to explain in detail, the meaning of his name and that she should be satisfied with his statement that he was the sage Sunassakha. Yatudhāna became angry on hearing it and insisted on his giving the meaning of his name. Sunassakha with a single stroke with his “tridanda” (trident) killed her. Sunassakha was really Indra himself. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 93).

YATUKARNA. A Devaguru. (See under Guruparamparā).

YAUDHEYA I. A son of Dharmaputra. Mahābhārata. Aḍī Parva, Chapter 95, Verse 76, states that this prince was born to Dharmaputra by Devikādevī, daughter of Govāsana, king of Śibi land.

YAUDHEYA II. A native of Yaudheya country. Mahābhārata, Sabhā Parva, Chapter 52, Verse 14, mentions, that the Yaudheyas had participated in Yudhiṣṭhīrā’s Rājasūya.

YAUDHEYA III. A king. According to Matsya Purāṇa, he was the son of Prativindhyā.

YAUGHANDHĀYANA. Minister of Prince Udayana who is celebrated in the Purāṇas.

YAUNA. A particular caste. Mahābhārata, Śanti Parva, Chapter 207, states that they were Cāndālas and were as ignorant as animals and birds.

YAVANĀSAV. Māndhātā, the son of Yuvanāśavā. (For more information see under Māndhātā).

YAVUDHĀNĪ. Son of Sāyaki the Yādava King. This hero who escaped from the ruin of the Yādava dynasty was presented with the region lying in the Sarasvati river valley, by Yudhiṣṭhīrā. (M.B. Mausala Parva, Chapter 8, Verse 19).

YAVAKRITI. I. A sage. (See under Arvāvasu).

YAVAKRITI II. Mahābhārata, Śanti Parva, Chapter 208, Verse 26, refers to Yavakrītī who was the son of Aṅgiras and the supporter of the eastern land.

YAVAKŚĀ. A famous river in Bhāratavarṣa (Mahābhārata, Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 9, Verse 30).
YAYATI

YAVANA

1) General. There are many references to Yavanas and the land of Yavanas in the Purāṇas. There is a statement in Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 174, Verse 36, that the Yavana race takes its source from Turvasu, the son of Yayati. There is another version in Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 174, Verse 36, that Yavanas were born from the womb and the sides of Nandini.

2) Other details.

(i) Arjuna's brother Sahadeva once conquered the Yavana land. (M.B. Sābhā Parva, Chapter 31, Verse 73).

(ii) Mahābhārata, Sabhā Parva, Chapter 32, Verse 17, mentions that on another occasion, Nakula defeated the Yavanas.

(iii) According to Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 183, Verse 33, the world will be filled with Yavanas and other Mleccha (low class) kings.

(iv) In the course of his conquests, Karna once subdued the Yavanas. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 254, Verse 8).

(v) Mahābhārata, Udyoga Parva, Chapter 19, Verse 21, mentions that king Sudākṣira of Kamboja approached Duryodhana with an "Aksauhiṇī" along with the Yavanas, to take part in Bhārata Yuddha.

(vi) Mahābhārata, Bhīma Parva, Chapter 9, Verse 65 states that at the time of Mahābhārata, Yavana land was part of India.

(vii) Originally Yavanas were Kṣatriyas. But they became Śudras by the curse of Brāhmaṇas. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 35, Verse 18).

(viii) Once there was a duel between a Yavana king and Mucukunda. (For further details, see under Mucukunda).

YAVASA. A particular region of Plākṣadvipa. Bhāgavata, 5th Skandha says that Plākṣadvipa had seven divisions which were Śivam, Yavasam, Subhadrām, Sāntam, Mokṣam, Aṃśatam and Abhayam.

YAVINARA. A king of the Pāru dynasty. Bāhyāśva was his father. Five sons were born to Bāhyāśva. They were Mukula, Sṛṇjaya, Bhridiśtha, Yavinara and Kramila. These five persons became famous in later ages under the name of Pāṇacalas. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 278).

YAYATA. An ancient holy place in India. King Yayati conducted a Yāga at this place. From that time the place became sacred. (M.B. Sāla Parva, Chapter 41, Verse 32).

YAYATI. An eminent king of the lunar dynasty.

1. Genealogy and Birth. From Viṣṇu were descended in the following order—Brāhma—Atrih—Candra—Buddha—Purūravas—Āyuḥ—Nahuṣa—Yayati.

Sage Atri had three sons—Candra, Durvāsas and Dattātreya—by his wife Anuṣūya. Candra's son was Budha, Budha's son was Purūravas, Purūravas's son was Āyuḥ, Āyuḥ's son was Nahuṣa who had six sons—Yatī, Yayati, Sainyati, Āyati, and Dhrava. Yayati had two wives, Devayāni and Sarmiṣṭhā. Two sons, Yatū and Purūravas, were born to Devayāni. Of them, Yatū became the founder of Yaduvaṃśa. Sarmiṣṭhā had three sons who were Druhyu, Anudruhyu and Pṛūr. The Puruvaṅsā traces its origin to Puru.

2. Yayati's marriage. Yayati married Devayāni, the daughter of sage Śukra and Sarmiṣṭhā, the daughter of Vṛṣaparvā. There is a story behind this marriage, given in Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 76.

Once there was keen rivalry between Devas and Asuras. For achieving victory Devas accepted Bhṛṣapati and Asuras accepted Śukra as their preceptors. Although Devas slaughtered all Asuras they were restored to life by Śukra by the power of his mantra. Devas and Asuras resumed their battle. "Mṛtasaṇjīvanī" (the art of reviving the dead) was then unknown to the gods. Devas sent the handsome youth Kaca to Śukra, to learn Mṛtasaṇjīvanī from him. There, Kaca fell in love with Devayāni, Śukra's daughter. But after acquiring the knowledge about Mṛtasaṇjīvanī he returned, without marrying Devayāni. At the time of his departure, Kaca and Devayāni cursed each other. Devayāni's curse was that Kaca's newly acquired knowledge would not produce the desired result, while Kaca's curse was that Devayāni would not be married by any youthful rśi. Sarmiṣṭhā was the daughter of Vṛṣaparvā, the Daitya king. Devayāni was the daughter of Śukra, the Daitya preceptor. One day they were enjoying a bath in a forest brook with their maids, after leaving their clothes on the bank of the stream. At that time Devendra who came that way, transformed himself into a strong wind and carried all the clothes to a place and put all of them in a heap. Seeing this, the women rushed out of the water and in the hurried confusion in snatching their garments Devayāni and Sarmiṣṭhā happened to put on each other's clothes. A quarrel took place between them on this mistake and the angry Sarmiṣṭhā pushed Devayāni into an unused well. Thinking that Devayāni was dead, Sarmiṣṭhā and her maids went to the palace.

At this time, Yayati who was a king of the lunar dynasty happened to come there exhausted after his hunting. After rescuing Devayāni from the well and enquiring about her identity and the circumstances in which she fell into the well, he returned to his palace Devayāni sent her maid Ghūrkā to her father and informed him about her mishap. The father, sage Śukra became angry towards Vṛṣaparvā and came down from Daityaloka and settled down in the forest with his daughter. Afraid of his preceptor's curse and anger, Vṛṣaparvā came to Śukra and offered profuse apologies to him for his daughter's misconduct. But Śukra answered that he would be prepared to forgive only if Sarmiṣṭhā with 1000 maids would go and serve Devayāni. Finding no other way, Vṛṣaparvā yielded to the condition. Soon Sarmiṣṭhā and her 1000 maids went to the forest and began to serve Devayāni. Śukra returned to Daityaloka. Some time after this, Yayati came to the forest one day for hunting. There he met Devayāni, being attended by many maids. In the conversation that followed, Devayāni was able to recognize Yayati. She fell in love with him. But Yayati insisted that he was not prepared to marry her without the consent of Śukrācārya. So she sent one of her maids to her father and informed him of her desire. The sage readily agreed and had their marriage performed. He also presented them 1,000 maids. After the ceremony, Yayati returned to his palace with his bride. Sarmiṣṭhā and the 2,000 maids also accompanied them. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapters 76-81).

3. Yayati's domestic Life. After his arrival in his capital city, Yayati made arrangements for Devayāni's residence in his own palace while Sarmiṣṭhā took up her residence in Asokavanikā. In due course, Devayāni gave birth to a son. The sight of the child roused the maternal instincts of Sarmiṣṭhā who spent a thousand years in heart-burning. One day, while she was brooding alone in her garden, Yayāti happened to come there. As they met, their hearts were moved by tender feelings. Sarmiṣṭhā approached Yayāti and begged for a son. But he tried to evade her by pleading that it was not proper to do anything in violation of Dharma. But in the end, he had to yield to her earnest supplications and philosophical arguments. Thus Sarmiṣṭhā conceived a son in secret. When the child was born and it grew up, Devayāni’s mind was constantly vexed with the thought as to who was the father. Once in an angry mood she questioned Sarmiṣṭhā herself about it. She answered that the child’s father was a sage whose identity she could not ascertain in the excitement of her union with him. Any way, this answer satisfied Devayāni.

Soon after, another son was born to Devayāni. The first boy was named Yadu and the second son, Turvasu. As a result of the secret relations between Yayāti and Sarmiṣṭhā, three boys were born to her and they were named Druhyu, Anudruhyu and Pūru, respectively. These boys also grew up in Asokavanikā.

Once Devayāni was in her garden with her husband and children. Just then, Sarmiṣṭhā’s children also happened to come there. Devayāni who somehow had her own suspicions, enquired of them their parentage and the innocent children replied that their mother was Sarmiṣṭhā and their father was Yayāti. Devayāni who became furious, immediately went to Asuraloka and informed her father Sukra about it. On hearing it, the sage who was beside himself with anger owing to his paternal affection, cursed Yayāti so that he fell a victim to the infirmities of old age. Yayāti entreated Sukra to withdraw the curse since he had not enjoyed his youth to the full.

Sukra lifted the curse by assuring him that one of Yayāti’s sons would accept his father’s old age in exchange for his youth and the son would be crowned King after Yayāti. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapters 82 and 83).

4) Rejuvenation. Yayāti asked his eldest son Yadu for his youthfulness. But the latter was not prepared to exchange it for his father’s old age. Next the father approached his younger sons, Turvasu, Druhyu, and Anudruhyu, with the same request, but all of them in turn refused to oblige him. Even though Yayāti promised to return the youthfulness to them after a thousand years, they refused to exchange it for his old age. Yayāti in his anger, cursed Yadu that his progeny would never become Kings. Turvasu’s family would be completely destroyed and Druhyu would float down the river, with unfulfilled desires and faded prosperity. Pūru wholeheartedly accepted his father’s old age in exchange for his youth and went to the forest. From that day Yayāti began his reign with a cheerful heart. (M.B. Ādi parva, Chapters 84 and 85).

In Padma Purāṇa, there is a slightly different version about the way in which Yayāti fell a victim to the infirmities of old age. It is as follows:—Seeing the rigorous observance of Yayāti’s virtuous life, Devendra began to be alarmed at the thought that he might be dislodged from his place. He called his charioteer Mātali and ordered him to bring Yayāti with him to Indraloka. When Mātali failed in his mission, Devendra sent some Gandharvas to enact the drama of “Vāmanāvatārā” before Yayāti. Enchanted by the charm and performance of Rati on the stage, the King became irresistibly fascinated by the female sex.

Once the Rākṣasī named Jarā and Madana got access to Yayāti’s body. While in that state, one day he went to the forest for hunting. There he happened to meet a beautiful girl named “Aṣrubindumati”. From her companion-maid, Viśālā, the King came to know of her history. Viśālā said to Yayāti—“Long ago when Kāmadeva was burnt Rati was in deep grief. The gods were moved to pity by her tears and they restored Kāma to life. Rati who was extremely happy, began to shed tears of joy. A beautiful girl was born from the tears which fell from her left eye. This maid who is standing before you is that girl. She is now looking for a suitable person for her Svayamvara.” On hearing this story the King expressed his desire to marry her. Aṣrubindumati agreed to become his wife on condition that he exchanged his old age with some young person for his youthfulness.

Yayāti returned to his palace and asked each of his sons to give him his youth. Pūru alone fulfilled his father’s desire. After this Yayāti married Aṣrubindumati. But he was compelled to submit to another condition also, that he should not maintain any contact with his other wives. Devayāni and Sarmiṣṭhā naturally, became distressed and furious when they saw Yayāti and Aṣrubindumati as husband and wife. So Yayāti asked Yadu to kill both of them. But Yadu refused to obey him. Yayāti who became angry at this, cursed his son that one of his descendants would marry his uncle’s daughter and become heir to his mother’s wealth.

After some time, on Menakā’s advice, Aṣrubindumati urged Yayāti to go on a visit to Heaven. So he entrusted his kingdom to Pūru and went to Vaikuṇṭha.

5) Yayāti’s reign. The Purāṇas describe Yayāti as a noble and eminent King. Some of the events which took place during his reign and which deserve special praise, are given below:

(i) Gift of cows. Once when King Yayāti was in the company of his subjects, a Brahmaṇa approached him with a request for Gurudakṣiṇā. At once Yayāti gave him a gift of 1,000 cows. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 195).

(ii) Yayāti and Gālava. See para 6 under Gālava.

(iii) His end. After a thousand years, Yayāti handed over his kingship to Pūru and went to the forest. He spent many years living in Bhrgutuñja in the company of sages, and feeding on fruits, roots, etc. and in the end died in the forest and attained Heaven.

(iv) Yayāti’s fall from Heaven. Yayāti remained in Heaven for many years. Once he insulted the Devas, Indra and other gods and kings in the divine assembly. The gods looked at one another, wondering who this proud fellow was. They asked how this man reached Heaven without renouncing his pride. In the meantime Yayāti lost his balance and fell down from Heaven to the earth. While descending, he prayed that he should fall in the midst of good men.

Just at this time, four kings named Pratardana, Vasumana, Sibi and Aśtaka were performing a Yāga in Naimiṣāranya. Yayāti happened to fall head downwards into their midst. But since they caught him in his fall he did not crash to the ground. He explained his story to them. They allowed him to accept the fruit of their Yañña and to go to Heaven. But since he was a Ksatriya he told them he had no right to it. Just then, his daughter Mādhavi arrived there. She allowed him to take half of the divine grace which she had earned and with the help of it Yayāti ascended to Heaven again. (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 120).

6) Other details.

(i) Yayāti witnessed the battle between Kauravas and Pāṇḍavas which was fought as a result of the theft of King Virāṭa's cows. (M.B. Virāta Parva, Chapter 56, Verse 9).

(ii) In Mahābhārata, Sabhā Parva, Chapter 8, Verse 8, it is stated that King Yayāti continues to be in Yama's assembly.

(iii) Yayāti once gave 1,000 cows to a Brāhmaṇa as "Gurudakṣīṇa". (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 195).

(iv) He came riding in Indra's chariot and witnessed the battle between Arjuna and Kṛpačārya, from the sky. (M.B. Virāta Parva, Chapter 56, Verse 9).

(v) Mahābhārata, Udyoga Parva, Chapter 115, mentions that Yayāti had conducted 1,000 Yāgas and that he was the leader of all Kings.

YAYĀTIPATANA. A holy place. Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 82, Verse 48, mentions that a visit to this place will give the same reward as an Āśvamedha Yāga.

YĀYĀVARĀ(S). A particular section of Brahmans. Their special feature is that they wander about here and there, following the course of life of the sages. Mahābhārata, Adi Parva, Chapter 13, mentions that the reputed sage Jaratākūr was a Yāyāvarā.

YODHYA. A country in ancient India. In Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 254, we read that this country was conquered by Karga.

YOGA I. A sage who was the grandson of Śvāyambhuva Manu and son of Śraddhā. Yoga was born to Śraddhā by Dharma. (Bhāgavata, 4th Skandha).

YOGA II. It is Jñāna that reveals Brahmā. Yoga is the concentration on Brahmā. Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 372, mentions that Yoga is the perfect union of Jīvātmā and Paramātmā.

In fact Yoga is activity with the body as its basis. It may be doubted how a mere physical karman helps Parabrahmadarsāna. But Mahārṣis assert that there is an inseparable connection between matter and soul. Matter and soul are merely the two phases of the single “Aṣṭīva”. The object of Yoga is to achieve union with Parabrahman; in other words, to attain Mokṣa. The recitation of mantras is important in many disciplines connected with the practice of Yoga. The letters and words of mantras are so arranged that their recitation in the proper manner produces profound and favourable effects in the body. The habitual recitation of mantras helps the practice of Yoga.

There are two broad divisions of Yoga—Hatha Yoga and Rāja Yoga. The two are interconnected and have to be practised simultaneously. Hatha Yoga is mainly concerned with disciplining the body by various kinds of exercises. Standing in Pañcāgni with the arms held aloft; standing on one leg or standing on the head are some of these exercises. Rāja Yoga aims at arousing Prajñā by control of the senses.

Rāja Yoga invoves the practice of eight disciplines. They are:—Yama, Niyama, Asana, Prāţyāhāra, Dhāraṇā, Dhyāna and Samādhi. An account of each of these is given below:

i) Yama. Yama means refraining from evil courses or sinful things like cruelty or dishonesty. Yama demands the practice of Ahinsā, satya, asteya, brahmacya and aparigraha. (Ahinsā = non-violence or not killing any creature. Satya = truth; practising truth in thoughts, words and deeds. Asteya = not stealing. Brahmacya = sexual continence. Aparigraha = not coveting wealth or pleasures which are not absolutely necessary).

ii) Niyama. While Yama is a negative discipline, Niyama is a positive one. It requires the positive practice of virtuous courses. Niyama includes five things:—Sauca (cleanliness), Santosha (contentment), Tapas (penance and austerities), Svādhyāya (study of the Vedas and incantations or mantras) and Iṣvarapraṇidhāna (prayer and meditating on God). Sauca means not only cleanliness of the body, but also of the mind. The mind must be purged of all 'malas' like kāma, krodha and lobha. Tapas means ability to endure adversities (dvandvas) like heat and cold or joy and sorrow. Svādhyāya is "study of philosophical works." Iṣvarapraṇidhāna—dedicating all actions unto God.

iii) Āsana. The way of sitting or posture. Different postures have been prescribed for different actions. First of all, the yogi must choose a suitable place. (The place must be level, neat, free from stones, fire or gravel, agreeable to the mind and not causing irritation to the eyes). (Śvetāsvatara).

Different āsanas like Padmāsana, Svastikāsana and Siddhāsana have been prescribed for the practice of Yoga.

Putting the left leg on the right thigh and the right leg on the left thigh, holding the right toe with the left hand and the left toe with the right hand, place the chin on the chest and look at the tip of the nose. This is Padmāsana.

Sitting upright with the feet tucked under the hips is Svastikāsana.

Placing the left leg under the genitals, put the right leg on it. Insert the chin into the pit of the throat; control the senses; with steady eyes look at the point between the eye-brows. This is Siddhāsana which will break open the doors to Mokṣa.

iv) Prāṇāyāma. This is regulation of breathing. Inhale air through the left nostril, retain the air in the lungs for a few minutes and then exhale it through the right nostril. The process may be reversed—that is inhalation through the right nostril and exhalation through the left. This is the first step in Prāṇāyāma. Exhaling the breath and then not inhaling for some time is called recaka; the opposite process is called pūraka. The object of prāṇāyāma is to awaken Kṣaṇālīni.

v) Prāṭyāhāra. This is a process of withdrawing the five senses from the outer world. A man who practises Pratāḥāra becomes oblivious of the outer world. This helps the concentration of the mind on the Ātman.

vi) Dharāṇā. Withdrawing the mind from outer objects and concentrating it on the self.

vii) Dhyāna. Meditation, concentrating the mind on several places like Bhrūmadihya and nābhićakra. Repeating the sacred syllable OM is very useful in dhyāna. viii) Samâdhi. In Samâdhi the soul and mind unite, the mind merging into the soul. Samâdhi is defined thus:

When the mind and soul unite just as salt and water unite, that state is called Samâdhi.

YOGAMÂYÂDEVÎ. The form of Devî in the state of Yoga. It was Yogamâmâyâdevî who transferred the seventh child of Devâkî (Balabhâdrrâma) from her womb to that of Rohini. (Devî Bhâgavata 4th, Skanda).

YOGAVÂTI. Third daughter of Menâ. She was the wife of the sage Jagisâyava. (Padma Purâna, Srîti Khaṅda).

YOGIS VARA (S). A community of famous yogins. Kâvi, Hari, Antariksa, Prabuddha, Pippalâyana, Avîrhotra, Drumila, Camasa and Karabhjotana belonged to this community. They were the sons of the sage Râbha and used to go about naked, everywhere. This community of yogins participated in the yajîna of Nimi, King of Mithilâ and gave him advice on Bhâgavata-dharma. (Bhâgavata, 4th Skanda).

YONIDVÂRA. A sacred place on the Udaya mountain. (Mahâbhârata, Vana Parva, Chapter 84, Verse 95).

YONITRIRTHA. A sacred place in North India. A bath in this place will make a person handsome and he will get the reward of a gift of 1000 cows. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 82, Verse 84).

YOTIMATSAKA (POTIMATSAKA). A King in ancient India. There is a passage in Mahâbhârata, Udyoga Parva, Chapter 4, Verse 20, which mentions that the Pândavas had sent an invitation to this King to take part in the war.

YUDDHÂ (WAR). (i) In ancient times in India war was considered a "Râjadharmâ". A war declared under this law was known as "Dharmayuddha".
(ii) It is forbidden to use a weapon describing it falsely as another weapon. The use of arrows heated in fire, is also against Dharmayuddha.
(iii) It is also against the rules of Dharmayuddha to kill a person who gets down from the chariot, a eunuch, one with joined palms, one who squats on the ground, one who seeks refuge, one who is asleep, one who is naked, an unarmed person, one who has come to witness the fight, one who is fighting with another, one whose weapon is broken, one who is bereaved by the death of a son or other relative, one who is vanquished, one who flees from battle, and one who refuses to attack in return etc.
(iv) If a warrior fleeing from battlefield is killed by his enemy, he carries with him his master's sins.
(v) All the grace earned by the young man who flees from battle, passes to his master.
(vi) The soldier himself may take all booty in the battle except chariots, horses, elephants, umbrellas, wealth, corn, cows, women, weapons, silver and gold.
(vii) All costly articles, seized in battle, such as gold, silver, jewels etc. are to be handed over to the King, according to the Vedas. (Manusmrti, Chapter 7).

YUDHÂJIT I. A Kekaya King. This Yudhâjit was the brother of Kâlekeyi, Daśaratha's wife, and the uncle of Bharata. Daśaratha's death took place at the time when Bharata was living in Kekaya country, at the invitation of Yudhâjit. (Vâlmiki Râmâyana, Bâla Kâṅda, 73rd Sarga).

YUDHÂJIT II. A King of Avanti. Lîlâvatî, the daughter of Yudhâjit was married by Sudaršana of the Ikṣvâku dynasty. In course of time their relations became hostile and they separated. At last Yudhâjit exiled Sudaršana from his country and crowned his own brother, Sriârujit as King of Ayodhyâ. (See under Dhruvasandhi).

YUDHÂJITA. A Yâdava King. In Padma Purâna, Sriṅgîkâṅda and in Matsya Purâña, it is stated that Yudhâjita was the son of Ananîtra by Pîthvi.

YUDHÂMANYU. A warrior who fought against the Kauravas from the side of the Pândavas. The following references are made to him in the Mahâbhârata.
(i) Yudhâmanyu was a prince of the Pâñcâla royal family. (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 17, Verse 5).
(ii) He took his position in the battle as the bodyguard of Arjuna. (M.B. Bhîśma Parva, Chapter 15, Verse 19).
(iii) Yudhâmanyu's war-horse was a wonderful animal, both in spirit and shape. (M.B. Drona Parva, Chapter 23, Verse 3).
(iv) In Bharata Yuddha he fought against Kâravarmâ, Duryodhana, Krpâcarya, Citrasena the brother of Karna, and Aśvatthâmâ. Krpâcarya defeated him. He (Yudhâmanyu) killed Karna's brother Citrasena. (Drona Parva, Chapters 92, 130; Karna Parva, Chapters 61, 83).
(v) Yudhâmanyu met with his death in his fight against Aśvatthâmâ. (M.B. Saupitka Parva, Chapter 8, Verse 38).

YUDHÂSTHIRA. See under Dharmaputra.

YUGA. See under Manvantara.

YUGANDHARA I (YUGANDHARAS). In the Purânas there are references to a mountain called Yugandhara. The inhabitants of that place were known as Yugandharas. In Mahâbhârata, Vana Parva, Chapter 129, Verse 9, there is a statement that these people used to drink the milk of camels and donkeys.

YUGANDHARA II. A warrior who fought against the Kauravas from the Pândava party. He attacked Dronâcarya in the battle and was killed by him in the end. (M.B. Drona Parva, Chapter 16, Verse 30).

YUGAPA. A Deva Gandharva. Mahâbhârata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 122, Verse 56, mentions that he participated in Arjuna's birth festival.

YUKTÂSAVA. A sage who was a Sâmavedin. There is a story about this sage in Pañcâvînîs Brahmaḥ:—

Yuktâsava who was a scholar in Vedas and Sàstras once abducted two new-born babies and killed them. As a result of that sin, he lost all his Vedic knowledge. To recover his lost learning, he started an austere tapas. After many years of tapas, he got back the whole of his Vedic knowledge.

YUPÂKSA I. A military commander of Râvana. In the battle between Śri Râma and Râvana, he was killed by Hanumâna. (Vâlmiki Râmâyana, Sundara Kâṅda, 46:32).

YUPÂKSA II. A Râkṣasa. In the battle between Śri Râma and Râvana, this Râkṣasa was killed by the monkey Malinda. (Vâlmiki Râmâyana, Yuddha Kâṅda 76:34).

YUTAJIT. A son of King Bhoja of the Yaduvânsa. King Bhoja had six sons, who were—Nirmitri, Kîrkana, Vrûcî, Sahasrarajit, Śatakijit and Yutajit. (Bhâgavata, 9th Skanda).

YUVANÂSVÂ I. A King of the Ikṣvâku dynasty.

1) Genealogy. From Viśnu were descended in the following order:—Brahmâ-Marci-Kàśyapa - Vivasvan-Vaivasvata Manu-Iksvaku-Vikushi-Sasada-Kakutshtha (Purana)-Anena-Parthulasa-Prasenajit-Yuvanasva. This Yuvanasva was the father of Mandhata.

2) Other details.
   (i) Yuvanasva performed many Yagas. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 126, Verse 5).
   (ii) Once he drank water which had been subjected to special mantras (incantations) and as a result he became pregnant. Mandhata was born by cutting open his belly. (For more details see under Mandhata).
   (iii) Yuvanasva once received a wonderful sword from King Raivata. He presented that sword to King Raghu. (M.B. Santi Parva, Chapter 166, Verse 78).
   (iv) In Mahabharata, Anushasana Parva, Chapter 115, Verse 61, it is stated that he had received “Paravarattva” (ability to know the highest and the lowest) because he had renounced meat-eating.

YUVANASVA II. Another Yuvanasva was the grandson of Visvagasya of the Iksvaku dynasty and the son of Adi. This Yuvanasva was the father of King Srava. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 202, Verse 3).

YUVANASVA III. Mahabhara, Santi Parva, Chapter 234, Verse 15, refers to another Yuvanasva who was the son of Vrsadarbha. He attained Heaven by offering gifts of jewels, women and dwelling houses.

YUVANASVA IV. A King of the Iksvaku dynasty who was the grandson of Mandhata. There is reference to him in the Rgveda. (Rgveda, 10; 134).

YUYUDHANA. Another name for Satiyaki. For further details, see under Satiyaki.

YUYUTSU I.
1) General. Son of Dhrtarastra by a Vaiśya woman. He is not included in the 100 sons of Dhrtarastra. Yuyutsu is referred to by another name, “Karana” in Mahabharata, Adi Parva, Chapter 68, Verse 113.

2) Other details.
   (i) It was Yuyutsu who disclosed to the Pandavas that once Durjoydhanave gave poisoned food to Bhimasena. (M.B. Adi Parva, Chapter 128, Verse 37).
   (ii) Yuyutsu was present at the Svayamvara of Draupadi. (M.B. Adi Parva, Chapter 185, Verse 2).
   (iii) In Dhrtarastra Yuddha, Yuyutsu joined the Pandava party. (M.B. Bhishma Parva, Chapter 43, Verse 100).
   (iv) He was an eminent warrior and an honest and mighty hero. Many Kings attacked him in the city Varanavata. He was not able to fulfil his desire to kill all of them. (M.B. Droona Parva, Chapter 10, Verse 58).
   (v) In Dhurtarashtra Yuddha he fought with Subahu and cut off his hands. (Droona Parva, Chapter 25, Verse 13).
   (vi) The bullocks tied to Yuyutsu’s chariot were killed by Bhagadatta’s elephant. (M.B. Droona Parva, Chapter 26, Verse 56).
   (vii) Yuyutsu severely rebuked the Kauravas who rejoiced over the death of Bhagadatta. (M.B. Droona Parva, Chapter 72, Verse 60).
   (viii) Yuyutsu was defeated in his fight with Uluka. (M.B. Karna Parva, Chapter 25, Verse 11).
   (ix) As advised by Sri Krishna and Dharmaputra, Yuyutsu went to Hastinapura with the ladies of the royal family. (M.B. Salya Parva, Chapter 29, Verse 86).
   (x) On his return after the battle, Yuyutsu described the details of the battle to Vidura. (M.B. Salya Parva, Chapter 29, Verse 21).
   (xi) At the suggestion of Dharmaputra, Yuyutsu began to attend on Dhrtarastra to serve him. (M.B. Santi Parva, Chapter 41, Verse 17).
   (xii) Yuyutsu was guarding Hastinapura when the Pandavas went to the Himalayas to get money from Marutta. (Aṣvamedha Parva, Chapter 63, Verse 24).
   (xiii) Under the leadership of Yuyutsu, the Pandavas offered Jalajali (offering libations of water) to Dhrtarastra. (Aṣramavasika Parva, Chapter 39, Verse 12).
   (xiv) When the Pandavas departed on their Mahaprasthana after handing over the reign of the country to Parikṣit, it was Yuyutsu who was entrusted with the task of supervising Parikṣit and the country. (M.B. Mahaprasthana Parva Chapter 1, Verse 6).
   (xv) In Mahabharata the following names are given for Yuyutsu:—Dhṛtarāṣṭra, Dhartrarāṣṭra, Dhṛtarāṣṭraputra, Karna, Kauravya, Kaurava and Vaiśyāputra.

YUYUTSU II. There is a reference to another Yuyutsu who was the son of Dhṛtarāṣṭra by his wife Gandhari in Mahabharata, Santi Parva, Chapter 67, Verse 93.
